Gavialis (gā'vi-ā'is), n. [NL. (Oppel, 1811): see gavial.] The genus of crocodiles of which the gavial, Gavialis gangeticus, is the type. The snout is very long, cylindric, and knobbed at the end, where the nostrils open. The lateral teeth are oblique, and the feet are webbed. The genus dates back in geologic time to the Upper Cretaceous.

gavot, gavotte (ga-vot'), n. [F. garotte, fem., < Garot, an inhabitant of Gap, a town in the department of Hautes-Alpes, France, where the dance originated, or of the Alpine departments in general.] 1. A dance of French origin, somewhat resembling the minuet, remarkable for its combination of vivacity and dignity. It was introduced in the latter half of the seventeenth century, but was seldom performed after the middle of the eighteenth.

2. Music for such a dance, or in its rhythm, which is duple and quick. Gavots are frequent in old-fashioned suites, and have recently come again into favor.

The little French hobo caller opposite . . . might be heard in his apartment of nights playing treacherous old gavottes and minuets on a wheezy old fiddle.

Thackeray, Vanity Fair, xxxviii.

Scott, Old Mortality, vii.

gay (gā), n. [Origin obscure.] A small rut in a path. [Prov. Eng.]

gayal, gyl (gā'āl), n. [East Indian name.]

A kind of East Indian ox long since domesticated from the wild stock of the gaur, and recognized by some naturalists as a different species called Bibos frontalis. It has a moderate hump, no dewlap, but wrinkled skin on the neck, a short tail, and comparatively slender horns. The color is brownish, with white "stockings" on all the legs. It crosses with the common Indian bull. Much confusion has arisen from misunderstanding of the relation of the gaur and gayal, these names being often interchanged. Gayals are simply the domesticated descent of gaur, now owned by various Indian tribes from Assam to Arakan along the eastern frontier of the Indian peninsula, and are never found in the wild state. Little use is made of them, however, and they spend the day in the jungle, returning to their owners in the villages at night.

Mr. Schuler observed that . . . the fact that the gaur was nowhere found in the wild state was quite new to him.

Proc. Zool. Soc. London, 1883, p. 141.

gaybescent, a. Gay-looking; in brave or gallant dress.

Now lykewyse what sale you to courtiers?

These minion gaybescent gentlemen.

A name of several showy twining plants of the genus Ipomoea.

gaydiang (gā'dyang), n. [Native name.] A vessel of Annam, generally rigged with two masts, but in fine weather with three, carrying lofty triangular sails. It has a curved deck, and in construction somewhat resembles a Chinese junk. These vessels carry heavy cargoes between Cambodia and the Gulf of Tonquin.

gayety, n. See gayety.

gay-feather (gā'fē-thēr), n. The button snake-root, Liatris spicata.

gaylard, a. A variant of galliard. Chaucer.

gaylet, gayleri, n. Middle English forms of jail, jailer.

gaylies, gallies (gā'liz; Sc. pron. gā'liz), adv. [See also gaylies, var. (with adv. suffix -s) of gaily, 3.] Pretty well; fairly.

"How do the people of the country treat you?" "Ow! gaylies; particularly that we are Scotch."

Scott, Paris Revisted in 1816, p. 228.

Gaylussacia (gā-lu-sā'si-ā), n. [NL., named after Gay-Lussac, a distinguished French chemist and physicist (1778-1850).] A genus of ericaceous shrubs of eastern North and South America, of about 40 species, differing from Vaccinium chiefly in the 10-celled and 10-seeded berry. The foliage is commonly glandular, in the South American species evergreen, in those of the United States for the most part deciduous. The fruit of the northern species is edible, and usually known as the huckleberry, distinguished as the common or black huckleberry (G. resinosa), the blue huckleberry or bluetangle (G. frondosa), and the more insipid dwarf huckleberry (G. dumosa), bear-huckleberry (G. urens), and box huckleberry (G. brachyocarpa). See huckleberry and Vaccinium.

Gay-Lussac's law. See law.

gaylussite (gā-lu-sit), n. [Named after the French chemist Gay-Lussac; see Gaylussacia.] A mineral occurring in monoclinic crystals, and consisting of the carbonate of calcium and sodium, in nearly equal quantities, with water. It is found in Peru, and is also abundant in a saline lake near Rughtown in Nevada.

gayly, adv. See gaily.

gayness (gā'ness), n. [< ME. gaynesse; < gay + -ness.] The state or quality of being gay, in any sense; gaiety; fluency.

Oh, ye English ladies learn rather . . . to make your Queen rich for your defence, than your husbands poor for your gaudy gayness.

Aylmer, in Ruyne, xlii.

Tell the Constable

We are but warriors for the working day;

Our gayness and our grief are all besmired;

Shak., Hen. V., IV, 2.

gaysome (gā'sum), a. [< gay + -some.] Full of gaiety; gladsome. [Rare.]

And fierd with heat of gaysome youth did venter

With warlike troops the Norman coast to enter.

Geodephaga (jō-a-def'a-gā), n. pl. [NL., orig. improp. Geodephaga (MacLeay, 1825), < Gr. γῆ, the earth, + NL. Adphaga, q. v.] The terrestrial adephagous or raptorial beetles, including the great families Carabidae and Cicindelidae; distinguished from Hydradephaga.

geodephagous (jō-a-def'a-gus), a. [< Geodephaga + -ous.] Terrestrial and predaceous; specifically applied to the Geodephaga.

geal¹ (jēl), v. t. [< OF. geler, F. geler = Pr. geler = Sp. kelar = Pg. gelar = It. gelare, < L. gelare, freeze; see gelid, congeal.] To congeal. [Obsolete or provincial.]

It turns little grains or seeds within it, which cleave to its sides, then grow hard, and geal, as it were.
Parthenaea Sacra (1822), p. 190.

We found the duke my father gealde in blood.
G. Tourneur, Revenge's Tragedy, sig. 1, l.

geal² (jō'al), a. [< Gr. γαῖα, γῆ, the earth, + E. -al.] 1. Of or pertaining to the earth; terrestrial.—2. Produced by the attraction of the earth. [Rare in both uses.]

The geal tide on the moon will be about eighty times higher than the lunar tide on the earth, in consequence of the earth's superior mass. Winchell, World Life, p. 364.

gean (jēn), n. [An E. spelling of F. guigne, OF. guine, a kind of cherry, = Wall. guine = NGr. guion, wild cherry, prob. of Slavic origin, < OBulg. visnja = Lith. visnja, eggrot; or, with alteration of the second syllable, = It. visiola, eggrot, < OHG. visula, MHG. visel, G. vischel, eggrot, wild cherry, of the same origin as the Slav. Lith. word.] The wild cherry of Europe, Prunus (Cerasus) avium. Its wood is valuable for many purposes, and is much used for tobacco pipes and their stems. The small purple or black fruit is esteemed for its pleasant flavor, and is largely used for making cordials. The tree is common in some parts of Great Britain, but more abundant on the continent.

geanticlinal (jō-an-ti-klī'nal), n. [< Gr. γῆ, the earth, + E. anticlinal.] In geol., a region having an anticlinal structure; the central mass of a mountain range, considered as built up according to the views of those who adopt the theory that the axes of the great chains are metamorphosed sedimentary, and not eruptive, rocks. See geosynclinal.

And therefore, while the tertiary movements were in progress, the part of the force not expended in producing them carried forward an upward bend, or geanticlinal of the vast Rocky Mountain region as a whole.
J. D. Dana, Mammals of Geology (2d. ed.), p. 752.

In all cases there have been three steps in the formation of a mountain chain. First, the deposition of the vast thickness of the geosynclinal. Second, the squeezing up of the mass of rocks into a geanticlinal, and the production of a long, narrow, and lofty ridge. Thirdly, the carving out of this shapeless mass into peaks and valleys.

gear (gēr), n. [Early mod. E. also geer; < ME. gere, gef (never with initial palatal, g or y, as in the related fare, yare, mod. E. fare, the orig. y being preserved by the frequent alliteration with gay, good, golden, graith, etc., or, as in the related verb garen, garren, mod. E. gar2, by Scand. influence), < AS. gearuw, pl., preparation, dress, ornament, gear, = OHG. garaci, MHG. garce (< OF. garbe, > E. garb, q. v.) = Icel. garri, garri, gar, < AS. gearu, gearo (gearuw), ready, yare; see yare.] 1. A state of preparation or fitness; a suitable or fitting condition; as, to be out of gear; to bring anything into gear.—2. Whatever is prepared for use or wear; manufactured stuff or material; hence, habit; dress; ornaments; armor.

Our ladsch late lee in his bedde
Gawayn gearthly at home in geer ful ryche of hewe.
Sir Gawayn and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 1470.

The frammas make themselves in their foreheads, ears, and throats, with a kind of yellow gears which they glide; every morning they do it. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 475.

It behoved not him to wear such fine gear.
Letimer, Misc. Selections.

In the dark forest here,
Glad in my warlike gear,
Fell I upon my spear.
Longfellow, Skeleton in Armor.

3. Any special set of things forming essential parts or appurtenances, or utilized for or connected with some special act, occupation, etc.; as, hunting-gear. Specifically (a) The harness or furniture of working animals, whatever is used in equipping horses or cattle for draft or other use, tackle. There were discovered first two doves, then two swans with silver geers, drawing forth a triumphant chariot.
B. Jonson, Hue and Cry.

Thenceforth they are his cattle, drudges, born
To bear his burthens, drawing in his geers.
Cooper, Task, v. 273.

(b) Naut. the ropes, blocks, etc., belonging to any particular sail or spar; as, the mainmast geers; the foretopmast geers.
I told him I should be glad if his men would cross the top-gallant and royal yards and get the geers rove.
W. C. Russell, Sailor's Sweetheart, xv.

(c) In mach., the appliances or furnishings connected with the acting parts of any piece of mechanism, as, expansion geers; valve geers. More particularly (1) toothed wheels collectively. (2) The connection of toothed wheels with each other, gearing, as, to throw machinery into out of gear. (3) A set of wheels or tools. (Fig. 1) of Internal motion, starting and tails for shipping coal on wharves.
4. Goods; property in general. [Now most common in Scotch use.]

I want none of his gowd. I want none of his gear.
Prince Robert (Child's Ballads, III. 25).

The gear that is gifted, it never
Will last like the gear that is won.
J. Randle, Wood and Martin and A.

5. The diameter of an imaginary wheel whose circumference is equal to the distance traversed by a safety bicycle during a single revolution of the pedals; as, a 72-inch gear. [Colloq.]—

6. A matter; an affair; affairs collectively.

To cheer his guests whom he had stayd that night,
And make their welcome to them well appeare,
That to Sir Calidore was casle gear.
Spenser, F. Q., VI. vi. 4.

But I will remedy this gear ere long Or sell my title for a glorious gown.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., l. 1.

I trust you all, my dearly beloved, will consider this gear with yourself, and in the gear of God's mercy.
J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1854), II. 37.

7. Ordinary manner; behavior; custom; practice.

Into a studie he fel all gearely.
As don the lovers in here, mynde gearely.
Now in the croppes, now in the in the gear.
Chaucer, Knights Tale, l. 673.

Bairns' part of gear, in Scotch use, same as fiction.
Differential gear. See differential. Driving-gear, those parts of a machine which are most nearly concerned in effecting motion, as, in a locomotive, the parts from the cylinder to the wheels inclusive. Full backward gear, with the valve gear adjusted to produce backward motion of the steam engine. Full forward gear, with the valve gear adjusted to produce forward motion of the engine. — Quids and gear, all one's property. [Scotch.]

Inside-gear, the English arrangement of pistons and cranks inside the frame of a locomotive, as distinguished from the American method of attaching the cross heads of the engine to the wrists on the exterior of the driving wheels by pistons. Internal gear, a wheel having its cogs on the internal periphery. Out of gear, not in working or running order, not in a condition for use or operation.

It is one of the North's theory and practice of liberty had got sadly out of gear, and must be corrected.
Emerson, Address, Soldiers' Monument, Concord.
Then aware Lord Thomas Howard, "For God I am in gear!"
But I cannot meet them here, for my ships are out of gear.
Templeton, The Revenge.

Overhead gear, driving-gear above the object driven.
Rope driving-gear, rope used as a substitute for belting in the transmission of power from a driver to machinery. Running-gear, the running rigging of a vessel. (For other kinds of gear, see gear, gear, counter-gear, etc.)

gear (gēr), v. [< gear, n.] I. trans. To put into gear; prepare for operation; fit with gear or gearing; as, to gear up a wagon; to gear a machine or an engine. Geared brace, engine, etc. See the nouns.

II. intrans. In mach., to fit into another part, as one part of gearing into another. See gearing.
On the shaft of the motor gear a pulley. This gear with a larger cog wheel. See Ames, N. S., LVII. 20.

gear-box (gēr'boke), n. A box inclosing gearing to protect it.
The effect of the same amount of resistance on each wheel will become unequally operative in the gear box, and that defeats the whole object of the contrivance.
Bury and Miller, Cycling, p. 26.

gear-cutter (gēr'kut'er), n. One who or that which makes toothed or geared wheels for transmitting motion in machinery; specifically, a machine for cutting the teeth of a geared wheel. Gear-cutters are frequently grinding machines, an emery-wheel being used to cut away the superfluous material between the cogs or teeth, the shape of the emery-wheel determining the shape of the interstitial space, and consequently determining the shape of the teeth. Milling-cutters are also much used. Gear-cutting machines usually have the shape of a lathe, the blank being supported on the mandrel, and the cutting wheel by the tool-rest. The number and pitch of the teeth are regulated by a graduated disk attached to the mandrel, and the cutter is driven by various systems of gearing. Large machines have been made to work as planers, and arranged for every variety of angle and level gearing. Wood-working gear-cutters are rotary cutters (molders), and are used to cut wooden patterns for casting geared wheels. Gear-cutters are also made to cut wheels of epicycloidal form. A gear-cutting attachment is also used with some milling machines. See odontograph.

gearing (gēr'ing), n. [Verbal n. of gear, v.]

1. Gear; dress; harness.—2. In mach., the parts collectively by which motion communicated to one part of a machine is transmitted to another; specifically, a train of toothed wheels for transmitting motion. There are two chief sorts of toothed gearing, namely, spur gearing and bevel gearing. In the former the teeth are arranged round either the concave or the convex surface of a cylindrical wheel in the direction of radii from the center of the wheel, and are of equal depth throughout. In bevel gearing the teeth are placed upon the exterior periphery of a conical wheel in a direction converging to the apex of the cone, and the depth of the teeth gradually diminishes from the base. See bevel, and cut under bevel-gear.
Angular gearing. See angular. Beveled gearing. See bevel. Conical gearing, a gearing arrangement in which the motion is transmitted by a pair of cogged cones through interposed pinions. Elliptical gearing, geared wheels of an elliptical shape used to obtain a rotary motion of variable speed, also called elliptical wheel. Hooked gearing, a form of gearing having the teeth set somewhat obliquely across the face of the wheel, so that the contact of each tooth begins at its forward end and ceases at the opposite end. The spiral has such a pitch that one pair of teeth remains in contact until the next pair comes together. Hook's gearing (named for Robert Hook, an English mathematician and philosopher (1635-1703)), a kind of gearing for wheels, in which the teeth are cut in a helicoidal form. Multiplying gearing, in mach., a combination of cog wheels in common use for imparting motion from wheels of large to those of smaller diameter, so as to increase the rate of revolution.

Quick-return gearing, in some forms of planing machines, a system of mechanism fitted to the feed for causing the bed to return at increased speed after each cutting stroke. The stroke is slow, and the return to the first position is accelerated in order to save time. Spiral gearing, two cylindrical cogs (parallel) and having spiral ribs and grooves that mesh or gear together. Stepped gearing, a form of gearing in which each tooth or cog on the face of a wheel is replaced by a series of smaller teeth arranged in steps. The device is allied to the stepped cog, and is used to obtain a more uniform and continuous gearing between the teeth. Worm gearing. Same as spiral gearing.

gearing-chain (gēr'ing-chēn), n. In mach., an endless chain transmitting motion from one toothed wheel to another, the teeth of the wheels fitting into the links of the chain.

gearing-wheel (gēr'ing-hwel), n. Same as gear-wheel.

Frictional gearing wheels. See frictional.

gearkutite (jē-ār'ku-tīt), n. [< Gr. γῆ, earth, + arkutite.] A hydrous fluoride of aluminum and calcium found in white earthy masses with the cryolite of Greenland.

gearnt, v. t. An obsolete form of girn.

gear-wheel (gēr'hwel), n. Any wheel having teeth or cogs which act upon the teeth of another wheel to impart or transmit motion.—Annular gear wheel. See annular. Double gear-wheel, a wheel having two sets of cogs, differing in diameter, to drive two pinions—such a wheel sometimes is driven by one pinion and drives the other.

geason, a. [Early mod. E., also geason, geison, < ME. geason, geason, geysoun, rare, gease, < AS. geare, geare, geare, barren, empty, lacking; cf. OFries. gest, gast, North Fries. gest, < Icel. gest, gast, barren (see geast); < OHG. geant, geant, lack.] Rare; uncommon.

Obstinacy is folly in them that should have reason.
They that will not know how to amerce, that will be very geason. Butler, Lock (l. 1, 4, 8), p. 85.

Ye shall finde many other word to rime with him, because such termination are not geason.
Pottendun, Art of Eng. Poetrie, p. 87.

It was frosty winter geason.
And fair flower geason with geason.
Green, Phyllis, a second tide.

This white geason geason and geason.
This bird geason to a night.
Lyonesse of Lambeth, l. 10.

Geaster (jē-as'tēr), n. [NL., < Gr. γῆ, the earth, + aster, star.] A genus of postmiticous fungi characterized by a double peridium. The outer, the exoperidium, is a thin, papery, and expanded to a wide, flattened, or oblong position and take the form of a star, being close to the ground, whence the name, geaster (earth star, geaster and exoperidium). There are several known species of which 30 occur in Europe and 12 in North America, some being common to both.

geat (jēt), n. [Also written git, perhaps for jet, < jet, throw, cast; see jet.] If pronounced, as is usually represented, with g = j, it cannot be a form of gate, or of the D. gat, a gate, hole, etc.] 1. The hole through which metal runs into a mold in castings.—2. In type-founding, the little spout or gutter made in the brim of a casting-ladle. Moxon, Mech. Exercises, p. 378.

geat², n. An obsolete spelling of *jet*².

Gebia (jē-'bi-jī), n. [NL. (Leach, 1813), < Gr. γῆ, earth, + βίω, life.] A genus of macrurous decapod crustaceans, of the family Thalassinidae. G. stellata, the type, is a small British shrimp.
gebur (AS. pron. ge-bōr'), n. [AS.; see *bower*⁸ and neighbor.] In Anglo-Saxon law, the owner of an allotment or yard-land, usually of 30 acres: corresponding to the villein of later times.

gecarcinian (jē-kār-sin'-i-an), n. [NL. Gecarcinus + -ian.] A land-crab; one of the Gecarcinidae.

gecarcinid (jē-kār-sin'-id), n. A land-crab, as a member of the Gecarcinidae.

Gecarcinidae (jē-kār-sin'-i-dē), n. pl. [NL. < Gecarcinus + -idae.] A family of terrestrial brachyurous decapod crustaceans, inhabiting various tropical regions; the land-crabs. Besides Gecarcinus, the family contains the genera Cardisoma and Uca. Also written Gecarcinidae.

Gecarcinus (jē-kār-sin'-us), n. [NL. (Leach, 1815), < Gr. γῆ, the earth, + καρκίνος, a crab.] The typical genus of land-crabs of the family Gecarcinidae. The species, of which G. variegata is an example, are terrestrial, and burrow in the ground, living at a distance from the sea, which they visit only at the spawning time. The gills are kept moist by a special arrangement of the gill-cavity. Also written Gecarcinus.

Gecco (gek'-o), n. [NL. (Laurenti, 1768), also Gekko, Gekko; < gekko, q. v.] 1. The name-giving genus of Gecconidae, now broken up into numerous other genera; the geckos, or wall-lizards. Also called Ancylotus. See Gecconidae, gekko.—2. [I. c.] Same as gekko, 1.

Gecconidae (ge-kōi'-dē), n. pl. [NL., also Gekconidae; < Gecco + -idae.] A family of saurian squamate reptiles, composed of the geckos, skellions, and agamoid lizards. Oppel, 1811.

geconid (gek'-o-nid), n. A lizard of the family Gecconidae. Also gekconid.

Gecconidae (ge-kōi'-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Geccon (n.) + -idae.] A family of lizards, of the order Lacertilia; the geckos or wall-lizards. They have amplexuous vertebrae, distinct parietal bones, no postorbital or frontosquamosal arches, dilated clavicles loop shaped proximally, a short, thick, fleshy, papillose tongue, large eyes with vertical elliptical pupils and rudimentary eyelids, and pleurodont dentition. The body is covered below with small lubricated scales; the tail is normally long and tapering, and the limbs are stout and of moderate length, with well-developed toes and claws, usually furnished with adhesive disks, secreting an acid though not poisonous fluid. Upward of 200 species inhabit the warmer parts of both hemispheres; many were formerly placed indiscriminately in a genus Gecco or Gekko, but about 50 genera have been named, among which are Diplodactylus, Hemidactylus, Phyllodactylus, Platydictylus, Ptychocheilus, Sphaerodactylus, Stenodactylus, Therodactylus, Phyllotria, and Ptychocheilus. They are all inoffensive lizards of small size, from 2 or 3 to 12 or 14 inches long, of active carnivorous habits, and especially noted for the agility with which they scramble over walls, etc. Many of them make a croaking or chirping noise, whence the name gekko. A few are found in the south of Europe, as the common wall lizard, Platydictylus muralis, the tarant, P. mauritanicus, and the Hemidactylus verruculatus and Stenodactylus guttatus. A common species of the Arabian region is the chickadee, Ptychocheilus gekko. One small gekko, Sphaerodactylus notatus, occurs in Florida and Cuba. Two Lower Californian species are Phyllodactylus zanti and Diplodactylus uexatus. The Gecconidae have also been called Ancylotus and Nectonura. The name of the family is variously written Gekconidae, Gekconidae, Gekconidae, Gekconidae. See, out under gekko.

geconoid (gek'-ō-noid), a. and n. I. a. Resembling or related to the geckos; of or pertaining to the Gecconidae.

II. n. One of the Gecconidae.
 Also geconoid.

Gecconidae (gek'-ō-nōi'-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Geccon (n.) + -idae.] The geckos as a superfamily of eriglossate lacertilians with biconcave vertebrae, dilated and proximally loop-shaped clavicles, and undeveloped postfrontal and postorbital bony arches. The group is contemporaneous with the single family Gecconidae. T. Gill, Smithsonian Report, 1885, I, 799. Also Gecconidae.

gecottian, gecottid (ge-kō-'shian, gek'-ō-tid), a. and n. I. a. Of or relating to the Gecconidae.

II. n. A gekko.
 Also gecottian, gecottid.

Gecotidae (ge-kōt'-i-dē), n. pl. Same as Gecconidae.

gecotoid (gek'-ō-toid), a. and n. Same as geconoid.

Gecininae (jes-i-ni'-nē), n. pl. [NL., < Gecinus + -inae.] A subfamily of Picidae, of which the genus Gecinus is a typical representative; the green woodpeckers. Other leading genera are Campethera, Celeus, Chrysomitris, Brachypterus, and Tiga.

Gecinulus (jē-sin'-ū-lus), n. [NL. (E. Blyth, 1845), < Gecinus + dim. -ulus.] A genus of green woodpeckers of India, having only three toes. G. granti and G. viridis compose the genus. A form Gecinulus is also found.

Gecinus (jē-sin'-us), n. [NL. (Boie, 1831), said to be < Gr. γῆ, earth, ground, + κινεω, move, go.] The typical genus of woodpeckers of the subfamily Gecininae. The best known example is G. viridis, the common green woodpecker of poplary of Europe, a species comparatively terrestrial in habit.

geck (gek), n. [D. gek = MLG. geck = MHG. geck, gecke, G. geck, a fool, = Dan. gæk = Sw. gäck, a fool, buffoon, jester, wag; cf. Icel. gækkr, a pert, rude person. Connection with gawk, gouk, is doubtful: see gawk, gouk, and cf. gig.] 1. A fool; a dupe; a gull.
 Kept in a dark house, visited by the priest,
 And made the most notorious geck and gull
 That e'er invention play'd on. Shak., T. N., v. 1.

2. Scorn; contempt; also, an object of scorn.
 To become the geck and scorn
 Of the other's villainy. Shak., Cymbeline, v. 4.

3. A toss of the head in derision or from vanity or folly; hence, a taunt; a gibe. [Scotch.]
 The carle that hecht as well to telt you,
 I think sail got ane geck. Philos., 1608.

To give one the geck. (a) To give one the alip. Jamieson (b) To play one a trick.

Thocht he be auld, my joy, what reek?
 When he is gone, give him ane geck,
 And take another by the neck. Quoted in Nares.

[Obsolete or prov. Eng. or Scotch.]
geck (gek), v. [= D. gecken = MLG. G. gecken = Dan. gække = Sw. gäcka, mock, banter, make a fool of; from the noun.] I. intrans. To toss the head in derision or scorn, or from vanity or folly; deride; mock.
 She bauldly looed, bauldly that drives the car,
 But gecked at me, and says I smell of tar. Ramsay, Gentle Shepherd, l. 1.

II. trans. To cheat; trick; gull.
 Ye shall heir whow he was geckit
 Legend of St. Andrew. (Jamieson)

gecko (gek'-o), n. [Imitative of the animal's cry.] 1. A lizard of the genus Gecco or family Gecconidae; a wall-lizard. Also gecco, gekko. See Gecconidae.

—2. [cap.] [NL.] Same as Gecconidae. Croaking gekko. Same as croaking lizard (which see, under lizard).—Flying gekko. See flying gekko.—St. Lucas gekko, Diplodactylus, St. Lucas gekko, so called after Cape St. Lucas, Lower California, in the vicinity of which it is found. Xantus gekko, Phyllodactylus zanti, of Lower California; named from Louis John Xantus de Veery, who first collected specimens of it. (See also wall-gekko.)

Gecconidae, geckonid, etc. See Gecconidae, etc.

ged (ged), n. [Icel. gráda = Sw. gådda = Dan. gæde, a pike (fish); so named from its sharp thin head; < Icel. gaddr, a gad, goad, spike; see gad. Cf. E. pike, AS. hacod, a pike (see hake and hook), F. brochet, a pike (< broche, a spit), etc.] A pike (the fish). Also written gudd. [Scotch.]

gedanite (jed'-a-nit'), n. [G. Gedannum, Latin name of Dantisc, + -ite.] A mineral resin resembling amber, found on the shores of the Baltic.

gedd, n. See ged.

gedrite (jed'-rit'), n. [G. Gedre (see def.) + -ite.] An aluminous variety of the mineral anthophyllite, found near Gedre in the French Pyrenees.

gee¹, jee¹ (jē), v. i. [Of unknown origin.] To agree; suit; fit. [Colloq.]

People say in Pennsylvania, "That won't gee," when they wish to express that something won't serve the purpose.

S. S. Holdenman, quoted in S. De Vere's Americanisms, p. 473.

gee³, jee³ (jē), v. [Origin unknown.] The verb has been erroneously referred to F. dir, "the cry wherewith carters make their horses turn to the left hand" (Cotgrave), in Switzerland to the right; cf. Olt. gio, similarly used.] I. intrans. 1. To move to one side; in particular, to move or turn to the off side, or from the driver—that is, to the right, the driver standing on the left or right side: used by teamsters, chiefly in the imperative, addressed to the animals they are driving: often with off.—2. To move; stir. [Scotch.]—To gee up, to move faster; also used by teamsters as above. See def. 1.

II. trans. 1. To cause to move or turn to the off side, or from the driver: as, to gee a team of oxen.—2. To move: as, ye're na able to gee it. [Scotch.]

gee⁴ (gē), n. [Origin unknown.] 1. Stubbornness; pettishness.—2. An affront. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

gee⁵ (gē), v. [= Sc. gie, a contr. of give.] A dialectal form of *give*¹.

gee-ho (jē'hō), v. i. [G. gee + ho, a quasi-imperative or exclamation: see *gee*².] Same as *gee*².

gee-hot, n. [G. gee-ho, v.] A kind of heavy sled. See the extract.

They drew all their heavy goods here [to Bristol] on sleds or sledges, which they call Gee-hots, without wheels.

DeJes, Four through Great Britain, II, 314.

Plly close at inn upon the coming in of waggon and gee-ho-coaches. Tom Brown, Works, II, 202.

geert, n. and v. See gear.

geeringt, n. See gearing.

geese, n. Plural of goose.

geest (gēst), n. [LG. and G. geest (geestland) = East and North Fries. geest, (OFries. geest (geestland, geestland), dry and barren land, = D. geest, heath, = MLG. gēst, gast, < OFries. gēst, gēst, North Fries. geest = LG. gēst, gōst, gast, barren; cf. AS. gāst, barren, empty: see geason.] 1. In northern Germany, high, dry, and sandy or gravelly land: opposed to marshland. Hence —2. In various older geological treatises published in England and the United States, diluvium, coarse drift, or gravel.

Geéz, Giz (gē-oz', gōz), n. [Ethiopic.] The ancient language of Ethiopia or Abyssinia, a Semitic tongue closely related to Arabic. It is the language of the church and of the old literature of Abyssinia, chiefly ecclesiastical, including an early translation of the Bible; and it is still spoken in a more or less corrupted form by the people of the province of Tigre, its original seat, though elsewhere and in official use it has been for many centuries superseded by the Amharic. Also called Ethiopic.

R. N. Cuel, Mod. Langs. of Africa, I, 74.

Gehenna (gē-hen'-ā), n. [I. L. Gehenna, < Gr. Γέεννα, < Heb. gē-hinnōm, the valley of Hinnom.] 1. In Jewish hist., the valley of Hinnom, south of Jerusalem, in which was Tophet, where the Israelites once sacrificed their children to Moloch (2 Ki. xxiii. 10). Hence the place was afterward regarded as a place of abomination; into it was thrown the refuse of the city, and, according to some authorities, fires were kept burning in it to prevent pestilence.

The pleasant valley of Hinnom, Tophet thence
 And black Gehenna call'd, the type of hell.

Milton, P. L., I, 605.

2. In the Bible, the place of the future punishment of the wicked: a transliteration of the Greek word γέεννα, which the authorized version translates hell and hell-fire, and the revised version hell of fire and hell.

The deceiver was a self-manifestation of Christ and his work to the whole spirit-world, and affected the condition of both the pious in Paradise and the ungodly in Gehenna. Schaff, Christ and Christianity, p. 92.

Adding to this the fact that gehenna of itself was not called a prison, but something far worse, a place of fire, we are further helped on to the conclusion that Christ preaching to "spirits in prison" did not preach to the impenitent dead. Bibliotheca Sacra, XLV, 426.

gehlenite (gē-len'-it), n. [Named after the German chemist A. F. Gehlen (1775-1815).] A mineral of a grayish color and resinous luster, found chiefly at Mount Monzoni in Tyrol. It is a silicate of aluminum, iron, and calcium, crystallizing in tetragonal crystals, related in form to the scapolite.

Gehydrophila (jē-hi-drof'-i-lē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. γῆ, the earth, + ὕδωρ (hōdōr), water, + φιλία, loving.] A group of inoperculate salmoniferous gastropods, corresponding to the family Auriculidae. Férussac, 1819. Also called Hydrophila.

Gekko (Geco verticillatus)

gelder-tree (g'el-er-trē), n. The Cordia Sebestena, a small boraginaceous tree of the West Indies and of rare occurrence in southern Florida, with heavy, hard, dark-brown wood.

gelline (gāl'fē-ne), n. [Ir., also geilline, the first family or tribe, < geall, pledge, + fine, family, tribe.] One of the groups of five, being four males besides the head of the family, into which the ancient Irish clans or families were organized. The next group, second in rank for purposes of inheritance was termed the derbhine, or true family; the third, the torfine, or after-family; the fourth, the indfine, or end-family.

The Gelline division consisted of five persons.

Quoted in Maine, Early Hist. of Institutions, p. 200.

gein (jē'in), n. [Gr. γῆ, the earth, + *-in*2.] Humus (which see).

geiret, n. [C. G. geier, a vulture. See under gerfalcon and garefowl.] A vulture.

A vulture or geiret.

Withale, Dict. (ed. 1888), p. 20.

geir-eagle, n. A bird of prey, supposed to be a vulture, Neophron percnopterus.

The swan and the pelican, and the geir eagle. Lev. xl. 18.

geir-falcon, n. See gerfalcon.

Geisenheimer (gē'sen-hi-mēr), n. [G.] A white Rhine wine produced near the well-known Hochheim vineyards, and similar in quality to Hochheimer.

Geissler's tubes. See tube.

Geissosaura (gē-so-sā'rā), n. [NL., prop. Geissosaura, < Gr. γῆσσαυ, γῆσσαυ, caves, cornice, hem, border, + σαύρα, lizard.] A superfamily group of ordinary lizards. They have a lacertiform or serpent like body; the feet very small rudimentary, or wanting; the ventral scales rounded and imbricate; and the tongue short, blind, and little extensible. They are feeble and harmless animals such as the common skinks, the slow-worms, etc. The group is not well formed, and the term is little used now. Also written Geissosauria.

geissosauran (gē-so-sā'rān), a. and n. I. a. Pertaining to the Geissosaura.

II. n. One of the Geissosaura.

Geissospermum (gē-so-sper'mum), n. [NL., < Gr. γῆσσαυ, γῆσσαυ, caves, cornice, hem, border, + σπέρμα, seed.] A genus of apocynaceous trees, of two species, found in tropical South America. G. leri, known in Brazil as Pau-pereira, has intensely bitter bark, which is used as a tonic and febrifuge.

geitonogamy (gē-tō-nog'a-mi), n. [< Gr. γῆτρον, a neighbor, + γάμος, marriage.] In bot., the fecundation of a pistil by pollen from another flower of the same plant.

geizen, r. i. Same as gizen.

Gekko, gekko, n. See Gecco, gekko.

Gekkonidae, n. pl. See Gecconidae.

gelable (jēl'a-bē), a. [< L. gelare, freeze (see geal), + -bilis.] Capable of being congealed, or of being converted into jelly. [Rare.]

gelada (gēl'a-dā), n. [Native name.] I. An Abyssinian baboon, Cynocephalus or Cercopithecus or Theropithecus gelada, or Gelada ruppelli.

Gelada Theropithecus gelada.

It is upward of 2 feet long, with a large mane, small facial callosities, and naked face. It is of a dark-brown color, blackening on the shoulders and paling on the under parts, and has a pair of triangular naked spots on the throat.

2. [cop.] [NL.] A generic name of this animal; synonymous with Theropithecus.

Gelaman era. See era.

Gelasian (jē-lā'si-an), a. [< Gelamus (see def.) + -ian.] Of or pertaining to Gelasius, who was pope A. D. 492-5, and who composed and arranged certain prayers in the Roman liturgy. Copies of what is known as the Gelasian Sacramentary exist in manuscripts of the eighth, ninth, and tenth centuries, and contain the oldest extant texts of the Roman mass. The earlier part of the mass is not given in it. See Gregorian and Roman.

Gelasinus (jē-las'i-nus), n. [NL., < Gr. γελᾶσκω, laughable, < γελᾶν, laugh.] A genus of short-tailed 10-footed crustaceans, of the family Oeypodidae; the fiddlers, fiddler-crabs, or calling-crabs; so called from their habit of flourishing the odd great claw. The technical characters are: lack of posterior pleurobranchial and of anterior arthrobranchial, and the two pairs of pleurobranchia.

Fiddler-crab (Gelasinus pagurus) vestigial. There are several species. G. pugnator abounds in the salt marshes of the southern United States, where it is found in great troops and holes, combs the ground just above high-water mark with innumerable burrows. See calling-crab.

gelastic (jē-las'tik), a. and n. [< Gr. γελᾶσκω, inclined to laugh, risible, < γελᾶν, laughable, ridiculous, < γελᾶν, laugh.] I. a. Same as risible. [Rare.]

II. n. Something capable of exciting smiles or laughter. [Rare.]

Happy man would be his dōle who, when he had made up his mind in dismal resolution to a decided course of drastic, should find that gelastics had been substituted not of the Sardinian kind.

Southey, The Doctor, extra chapter

gelatinogen (jēl-a-tij'e-nus), n. [< gelatin + -ogen, producing, < gelatin.] Producing or yielding gelatin. Gelatinogenous tissue, animal tissue which yields gelatin in boiling water, as the various forms of connective tissue.

gelatin, gelatine (jēl'a-tin), n. and a. [= D. G. gelatine = Dan. Sw. gelatin, < F. gelatine = Sp. lg. It. gelatina, < NL. gelatina, < L. gelatus, pp. of gelare, freeze; see geal, geal, jelly.] I. n. A concrete animal substance, transparent, hard, and tasteless, which swells without solution in cold water, dissolves in warm water and in acetic acid, and is insoluble in alcohol or ether. Gelatin does not exist as such in the animal tissues, but is formed by the action of boiling water on connective tissues, cartilage, ligaments, and tendons, as well as on skin, horn, fish-scales, etc. The concrete form of gelatin from hoofs, hides, etc., is called gelatin, that from skin and finer membranes is called gelatin, and the purest gelatin, from the air bladders, etc., other membranes of fish, is called gelatin. Its essential character is the formation of a tremulous jelly when its solution in boiling water cools. A yellowish-white precipitate is thrown down from a solution of gelatin by tannin, which forms an elastic adhesive mass. Tannin has the same action also on the tissues from which gelatin is made, and this action of tannin is the foundation of the art of tanning leather. Gelatin is nearly related to the proteids. It is regarded as a nutritious food, and much used in preparing soups, jellies, etc.; but animals fed exclusively on it die with the symptoms of starvation. No chemical formula has yet been deduced for gelatin. It contains about 18.3 per cent. of nitrogen, 0.6 per cent. of sulphur, 56 of carbon, 7 of hydrogen, and 23 of oxygen. (See coll.) In all the arts allied to photography, gelatin forms the basis of a great variety of processes. It is at present the most valuable for holding the sensitive salts of silver on dry plates, and for holding the sensitive bichromate of potash in all the photo printing and photo engraving processes. See emulsion, carbon process (under carbon), photolithography, lithotype, and photography. Gelatin is also used to form the copying pad in a variety of copying processes. See heliograph. Chromatized gelatin. See chromatize.

Explosive gelatin, a very powerful explosive compound made by dissolving gun cotton in nitroglycerin heated gently in a water bath. A small amount of gum camphor may be added to diminish its sensitivity. For military purposes it has been made of 90 per cent. of nitroglycerin and 10 per cent. of soluble nitrocellulose of gun cotton. To make the camphorated compound 50 per cent. of the above mixture and 4 per cent. of camphor is used. This preparation forms a gelatinous elastic translucent pale yellow mass (specific gravity 1.1) of about the consistency of a very stiff jelly, which can be easily cut with a knife. (C. E. Munroe) Also called gun dynamite. Gelatin culture. See culture. Gelatin of Wharton, or jelly of Wharton, a kind of mucoid connective tissue which constitutes most of the bulk of the mammalian cord. Gelatin process, any photographic process in which gelatin enters as a basis of structure. Gelatin sugar. Same as albumin. Vegetable gelatin, a name for the constituents of gluten, identical or nearly so with animal gelatin. Also called glutinous and glutina.

II. a. Like gelatin; gelatinous.

Gemara (ge-mā'ra), n. [Chal., complement, completion.] A body of rabbinical comments and opinions on the Mishnah, and with its forming the Talmud, or, according to many Jewish writers, itself constituting the Talmud.

The Gemara exists in two forms or recensions, receiving name from the regions in which they were compiled, viz., the Jerusalem or Palestinian and the Babylonian, the former having been completed about the middle of the fourth and the latter about the end of the sixth century. See Mishnah and Talmud.

Gemarie (ge-mar'ik), a. [Gemara + -ic.] Pertaining to the Gemara.

gematria (je-má'trí-á), n. [Heb.] a transliteration of Gr. gematria, gemetry.] A cabalistic system of Hebrew Biblical interpretation, consisting in the substitution for a word of any other the numerical values of whose letters gave the same sum.

It must be observed that the supposed antiquity of gematria depends solely on a conjectural comment on Zechariah xli. 10. There is no clear instance of gematria before Christian writers were strongly under Platonic influence, e. g., Rev. xiii. 18, Barnabas ix. 9.

gemetry, n. An obsolete (Middle English) form of gemetry.

gem-cutting (je-m'kut-ing), n. The art of cutting and polishing precious stones.

gemel (je-mel'), n. [Also gemmel (and gimmel, gimbal, q. v.), < ME. gemel, < OF. gemel, later gemelu (> ME. gmel, gemel, gymel, gymmer, gymow, later gemmer, gemmow, etc.), F. jumeau = Sp. jumeo = Fr. jumeo = It. gemello, twin, < L. gemellus, dim. of geminus, twin; see geminat, Gemini.] 1. A twin.—2. Same as gimbal.

For under it a cave, whose entrance straight Gleed with a stone wrought dense of no income weight;
Yet from its life the gemel breathes so That little strength could thrust it to and fro
H. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, ll. 3.

3. In her., one of a pair of bars. See bars-gemel.
Two gemels, silver, between two griffins passant.
Strype, Life of Smith, i, note a.

[Obsolete or archaic.]

Gemellaria (je-mel-lá'ri-á), n. [NL. < L. gemellus, twin, + -aria.] The typical genus of the family Gemellariidae, having the cells arranged in pairs, back to back, whence the name. G. lorica is a large species common in shallow water on the New England coast.

geminately (je-mi-nat'-li), adv. In pairs; doubly; as, in entomology, geminately spotted or lined.

geminat (je-mi-nat'-shen'), n. [= F. gemination = Sp. geminacion = It. geminazione, < L. geminatio(n), a doubling, < geminare, double; see geminate.] 1. A doubling; duplication; repetition.

If the will be in the sense and in the conscience both, there is a geminat of it. Bacon, Colours of Good and Evil, § 8.

Specifically—2. In rhét., immediate repetition of a word, generally with added emphasis; as, O Sordide, Sordide, flour, flour, flour, South.

[Repetition after one or two intervening words is also accounted geminat—as, action and action.]

Charge, Chester, charge! On, Stanley, on! Scott, Matrimon, vi, 32.

Also called diphasmus and epitaxis.—3. In philol., (a) The doubling of an originally single consonant through the influence of a following consonant or vowel, as in Anglo-Saxon sithu (originally sithu*), fen (originally fen*), Gothic fann, etc.; less properly used of mere orthographic doubling, as in hammer, matter, etc.

The historic orthography has been retained in words which are under conditions of geminat. Amer. Jour. Philol., ix, 255.

(b) A pair of letters so doubled. Trans. Amer. Philol. Ass., xvi, 163.

geminative (je-mi-nat'-iv), a. and n. [< geminate + -ive.] 1. a. Characterized by geminat.

II. n. A geminat or doubled letter. Trans. Amer. Philol. Ass., xvi, 161.

Gemini (je-mi-ni'), n. pl. [L. twins, in particular the Twins, a constellation, pl. of geminus, born at the same time, twin; doubly identified with the equi, Gr. didymos, usually didymos (see didymous), and related to a variant gem, gem of the gem of gemini, Gr. gemini, beget; see genus.] 1. A zodiacal constellation, giving its name to a sign of the zodiac.

The Constellation Gemini

lying east of Taurus, on the other side of the Milky Way. It represents the two youths Castor and Pollux, sitting side by side. In the heads of the twins respectively are situated the two bright stars which go by their names—Castor to the west, a greenish star intermediate between the first and second magnitudes, and Pollux to the east, a full yellow star of the first magnitude. The sun is in Gemini from about May 20th till about June 21st (the longest day). Symbol, II.

The Charioteer
And starry Gemini hang like glorious crowns
Over Orion's grave low down in the west.
Templeton, Maud, xviii, 1.

2 (je-mi-ni), according to the older E. pronunciation of Latin; also, corruptly, jin'i-ni. [Also written geminy, gemony, jining; in the phrase O Gemini, or simply Gemini, i. e., by the Twins, i. e., Castor and Pollux; in E. orig. as an imitation of classical use, to swear by Castor and Pollux being a favorite oath of the Romans.] A word used as a form of mild oath or interjection.

O gemini' neighbour, what a bliss is This, that we have amongst us Gemini!
Homer d la Mode (1665).

Mrs. Mal. You are sure, Lucy, that you never mentioned
"O Gemini"! I'd sooner cut my tongue out.
Sheridan, The Rivals, i, 2.

3. [Also spelled geminy, and sometimes used as a sing. noun.] A pair; specifically, a pair of eyes.

And that fond fool . . . that daily spies
Twin babies in his mistress Gemini's.
Quaker, Riddles, ll. 4.

Or else you had looked through the grate, like a geminy of baboons.
Shak, M. W. of W., ii, 2.

geminiflorous (je-mi-ni-fló'rus), a. [< L. geminus, twin, + flor (flor-i, flower).] Having flowers in pairs.

geminiformis (je-mi-ni-fór'mis), n.; pl. geminiformes (-miz). [NL. < L. geminus, twin, + forma, shape]. In anat., the lower one of the twin muscles of the coxal group; the gemellus inferior. Cuvier, 1887.

geminous (je-mi-nus), a. [< L. geminus, a., born at the same time, twin; see Gemini.] Double; occurring or conjoined in pairs; as, geminous spots, tubercles, spines, etc., in insects. [Rare except in technical use.]

And this the practice of Christians hath acknowledged, who have baptized those geminous births and double consistencies with several names.
St. T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iii, 15.

geminy (je-mi-ni'), n. See Gemini, 2 and 3.

Gemitores (je-mi-tó'rez), n. pl. [NL. < L. gemit, sigh, moan, make a mournful sound, con; see gem.] In Macgillivray's system of classification, the second order of birds, the crows or pigeons, coextensive with the modern order Columbar. [Not in use.]

gemitorial (je-mi-tó'ri-ál), a. Pertaining to the Gemitores.

gemma (je-má'), n.; pl. gemmae (-é). [L. a swelling bud, a gem; see gem.] 1. In bot. and zool., a bud; that which is budded; the result of geminat. Specifically, in bot. (a) A leaf-bud as distinguished from a flower-bud, the rudiment of a young branch. (b) A small undeveloped shoot, or analogous fleshy or lenticular body, which becomes detached from the mother plant and originates a new one, as in some mosses and liverworts, etc. In some fungi portions of the mycelium become detached and reproduce the plant in a similar manner.

2. [cap.] In conch., a genus of bivalve mollusks, of the family Venerula, containing a single small species, G. totum or G. gemma (originally Venus gemma), about one eighth of an inch long, yellowish or rosy-white tipped with amethystine, found on the Atlantic coast of the United States. The young are retained inside the valves of the parent till their shells are formed.

gemmaeous (je-má'shi-us), a. [< L. gemma, a bud, a gem, + E. accous.] Pertaining to leaf-buds; of the nature of or resembling leaf-buds.

gemmae, n. Plural of gemma.

gemman (je-mán'), n.; pl. gemman (-en). A vulgar abbreviation of gemman. [In the United States confined to negro use.]

At home and low street gemmen keep the laws.
Bacon, Essays, vi, 85.

Here the new word coined in "Mama, Balls of Locomo"
Will make it in no time quite fit for the Gemman!
Bachman, Ingoldsby Legends, ii, 125.

gemmary (je-má'ri), a. and n. [L. < ME. gemmarg, < L. gemmarius, pertaining to gems, < L. gemma, a gem; see gem.] II. n. < ME. gemmarg, a gem-engraver, < L. gemmarius, a gem-engraver, jeweler; in the second sense < L. as if "gemmarium" (or with E. suffix -ery), < gemmarius, adj.: see I.] I.† a. Pertaining to gems or jewels.

The principal and most gemmary affection is its translucency; as for iridescence, . . . which is found in many gems, it is not discoverable in this.

Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., II. 1.

II. n. 1.† A gem-engraver.

In the work of the graver, and in the graving of the gemmary.

2. A depository for gems; a jewel-house. In this sense also written gemmary.—3. The science or knowledge concerning gems. [Rare.]

In painting and gemmary Fortunato, like his country men, was a quack.

For. Tales, I. 346.

gemmate (jém'at), a. [L. gemmatus, provided with buds, set with gems, pp. of gemmare, put forth buds, set with gems, < gemma, a bud, a gem.] In bot., having buds; reproducing by buds.

Gemmati (je-ma'ti), n. pl. [NL.: see gemmate.] A Linnean group of Lepidoptera (Papilionidae).

gemmation (je-ma'shon), n. [= F. gemmation = Port. gemmação = It. gemmazione, < L. gemmatus, pp. of gemmare, put forth buds, set with gems: see gemmate.] 1. In bot., the act of budding; also, the manner in which a young leaf is folded up in the bud before its unfolding.—2. In zool., the process of reproduction by buds; the formation of a new individual by the protrusion and complete or partial separation of a part of the parent; budding. Gemmation, when complete, is a kind of fission, but the part budded is commonly small in comparison with the size of the parent.

Gemmation consists in the production of a bud or buds, usually from the outside, but sometimes from the inside, of an animal: which buds become developed into more or less completely independent beings. The fresh beings thus produced by budding are all known as zooids. . . . When the zooids produced by budding remain permanently attached to one another and to the parent organism which produced them, the case is said to be one of "continuous" gemmation, and the ultimate result of this is to produce a colony or composite structure, composed of a number of similar and partially independent beings, all produced by budding, and all remaining in organic connection.

H. A. Nicholson, Advanced Text Book of Zoology, IV.

Among creatures of higher grades, by fission or gemmation, parents bequeath parts of their bodies, more or less organized, to form offspring at the cost of their own individualities.

H. Spencer, Data of Ethics, § 75.

Also called gemmulation.

Basal or basilar gemmation, in corals, budding from a cenozoar which the base of the polyp gives forth, as in Alcyonaria, Acropora, etc. Calicular gemmation, in corals, budding from the calicular disk of the parent polyp, which may or may not continue to grow after the process.—Continuous gemmation. See first extract under def. 1.—Entogastric gemmation. See entogastric. Lateral or parietal gemmation, in corals, budding from the side of the parent polyp at some point between the base and the circle of tentacles.

Lateral or parietal gemmation generally gives rise to dendroid or arborescent corals, as in the genera Madrepora, Dendrophyllia, etc.

Etnye, Brit., VI. 373.

Marginal gemmation, in corals, a form of lateral gemmation in which the parietal buds are given off from the edge of the calice.

gemmelt, n. See gemel.

gemmeous (jém'ë-us), a. [L. gemmeus, pertaining to gems, < gemma, a gem: see gem.] Pertaining to gems; of the nature of or resembling gems; gem-like.

The blue is of an inexpressible splendor, the richest corallian glowing with gemmeous brilliancy.

Pennant, Brit. Zool., Gemmeous Dragonet.

gemmiferous (je-mif'ë-rus), a. [= F. gemmifère = Port. Il. gemmifero, < L. gemmifer, bearing or containing gems (or buds), < gemma, a bud, a gem, + ferre = E. bear.] Bearing a gemma; reproducing by buds; gemmiparous.

gemmiform (jém'i-fôrm), a. [L. gemma, bud, + forma, form.] Bud-like.

gemminess (jém'i-nos), n. The state or quality of being gemmy.

gemmipara, gemmiparæ (je-mip'a-rë, -rë), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. and fem. pl. respectively of gemmiparus, producing buds, or propagating by buds: see gemmiparous.] Gemmiparous animals; animals which propagate by buds, as the hydra or fresh-water polyp, etc.

gemmiparity (je-mi-par'i-ti), n. [L. gemmiparus + -ity.] The state or quality of being gemmiparous; the faculty of reproducing by gemmation, as in polyps. The buds may separate from the parent and become distinct animals, or remain attached to it. See gemmation.

gemmiparous (je-mip'a-rus), a. [L. gemmiparus, < L. gemma, a bud, a gem, + parere, produce.] 1. Producing buds or gems.—2. Producing young by a process of internal gemmation, without sexual intercourse, as the wingless forms of aphids; geneagenetic. See gemmation, geneagenesis.

Gemmipora (je-mip'ë-rë), n. [NL. (De Blainville), < L. gemma, a bud, + porus, a passage.] The typical genus of Gemmiporidae.

Gemmiporidae (jém-i-por'i-dë), n. pl. [NL., < Gemmipora + -idae.] A family of madreporian corals, typified by the genus Gemmipora. J. D. Dana, 1846.

gemmoid (jém'oid), a. [L. gemma, a gem, + Gr. eidos, form.] Having the nature or form of a gemma.

gemmosity (je-mos'i-ti), n. [L. gemmosus, set with gems (see gemmosus, + E. -ity.] The state of abounding with gems, or of having the character of a gem. [Curiously defined by Bailey, 1727, "abundance of pearls," but probably never used in any sense.]

gemmous (jém'us), a. [L. gemmosus, set with gems, < gemma, gem: see gem.] Same as gemmosus; specifically applied to a fish, the gemmous dragonet (so called from its being covered with spots like gems).

gemma (jém'ë-lë), n.; pl. gemmular (-lë). [NL., < L. gemmula, a little bud: see gemmule.] In bot., a gemmule, as of a sponge.

The winter gemma form spring sexual sporellae, which produce sexual forms in which arise the winter gemmae.

W. Marshall, quoted in Smithsonian Report, 1885, I. 706.

gemmulation (jém-ü-lä'shon), n. [= F. gemmulation; as gemma + -ation.] Same as gemmation.

gemmule (jém'ül), n. [= F. gemmule, < L. gemmula, a little bud, a little gem, dim. of L. gemma, a bud, a gem: see gem.] 1. In bot.: (a) A small bud or gemma. (b) The plumule. (c) An ovule.—2. In zool., a little bud; a small gemma. Specifically—(a) A gemminal mass of spores of some low animals, as sponges. (b) The inflated embryo of some coelenterates.

When a part of the parental body is detached in the shape of gemma, or egg, or fetus, the maternal sacrifice is conspicuous.

H. Spencer, Data of Ethics, § 75.

Reproduction takes place mainly asexually by fission and the production of gemmae or zooids, but also by the formation of ova and spermatozoa. The gemmae are in the fresh-water Spongia masses of cells which are surrounded by a firm shell composed of silicious structures (amphidules), and . . . pass through a long period . . . of inactivity.

Claus, Zoology (Trana.), I. 218.

gemmuliferous (jém-ü-lif'ë-rus), a. [L. gemmula, a little bud (see gemmule), + ferre = E. bear.] Bearing or producing gemmules, as a sponge or coelenterate.

gemmy (jém'i), a. [L. gemma + -y.] Bright with gems; full of gems; glittering.

Fam'd Oberon, with damask'd robe so gay.

And gemmy crown, by moonshine sparkling far.

A. Phillips, Pastorals, VI.

The gemmy bridle glitter'd free,
Like to some branch of stars we see Hung in the golden sky.

Tennyson, Lady of Shalott, III.

gemmy (jém'i), a. Same as gemmy.

gemonies (jém'ë-niz), n. pl. [L. gemoniar (with or without scalar, steps), < gemere, grown: see gemet. Cf. "The Bridge of Sighs."] A flight of steps on the Aventine hill in ancient Rome, to which the bodies of executed criminals were dragged by hooks to be thrown into the Tiber.

As to day.

* The fate of some of your servants! who declining
Their way, not able, for the throng, to follow Slept down the Gemonies, and broke their necks!

B. Jonson, Sejanus, v. 1.

No day passes

In which some are not fasten'd to the hook,
Or thrown down from the Gemonies.

Maestrovic, Roman Actor, I. 1.

gemot (AS. pron. ge-môt'), n. [Also written gemete, repr. AS. gemot, a meeting, an assembly, > ME. note, mod. E. moot: see moot, n., and meet.] A meeting; an assembly: occurring in modern English only as a historical term (particularly in Wilmagmot, which see) with reference to the Anglo-Saxon period.

Lady and I was crowned on Easter Day at Winchester, the usual place for an Easter Gemot.

E. A. Freeman, Norman Conquest, II. 8.

It won't appear: these judicial matters were transacted in the ordinary or-mote of the hundred and the shire.

Stubbs, Medieval and Modern Hist., p. 220.

gem-peg (jém'peg), n. In gem-cutting, an upright double-fluted rod of iron fixed on a lapidary's bench near the polishing-wheel, bearing on its upper part an inverted cone of wood pierced with numerous small holes or nicks, in one of which, according to the angle desired, the lapidary rests one end of the gem-stick, thus steadying it and giving it the proper inclination while the stone glued to the other end of the gem-stick is being polished on the lap or polishing-wheel. Also, corruptly, gem-peg, gem-peg.

The support . . . placed a little to the right and in advance of the lap is called a gem-peg.

O. Byrne, Artisan's Handbook, p. 308.

gem-ring (jém'ring), n. In her., a ring with a jewel set in it, used as a bearing.

gemsbok (jémz'bok), n. [= D. gemsbok (= G. gemsbok), the buck or male of the chamois (applied by the Dutch in South Africa to the Oryx capensis), < D. gems = G. gems, gemae, chamois (see chamois), + D. bok = G. bok = E. buck.] The South African oryx, Oryx capensis, a fine large antelope of the group Oryginae, especially abundant in the Kalahari desert and Damara-land. Like the other oryxes, it is of large size, with very long, slender, sharp, and nearly straight horns, sometimes over a yard in length, forming efficient weapons of defense. The general color is fawn or yellowish, whitening on the under parts, with conspicuous black and white markings on the head, legs, and flanks. The neck is maned and the tail tufted. The name is also given to some other oryxes resembling this species. Also called okavau.

gem-sculpture (jém'skulp'tür), n. Same as gem-engraving. [Rare.]

gemshorn (jémz'hörn), n. [G., < gems, chamois (see gemsbok), + horn = E. horn.] In organ-building, a stop having tapering metal pipes which yield tones of a pleasant horn-like quality, intermediate between those of the open and those of the stopped diapason.

gem-stick (jém'stik), n. Same as dop.²

gem-stone (jém'ston), n. [L. gemma + stone. Cf. equiv. AS. gimstan, ME. gimstan, gimston, ymston.] A precious stone; a gem.

The natural forms in which crystallized gem-stones occur are but rarely adapted for direct employment in objects of jewelry. S. K. Handbook, Precious Stones, p. 12.

gent, n. An obsolete variant of gin.⁴

Gen. An abbreviation of (a) Genesis; (b) General (as a title).

gen. An abbreviation of (a) general; (b) gentle.

-gen. [Also -geno; partly < L. -genus, -gena, '-born,' '-produced,' the form in compound adjectives or nouns of the verb gignere, genero, √'gen, bear, produce; partly < Gr. -γενε (stem γενε, γεν), in compound adjectives, 'of (such a) kind or nature,' '-born,' < γενε (= L. genus, stem gen-), kind, nature, < γενε, γενε, γενε, become, √'gen, bear, produce; see genus, general, generate.] A terminal element in words from or made after the Latin or Greek, meaning primarily 'produce,' and taken either passively, 'born,' 'produced,' as in arrogen, endogen, exogen, etc., that which is produced or grows at the top, from within, from without, etc., or actively, 'producing,' 'serving to produce,' as in hydrogen, oxygen, nitrogen, etc., that which produces or serves to produce water, acid, nitric acid, etc. The corresponding adjective is in -genic or -genous, and the abstract noun, if any, is in -geny.

gena (jé'nä), n.; pl. genæ (jé'në). [L., the cheek, = Gr. γέννη, the chin, jaw, = E. chin, q. v.] 1. In zool. and anat., the cheek: an indefinite region on the side of the head or face between the ear, eye, and nose. (a) The side of the human face. (b) In trilobites, one of the two parts into which the limb or lateral area of the cephalic shield is divided, the anterior being the fixed gena, the other the movable or separable gena. See cut under Trilobites. (c) In insects, a region of the side of the head, beneath the eye, with which the mandible may articulate, bounded by the epicranium and under side of the eye, the face, clypeus, labrum, labium, and base of mandible.

2. [cap.] [NL.] In conch., a genus of gastropod mollusks. J. E. Gray, 1840.

genal (jé'nal), a. [L. gena + -al.] Pertaining to the gena or cheek.—Genal angle, in trilobites, the posterior angle of the movable gena, terminating the cephalic shield behind. See cut under Trilobites.—Genal square, in tribbles, the great square dividing the food from the movable gear. See out under tribble.

genappe (je-nap'), n. [Genappe, in Belgium, where it was originally manufactured.] A worsted yarn which, because of its smoothness, can be conveniently combined with silk, and is thus well adapted for braids, fringes, etc.
gendarme (jen-därm' or, as F., zhon-därm'). n. [Also gendarme; < F. gendarme, sing., from pl. gens d'armes, men-at-arms; gens, pl., people, folks, persons, men, pl. of gent, a nation, people, tribe, race, < L. gen(-s), pl. gentes, a race, clan, people (see gens); de, of, at; armes, arms.] 1. Originally, in France, a man-at-arms; a knight or cavalier armed at all points and commanding a troop; afterward, a member of a company or corps of cavalry; a cavalryman; sometimes also used for soldier in general.
 We come not here, my lord, said they, with arms
 For to raise the clank of thy Gens d'armes.
T. Holton, tr. of Du Barlas's Judith, v. 138.

2. In France, since the Revolution, one of the corps of national police, a body organized, uniformed, and drilled like soldiers, and considered, in a sense, a privileged corps of the French army; also used for a policeman of a similar corps in some other European countries. See gendarmier, 2.

gendarmier, gendarmery (zhon-därm'mé-ré, jen-därm'mé-ré), n. [Formerly also gendarmier, gendarmery, gendarmour; < F. gendarmier, < gendarme, q. v.] 1. Formerly, in France, a body of cavalry, first organized under this name by Charles VII.; cavalry in general. The special corps of gendarmier of the army were suppressed in 1778, excepting the Scotch company, the most ancient.

Had the gendarmery of our great writers no other enemy to fight with?
Sp. Hackett, Abp. Williams, l. 102.
 Were . . . to have set on the gendarmour.
Sp. Burnet, Hist. Reformation, an. 1551.
 The gendarmery and bands of horsemen

The foreign mercenaries, the men at arms, or gendarmery.
R. W. Dixon, Hist. Church of Eng., xix.

2. The armed police of France, consisting of mounted and unmounted gendarmes, first organized in 1790 as a standing militia for the enforcement of law and the preservation of order. The gendarmier is recruited from picked men generally from the regular army, and is organized into legions, departmental companies, and local lieutenants, each of the last being divided into brigades of five or more men each. There are also special corps of maritime and colonial gendarmier, the former for service at ports and naval stations. Details of gendarmier accompany all armies in the field. The name is applied to similar organizations in some other countries. See gendarme, 2.

He [Emperor Nicholas] formed a body of well paid officers, called the gendarmier, who were scattered over the country, and ordered to report directly to his Majesty whatever seemed to them worthy of attention.
D. M. Wallace, Russia, p. 207.

gendarmory, n. See gendarmier.
gender (jen'dér), n. [ME. gendryr, gendre, < OF. gendra, genre, F. genre, kind, genus, style, = Pr. genre, genre = Sp. género = Pg. genero = It. genere, kind, < L. genus (abl. genere), race, stock, sort, kind; see genus, of which gender is a doublet.] It. Kind; sort; class; genus.

The other motive,
 Why to a public count I might not go
 Is the great love the gender of gender bear him.
Shak., Hamlet, iv. 7.

Our bodies are our gardens; to the which our wills are gardeners; so that if we will . . . apply it with one gender of herbs, or distract it with many . . . why, the power and corrigible authority of this lies in our wills.
Shak., Othello, i. 3.

Several sorts which they called gendres or species, according as they referred them, either upwards to a more comprehensive sort of bodies, or downwards to a narrower species.
Bogde, Origin of Forms

3. Sex, male or female. [Colloq. and humorous.]

"Her laying herself out to catch the admiration of vulgar men, in a way which made me blush for my - for my -" Gender, suggested Mr. Squares.
Dickens, Nicholas Nickleby, xlii

3. In gram., a formal distinction in words, apparently founded on and in part expressing differences of sexual character, as male and female, or as male, female, or of neither sex (neuter). In the languages of the Indo-European family the distinction originally is threefold, as masculine, feminine, and neuter (the first including principally male beings, the second female, and the third those of no sex), and appears in nouns, adjectives, and pronouns (except the personal pronouns), although among masculines and feminines are included (on grounds not yet made clear) many words designating things of no sex. In the Semitic languages the genders are only two, masculine and feminine, and the distinction is made also in the second and third persons of verbs. In the majority of languages distinction of gender is altogether wanting. In some tongues differences of sex are made the ground of formal distinctions also called by some by the same gender: thus, that of animate and inanimate objects in American languages; a manifold distinction (of obscure origin) in South African languages, and so on. Some languages, like the modern French, have lost the gender, and have masculine and feminine only; some, like English, have no gender except in a few pronouns, as he, she, it; some, like modern Persian, have no gender whatever.

Hadst thou no understandings for thy cases, and the number of the genders?
Shak., M. W. of W., iv. 1.

gender (jen'dér), v. [ME. gendren, < OF. gendrer, gender = Sp. generar (obs.) = Pg. gerar = It. generare, < L. generare, beget, < genus (gener-), kind, genus; see gender, n. Cf. generate, engender.] I. trans. 1. To beget; procreate; generate; engender.

For Christ Jesus I have gendered thou in the gospel.
W. Taylor, 1 Cor. iv. 15 (Obs.).

Hence—2. To give rise to; bring out or forth.

Whatever does gender strife, the apostle commands us to avoid.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1855), II. 123

 Gal. iv. 24.

genderer (jen'dér-ér), n. One who engenders.
genderless (jen'dér-less), a. [gender, n., + -less.] In gram., without gender; having no formal distinctions expressing differences of sex.

We should expect to find the parent Aryan genderless like the Finnic.
Jour. of Anthropol., XVII. 257.

genderlike (jen'dér-lik), a. Of the same gender or genus.

Note that in every proportionality, we properly call the 2 antecedents genderlike terms, for likeness in quality, which name also serves for the two consequents.
T. Hill, Arithmetic (1600), p. 207 gendrurer, n. 1. The act of begetting or procreating. E. D.

The shew of his stones of gendrurer ben folded together.
Wyclif, John i. 12

2. That which is engendered. E. D.

Gentile gendrurer to make. Robert of Brunne, p. 281.

-gene. [F. -gène, < L. -genus, -gena, or Gr. -γενε; see -gen.] A form of -gen in some words from or made after the French model, as in amphigene.

geneagenesis (jen'-é-á-jen'-sis), n. [N.L., < Gr. γενε, race, stock, generation, descent, + γενεσις, generation.] A kind of parthenogenesis resulting from internal gemination: a term used by Quatrefages.

geneagenetic (jen'-é-á-jen'-et-ik), a. [geneagenesis, after genetic.] Pertaining to genus; geminiparous, as an aphid.

geneal, a. and n. Same as genial.

genealogic, genealogical (jen'-é-á-loj'-ik, -i-kal), a. [F. genealogique = Sp. genealogico = Pg. It. genealogico, < N.L. genealogicus, < L.L. genealogia, genealogy; see genealogy.] 1. Pertaining to or of the nature of genealogy; relating to or exhibiting the succession of offspring from a progenitor.

He [Hondius] also engraved a genealogic chart of the Houses of York and Lancaster with the arms of the Knights of the Garter to the year 1594 drawn by Thomas Talbot.
Walpole, Anecdotes of Painting, III. 1.

An old Roman grafted on a modern Englishman produced the golden fruit of true patriotism, real personal greatness, and nobility unalloyed to a genealogic table.
V. Knox, Letter to a Young Nobleman, iv.

We may conclude . . . that between selection of the industrial type there will be differences of political organization consequent on genealogic differences.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 578.

2. According to or characterized by descent from a common ancestor: as, genealogical order.

In India, at this day the members of the genealogic clans are always careful to retain their position to their Epitaph.
W. L. Hearn, Aryan Household, p. 144.

Genealogical tree. (a) The genealogy or lineage of a family drawn out under the form of a tree, with its roots, stem, and branches.

Among the rest was the room in which James I. died, and a particula with a genealogic tree of the house of Cecil painted on the walls.
Gough, Topography, Theobalds

(b) In zool., a graphic representation of the supposed derivation by descent with modification of any group of animals from their ancestral or primitive stock, a phylum. Such trees or phylog, now in common use, are the same in idea and purpose as ordinary genealogical trees, with the names of the groups of animals supposed to have been successively evolved in place of the names of persons. See phylog.

genealogically (jen'-é-á-loj'-ikal-i), adv. In a genealogic manner; as regards genealogy.

genealogist (jen'-é-á-loj'-ist), n. [F. genealogiste = Sp. Pg. It. genealogista; as genealogy + -ist.] One who traces genealogies; a student of or writer upon genealogy.

They deny that historians or genealogists can point out the first mean man named Douglas.
Scott, Castle Dangerous, iv.

genealogize (jen'-é-á-loj'-iz), v. t.; pret. and pp. genealogized, ppr. genealogizing. [genealogy + -ize.] To investigate or treat of genealogy. Also spelled genealogise.

genealogy (jen'-é-á-loj'-i), n.; pl. genealogies (-jiz). [ME. genealogie = D. G. genealogie = Dan. Sw. genealogi, < OF. genealogie, F. genealogie = Pr. genealogia, genealogia = Sp. genealogia = Pg. It. genealogia, < L.L. genealogia, < Gr. γενεαλογία, the making of a pedigree, tracing of a family, < γενεα, one who makes a pedigree, a genealogist, < γενεα, a race, stock, generation, family, descent (allied to γενεα, a race, stock, family; see genus), + λογος, speak; see -ology.] 1. An account or history of the descent of a person or family from an ancestor; an enumeration of ancestors and their descendants in the natural order of succession.

The Apostle . . . had warned Timothy against giving heed to fables and endless genealogies; by genealogies meaning the derivation of angelic and spiritual natures, according to a fantastic system invented by the Oriental philosophers.
Sp. Hunt, Works, VI. viii.

2. In biol., a similar tracing of the lines of descent of animals or plants from ancestral forms. See evolution.—3. Pedigree; lineage; regular descent of a person or family from a progenitor.

They [heathen philosophers] do indeed describe the genealogies of their Heroes and subordinate Gods, but for the supreme Deity, he is constantly acknowledged to be without beginning of time, or end of days.
Sp. Watson, Natural Religion, l. 8.

The ancients ranged chaos into several regions, and in that order successively rising one from another, as if it were a pedigree or genealogy.
T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

I observe that you love ancestors and genealogy; it needs five or six generations of gentlemen or noblemen to give it its full vigour.
Sydney Smith, To Lady Holland.

4. Progeny; offspring; generation. [Rare.]

The family consisted of an old grey-headed man and his wife, with five or six sons and sons in law, and their several wives, and a joyous genealogy out of them.
Stevenson, Sentimental Journey.

Syn. 3. Lineage, etc. See pedigree.
genearch (jen'-é-árk), n. [Gr. γενεάρχης, γενεαρχία, a race, family, + ἀρχα, rule.] The chief of a family or tribe. [Obs.]

geneat (AS. pron. ge-ná't), n. [AS. genætt, a companion (in legal use with a technical sense imperfectly translated by 'vassal'); = OE. genat = D. genoot = OHG. genōz, G. genosse, a companion, lit. one who uses a thing with another; < AS. genōta, use, enjoy, = D. genieten = OHG. genozan, MHG. geniezen, G. geniessen, use, enjoy, = Goth. nutan, partake, etc.; see neat, note 2.] In Anglo-Saxon hist., a vassal; one holding land for service or rent.

The geneat must work on the land and off the land, as he is bidden, and ride and carry, lead land, and drive drove, and do many things beside.
 Quoted in J. R. Green's Conq. of Eng., p. 218.

geneat-land, n. In Anglo-Saxon hist., land in villeinage; gulf-land.

genéal, a. and n. See genial.
génépi (F. pron. zha-na-pé'), n. [F.] A sweet substance, of a rich green color, made from species of Artemisia (A. glacialis and A. mutelliana) which are found in the Alps.

genera, n. Plural of genus.

generability (jen'-é-rá-bil-i-ti), n. [generable; see -ility.] Capability of being generated.

The generability of the passions, the origin of ideas, and the generability of mind.
Johnstone, Madness, Pref.

generable (jen'-é-rá-bl), a. [F. generable = It. generabile, < L. generabilis, that may generate or be generated, < generare, generate; see generate.] 1. Capable of being begotten or generated; that may be produced by generation, in any sense of the word.

Which hath power of all thing generable
 To rule and store by their great influence Water and wind.
Henryson, Testament of Cresside, l. 146.

They [the poets] were the first observers of all natural causes & effects in the things generable and corruptible, and from thence mounted up to search after the celestial causes and influences.

Pattenham, Arte of Eng. Poetrie, p. 6.
 We speak here of the original life of the soul itself, that this is substantial, neither generable nor corruptible, but only creatable and annihilable by the Deity.
 Cudworth, Intellectual System, p. 622.

24. Genial; contributory to propagation. Nares.

Thou, queen of heav'n, commandress of the deep,
Lady of lakes, regent of woods and deer,
A lamp dispelling irksome night; the source Of generable moisture. Parvus Trava.

general (jen'e-rul), a. and n. [Early mod. E. also generall; < ME. generale, < OF. general, F. général = Pr. Sp. general = Pg. general, geral = It. generale = Sp. general = G. Dan. Sw. general (in comp.), general, common, < L. generalis, of or belonging to a kind, race, or genus, of or belonging to all, general, common, < genus (gener-), a kind, race, family, genus: see gender, n., and genus.] I. a. 1. Pertaining or applicable to or predicable of all objects of a given class, or all of a number of resembling individuals; universal within the limits of the class or group of things considered: as, a general law of nature; a statute general in its application; a general principle; a general idiom; the general interest or safety of a nation; to labor for the general good. In logic a name, as, for example, "cockatrice," is considered to be general even though there is no real individual to which it can be applied; and it may also be general though there is but one individual to which it is actually applied. On the other hand, a disjunctive expression, as "William Shakspeare, William Harvey, or Francis Bacon," though predicable of each individual of the group, is not considered to be general. See nominalism, realism, and conceptualism.

I drink to the general joy of the whole table
Shak., Much. II. 4.

When she defines, argues, divides, compounds, Considers virtue, vice, and general things
Sir J. Danvers, Some Telpaum.

The verdurous wall of Paradise up sprung,
Which to our general she gave prospect large
Into his nether empire neighbouring round
Milton, P. L., IV. 144.

If . . . ideas be abstract, . . . [our knowledge] will be general knowledge

Locke, Human Understanding, IV. IV. 12.

He appeals to all,
And by the general voice will stand or fall, Shadran, The Rivals, Prol.

Every man who has seen the world knows that nothing is so useless as a general maxim. Macaulay, Macbeth.

The homeward voyage and captivity of Richard had some effect on the general affairs of the world, his special visit to Ragusa affected only the local affairs of Ragusa.
E. I. Freeman, Venice, p. 222.

In observing human character, single feelings or actions interest us chiefly as criteria of general tendencies
J. Sully, Sensation and Intuition, p. 267.

The reproduction of ideas under the so-called laws of association is a general fact of consciousness.
G. T. Ladd, Physical Psychology, p. 534.

2. Pertaining or applicable to, or predicable or true of, many or most of a class indefinitely, but by implication not to every member of it without exception; common to the majority or an indefinite number, or to a large but indefinite extent; prevalent; usual; common; as, a general custom; to differ from the general opinion; hence, indefinite; vague; not precise;
as, to evade a point by general statements.
Specifically, in math., true except in certain limiting cases, when certain quantities vanish. Thus, it is true as a general proposition that three equations suffice to determine three unknown quantities; yet this is not the case if the resultant vanishes.

Their general weapons are the Russo bowen and arrows.
Capt. John Smith, True Travels, I. 43.

Until I woke, and found him settled down Upon the general decay of faith Right thro' the world. Emerson, The Epit-

Where the author speaks more strictly and particularly on any theme, it will explain the more loose and general expressions. Watts, Improvement of Mind.

Who shall tell when the sense of insecurity has become general enough to merit respect?
H. Spencer, Social Statics, I. 170.

The general rough and ready education of such a life.
W. Black.

3. Comprising or pertaining to the whole; collective; opposed to partial: as, a general settlement of accounts; a general departure of guests; a general involution (that is, one which subtends the whole inflorescence); also, pertaining to, predicable of, or occupied with a great variety of different objects having common characters.

And in the holly holly past holly y believe,
And general holy church also hold this in thy mynde, Præs Placeman's Creed (E. E. T. S.), I. 816.

We are come unto mount Zion, and . . . to the general assembly and church of the firstborn which are written in heaven
Heb. XII. 22.

Our general forces at Bridgenorth shall meet.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., II. 2.

There were the learned Isaac Vossius and Spanheim; son of the famous man of Heidelberg, nor was this general man less learned, being a general scholar Frederick, Diary, Oct. 31, 1676.

4. Pertaining to the main features of the object; regarded in the gross, with neglect of details and unimportant exceptions: as, his general attainments are excellent; a general survey.

Having gotten his general knowledge of the party against whom, as he had already of the party for whom, he was to fight. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, I.

The general end therefore of all the books is to fashion a gentleman or noble person in virtuous and gentle discipline. Spenser, To Raleigh, prefixed to F. Q.

Why, my lord of York commands the plot and the general course of the action. Shak., 1 Hen. IV., II. 3.

I have a very general acquaintance here in New England. Hawthorne, Old Manse, I. 91.

The general aspect was peaceful and contented.
O. W. Holmes, Old Vol. of Life, p. 26.

5. Having to do with all; public; common;
vulgar.

You will rather show our general louts
How you can frown. Shak., Cor., III. 2.

Are you crying it,
When I command you to be free, and general?
To all? H. Jonson, Catiline, I. 1.

She's general, she's free, she's liberal Of hand and purse, she's open unto all.
John Taylor, Works (1656).

The general practitioner is the advance guard of the army which fights against disease.
Saturday Rev. March, 1874, p. 303.

6. Not specifically limited in scope, operation, or function; not restricted to special details, particulars, or occasions; used of authority conferred, or of office or employment exercised: as, a general power of attorney; a general officer of the army; a general mechanic.
[General in this sense, in designations of rank or office taken or initiated from the French, usually follows, according to French idiom, the noun which it qualifies, and the two words are in English usually treated as a compound noun, as adjutant-general, attorney-general, etc.] General acceptance. See acceptance, 1 (C). General act. See act, 4. General agent, anatomy, anemia, Assembly, assignment, authority. See the nouns. General average. See average, 1 (c). General Baptists. See Baptist, 2. General case, center, color. See the nouns. General charge, in Scots law, a charge the use of which is to cause the heir either to represent his ancestor or to renounce the succession. A general special charge is a will passing the signet, the object of which is to supply the place of a general act, and to vest by a fiction of law those subjects which would have required a general service to have vested them in the heir. General conference. See conference, 2 (1).
General confession. See confession. General confutation, in logic, a confutation which does not name the fallacy committed, but either denies the consequence or distinguishes, or offers an independent argument to the contrary. General Convention. See convention, 3 (a).
General conversion, in logic, that mode of conversion commonly called simple, where the quantity of the proposition remains unchanged. General council (eccl'es.).
See council, 7. General council of the university. See council. General Court, credit, custom, delivery.
See the nouns. General Court of Trials, a session of the general court or legislative assembly of a New England colony held for the purpose of trying causes, in exercise of the judicial power which those assemblies possessed.

For theft a white man was tried in those old days at the General Court of Trials.
Johns Hopkins Univ. Studies, IV. 11.

General Deficiency Bill. See bill. General demurrer. See demurrer, 1. General deputy. See deputy,
3. General edict, equation, issue, jurisdiction, jurisprudence, law, legacy, lien, etc. See the nouns.
General mortgage-bonds. See bond, 1. General officer, order, etc. See the nouns. General postman, a carrier of letters in general except those sent from one point in the London district to another. [Eng.]

Like a general postman's coat. Puck, Pickwick, II.

General principle, one to which there are no exceptions within its range of application, or which is true of everything to which it is germane. General regulations.
See regulation, 7. General service, ship, statute, tail, term, warrant, warranty, etc. See the nouns. Heir general. See heir, 3. Common General. See common.

II. n. 1. That which is general or common to all of a given class or group; a general statement, principle, truth, etc.

For his answer to what I affirm, by that general which he bringeth, if I should grant all he saith, how short it were you may easily judge E. B. Lander, in Appendix to New England's Memorial,
p. 26.

In particular our knowledge begins, and so spreads itself by degrees to generals. Locke.

2. A genus or class embracing all objects having certain characters, and especially including species under it. Now only in the phrase in general (which see, below).

The chief general is so that where as it is in the head of all above it it can never become inferior to be of any kind or sort in thing . . . The middle general is the same sort being comprehended betwixt the chief general and the lowest kind or sort in things, may be also some kind or fourne it self.

Sir T. Wilson, Rule of Reason (1651).

All our abilities, gifts, natures, shapes,
Serals and generals of grace.
Shak., T. and C., I. 3.

A history painter paints man in general.
Sir J. Reynolds.

3. Milit., an officer holding a general command (whence the title); the commander of an army, or of any organization of troops larger than a regiment: as an official title, used either alone for the highest or next to the highest rank, or with an adjunct designating the particular grade. See lieutenant-general, major-general, and brigadier-general. In modern European armies the specific rank of general is usually the highest under that of marshal or field-marshal. In the United States the title, when used, is that of the acting commander-in-chief of the whole army (the President being the titular commander-in-chief). The rank has been held, under temporary laws, only by Generals Washington, Grant, and Sherman, and for a short time before his death in 1883 by General Sheridan, whose previous title as commander-in-chief was lieutenant general. In address and common speech any general officer is called general simply. Abbreviated Gen.

The senate has letters from the general, wherein he gives my son the whole name of the war. Shak., Cor., II. 1.

The war's old art each private soldier knows,
And with a general love of conquest glows.
Addison, The Campaign.

4. A particular beat of drum or march, being that which, in the morning, gives notice to infantry to be in readiness to march. — 5. Eccles., the chief of an order of monks or priests, or of all the houses or congregations established under the same rule: as, the general of the Dominicans, or of the Jesuits. In most orders the office is held for three years, but in that of the Jesuits it is held for life. The general, being subject to the immediate jurisdiction of the pope, is exempt from episcopal jurisdiction, but has the right to sit and vote with the bishops in a general council of the church.

6. The public; the community; the vulgar.

Although particular [partial], shall give a scantling
Of good or bad unto the general. Shak., T. and C., I. 3.

The play, I remember, pleased not the millitor; 'twas caviare to the general. Shak., Hamlet, II. 2.

General of division, a general commanding a division of an army in the field. Compare brigadier. — Great generals, the generals charged with the ownership of a fishing vessel, including wood, water, lights, knives, salt, bait, etc. (New England). In general. (a) As regards the generality or most, for the most part, with few exceptions, in the main, generally.

But I should think Mr. Puff, that authors would in general be able to do this sort of work for themselves Shadran, The Critic, I. 2.

In general, those who nothing have to say Contrive to spend the longest time in doing it.
Lowell, Oriental Apologue.

(b) Inclusive, without exception.

They deale his pleasure to obeye, Therby they came when in general.
Genevieve (E. E. T. S.), I. 1001.

Nest — our general doth salute you with a kiss,
'Twas yet the kindest but particular;
'Twere better she were kiss'd in general.
Shak., T. and C., IV. 6.

(c) In all things

Thou art a grave and noble counsellor,
Most wise in general. Shak., Pericles, v. 1.

(d) In math., in all cases except possibly in limiting cases or in case of some additional condition being fulfilled. — Small generals, the generals charged with the provisions of a fishing vessel, as the provisions, lines, hooks, etc. (New England).

general, adv. [< general, a.] Same as generally.

Such attribution should the Douglas have,
As not a soldier of this season's stamp Should go so general current through the world.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., IV. 1.

general (jen'e-rul), v. t.; pret. and pp. gener-al'd or general'd, pp. generating or general-ing. [< general, n.] To command as a general; marshal.

The God of battles was on their side; crime and the lost archangel general'd the ranks of Pharaoh.

Charlotte Bronte, Shirley, III.

generalate (jen'e-rul-ät), n. [< general + -ate.]
1. A district under the control or supervision of a general. [Rare.]

By the close of the 17th century there were three frontier generalates — Carlstadt, Warasdin, and Petrinia (the last also called the Banat) Encyc. Brit., XVI. 266.

2. The office of a general; a generalship.
[Rare.]

generale (jen'e-räl'e), n.; pl. generalia (jē-jē).
[L., neut. of generalis, general: see general, a.]
That which is general; hence, in the plural, general principles.

There is need of a set of intermediate scientific truths, derived from the higher generalities of science, and designed to serve as the generalia or first principles of the various arts
J. S. Mill, Logic, VI. xi. § 5.

generalless (jen'e-räl-es), n. [< general + -less.]
A female general or commander. [Rare.]

He hastily nominates or sanctions generallesses, captains of tens and fifties. Carlyle, French Rev., I. vii. 3.

generalia, n. Plural of generale.
generalisable, generalisation, etc. See generalizable, etc.

generalissimo (jen'g-ra-lis'i-mó), n. [It. (= Sp. generalísimo), < generalis, general + superl. -ísimo (= Sp. -ísimo), < L. genius.] A commander-in-chief; the supreme commander of all the forces of a country, of several armies, or of an army comprising several corps or divisions acting separately.

Pompey had deserved the name of Great; and Alexander with the same cognomination was generalissimo of Greece. Sir T. Browne.

generalistic (jen'g-ra-lis'tik), a. [< general, n., + -istic.] Of or pertaining to a general or to generalship. [Rare.]

In proof of my generalistic qualities, the rolling down of the water-jar upon the heads of the Maghilla pilgrims in the "Golden Throat" was quoted, and all offered to fight for me a lance. R. F. Burton, El Medinah, p. 272.

generality (jen'e-ral'i-ti), n.; pl. generalities (-tiz). [< F. gen'ralité = Fr. generalité = Sp. generalidad = Pg. generalidade = It. generalità, generality, = D. generalität = G. generalität, generality, body of generals, = Dan. Sw. generalitet, war-office, < L.L. generalitas (-s), < L. generalis, general; see general.] 1. The state or condition of being general, in any of the senses of that word.

It is noticeable that concepts on the same level of generality are framed with greater and greater facility. J. Sully, Outlines of Psychology, p. 384.

2. Something that is general, as a general statement or principle; especially, a saying of a general and vague nature.

New Comedy came in place, more civil and pleasant a great deal and not touching any man by name but in a certain generalistic glancing at every class. Patterson, Art of Eng. Poets, p. 78.

Let us descend from generalities to particulars. London.

The glittering and sounding generalities of natural right which make up the Declaration of Independence. R. Choate, quoted in Bartlett.

3. The main body; the bulk; the greatest part; specifically, the majority of people; the multitude; the commons.

If this action had not been thus crossed, the Generality of England had by this time been won, and encouraged therein. Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II, 261.

From whence it comes, that those tyrants who have the generality to friend and the great ones their enemies, are in the more safe. E. Butler, Macbeth on Duty, I, 40.

Excellent persons who delighted in being retired and abstracted from the pleasures that incline the generality of the world. Steele, Spectator, No. 261.

4. Formerly, in France, a territorial division for the collection of taxes; a taxing district.

generalizable (jen'e-ral-i-za-bl), a. [< generalize + -able.] Capable of being generalized, or brought under a general rule, or referred to a particular class or genus. Also spelled generalisable.

Extreme cases are, ipso nomine, not generalizable. Cederblad.

generalization (jen'e-ral-i-za'shon), n. [= F. généralisation = Sp. generalización, as generalizar + -ation.] 1. The act of generalizing; recognition of a character as being common to two or more objects; also, the process of forming a general notion.

Although, for example, we had to see that one rose, we might still have been able to define its colour, without thinking of its other properties. This has led some philosophers to suppose that another faculty besides abstraction, to which they have given the name of generalization, is necessary to account for the formation of genera and species. D. Stewart, Elements, IV, § 1.

2. Induction; an inference from the possession of a character by each individual or by some of the individuals of a class to its possession by all the individuals of that class; the observation that the known individuals of a species, or the known species of a genus, have a character in common, and the consequent attribution of that character to the whole class; also, a conclusion so reached.

In our inquiries into the nature of the inductive process, we must not confine our notice to such generalizations from experience as profess to be universally true. J. S. Mill, Logic, III, xiii, § 1.

When we have proved with respect to the circle that a straight line cannot meet it in more than two points, and when the same thing has been successfully proved of the ellipse, the parabola and the hyperbola, it may be laid down as a universal property of the sections of the cone. . . . It would be difficult to refuse to the proposition arrived at, the name of a generalization. . . . But there is not induction. J. S. Mill, Logic, III, ii, § 2.

I am not going to attempt a definition of the Anglo-Saxon element in English literature, for generalizations are apt to be as dangerous as they are tempting. Lowell, Study Widdows, p. 246.

3. In math., the process or result of modifying a proposition so as to obtain another having wider subject and predicate, but such that a limitation which, if applied to the new subject, gives the old subject, will reproduce the old predicate when applied to the new. For example, Fermat's theorem is that if p is any positive prime number and a any number not divisible by p , then the division of a^{p-1} by p leaves 1 as the remainder. A generalization of this is, that if k is any positive integer and a the number of numbers as small as k and prime to it, and a is any number relatively prime to k , then the division of a^k by k leaves 1 as the remainder. For when k is a prime number, $a^k \equiv a \pmod{k}$, and every number not divisible by k is prime to it. The language of mathematics differs from that of logic in that from every generalization of a proposition the proposition itself is immediately deducible, which is not true in the logician's sense of the word. The distinction between generalization and extension in mathematical language is not very clear, but the latter term applies primarily to a conception or function which has received a new and wider definition, also, the modification of a proposition concerning two dimensions so as to make it apply to three is called an extension.

Also spelled generalisation.

generalize (jen'e-ral-iz), v.; pret. and pp. generalized, ppr. generalizing. [= D. generalisieren = G. generalisieren = Dan. generalisere = Sw. generalisera, < F. généraliser = Sp. Pg. generalizar = It. generalizzare; as general + -ize.] 1. trans. 1. To render general; make more general; bring under a general description or notion; treat or apply generally.

The mind makes its utmost endeavors to generalize its ideas. Locke, Human Knowledge, § 3.

We have already observed the following remarkable things in the process of naming: 1. assigning names of those clusters of idealized objects; 2. as abstract those names, so as to make them represent a class; 3. framing adjectives by which minor classes are cut out of larger. James Mill, Analysis, ix.

The existence of a man with such mighty powers of discovery and demonstration as Newton, and the recognition of his doctrines among his contemporaries depend upon causes which do not admit of being generalized. Sir G. C. Lewis, Authority in Matters of Opinion, ix, § 1.

2. To infer inductively, as a general rule from a particular case or set of facts.

A mere conclusion generalized from a great multitude of facts. Cederblad.

3. In math., to modify, as a proposition, so as to obtain a wider proposition from which the former can be immediately deduced. See generalization.

II. intrans. 1. To recognize that two or more objects have a common character; to form a general notion. [It ought into use by Reid.]

We are next to consider the operations of the understanding, by which we are enabled to form general conceptions. These appear to me to have three. First, The resolving or analyzing a subject into its known attributes, and giving a name to each attribute, which name shall signify that attribute, and nothing more. Secondly, The observing one or more such attributes to be common to many subjects. The first is philosophy called abstraction, the second may be called generalization. But I have commonly included under the name of abstraction. Reid, Intellectual Powers, I, 83, p. 44.

2. To reason inductively, from particular cases to general rules comprehending those cases.

The reviewer holds that we pass from special experiences to universal truths in virtue of the inductive propensity—the irresistible impulse of the mind to generalize and infer. Whewell, Inductive Science, Ideas, x, p. 101.

He continually meets with facts which prove that he had generalized on insufficient data. H. Spencer, Social Statics, p. 214.

Also spelled generaliser.

generalized (jen'e-ral-izd), p. a. Specifically, in biol., common or primitive, as a structure or organism; representing or held to represent a broad or general type of form; synthetic; undifferentiated; the opposite of specialized; as, a lucernarian is or represents a generalized type of hydrozoan; some fossil mammals had a generalized dental formula.

generalizer (jen'e-ral-iz-er), n. One who generalizes. Also spelled generaliser.

Like Kantian and Cartesian but a generalizer and abstract thinker. Quarterly Rev., CXLV, 136.

generally (jen'e-ral-i), adv. [< ME. generally, generallike, < general + -ly.] 1. In a general or universal manner; with respect to all the individuals of a class.

I fear and loathe generally All men that I see. Shakespeare, Titus Andronicus, I, 179.

No many giddy offences as he hath generally taxed their whole sex withal. Shakespeare, As You Like It, III, 2.

With joy to the whole world he was generally welcomed. Capt. John Smith, His Travels, I, 17.

2. All taken together; collectively; in a body. And so all of them generally have power towards some good by the direction of reason. Sir P. Sidney.

Therefore I counsel that all Israel be generally gathered unto thee, from Dan even to Beersheba, as the word that is by the sea for multitude. 2 Sam. xvii, 11.

You must, as we do, gratify this gentleman, To whom we all rest generally beholden. Shakespeare, T. of the B., I, 3.

3. In general; commonly though not universally; most frequently; in most cases.

That the holy Scriptures are one of the greatest blessings which God bestows upon the sons of men is generally acknowledged by all who know anything of the value and worth of them. Locke.

Mr. Mill complains that those who maintain the affirmative generally beg the question.

Macaulay, Mill on Government.

4. In the main; without detail; upon the whole.

Generally speaking, they live very quietly. Addison, Guardian.

Syn. 3. Usually, ordinarily, mainly, principally, chiefly. generalness (jen'e-ral-ness), n. The character of being general. [Rare.]

They had, with a general consent, rather springing by the generalness of the cause than of any artificial practice, set themselves in arms. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, I.

generalship (jen'e-ral-ship), n. [< general + -ship.] 1. The office of a general.

The generalship of the Lord Digby [was brought] to an end. Clarendon, Civil Wars.

2. The management of an army; the military skill or conduct of a commander.

He acknowledged . . . that his success . . . was to be attributed, not at all to his own generalship, but solely to the valour and steadiness of his troops. Macaulay, Frederic the Great.

Hence —3. Management or tactics generally.

This was looked on in no other light, but as an artful stroke of generalship in him to raise a dust. Sterne.

Your generalship puts me in mind of Prince Eugene. Goldsmith, She Stoops to Conquer, II.

generality (jen'e-ral-i-ti), n. [< general + -ity.] 1. Generality. A generality.

Not any long or far fetched circumstance Wrapped in the curious generality of arts. H. Johnson, Poetaster, v, 1.

generant (jen'e-rant), a. and n. [< OF. generant, < L. generant (-s), ppr. of generare, beget, produce; see generate.] 1. a. Begetting; producing; generative; specifically, in math., acting as a generant. See II, 2.

In such pretended generations the generant or active principle is supposed to be the sun, which, being an infinite body, cannot act otherwise than by his heat. Boyle, Works of Creation, II.

II. n. 1. One who or that which generates; a generator. [Rare.]

Some believe the soul made by God, some by angels, and some by the generant. Glennville, Resp. Sci., III.

By a regression of the values of the mid-parentages the true generants are derived. Francis Galton, In Science, VI, 272.

2. In math., a moving locus, the ensemble of all of whose positions forms another locus, which it is said to generate; as, an isosceles triangle revolving on the perpendicular let fall from its apex to the base is the generant of a right cone.

generate (jen'e-rant), v. t.; pret. and pp. generated, ppr. generating. [< L. generatus, pp. of generare, beget, procreate, produce, < genus (gener), a kind, race, family; see genus.] 1. To beget; procreate; engender by sexual union. — 2. To produce; cause to be; bring into life.

Things were generated and destroyed before Saturn was dimmed. Bacon, Physical Tabula, I, Espl.

And God said, Let the waters generate Reptile with spawn abundant, living soul. Milton, P. L., vii, 287.

3. To cause; form; give origin to.

There could therefore be little sympathy between them; and centuries of calumnies and wrongs had generated a strong antipathy. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

A system of pure ethics cannot recognize evil, nor any of those conditions which evil generates. H. Spencer, Social Statics, p. 70.

4. In math., to give rise to, as to a geometrical figure; especially, to move so that the locus of the motion shall constitute (the figure specified); thus, a right line moving with one point fixed generates a conical surface. Generating function. See function. Generating line or figure. In math., that line or figure by the motion of which another figure or solid is supposed to be described or generated. Generating surface. In a boiler, the heating surface or that on which heat is applied for the generation of steam.

generation (jen'e-ral-shon), n. [< ME. generacion = D. generatio = G. generatio, < OF. generacion, F. génération = Fr. génération = Sp. generacion = Pg. geração = It. generazione,

1. generatio(n)-, generare, beget, generate: see generate.] 1. The act, process, or function of generating or begetting; procreation; propagation; reproduction; multiplication of kind. The modes of generation in the animal kingdom are reducible to four leading types: (1) fission, (2) asexual, (3) gemination, and (4) sexual generation. (See these words, and conjugation.) Another division is into sexual or gamic generation, which prevails in all the higher animals and in most others, and asexual or non-sexual or agametic generation. Many variations in the mode of generation, chiefly sexual, are expressed by such terms as pariparous, gemiparous, larviparous, oviparous, ovoviviparous, viviparous, oviparous. (See these words and the corresponding abstract nouns.) See genus, 1.

The threads sometimes discovered in cells are perhaps their young: the generation of cells is very dark and mysterious. White, Nat. Hist. of Selborne, xl.

2. In theol., the communication of the Divine Essence from God the Father to God the Son. The catholic or orthodox Trinitarian doctrine is that God the Son is a distinct person, truly God and of the same essence as the Father, and is therefore existent in his own personality as the Son from all eternity to all eternity, and that the divine act of generation is accordingly itself eternal or without beginning and without end. In opposition to the Arian teaching, that "there was formerly a time when he [Christ] was not, and that before being begotten he was not." The person or hypostasis of God the Son being "the express image for impress, represent of his [God the Father's] person (consistence)" (Heb. 1:3), the communication of essence is that of a father to a son, and is accordingly begetting or generation, whereas the communication of the Divine Essence to the Holy Spirit is simply procreation.

3. A bringing out or forth; evolution, as from a source or cause; production, especially by some natural process or causation: as, the generation of sounds.

Generation is a proceeding from the not being of a substance to the being of the same, as from an acorn to an oak. Humboldt, Arts of Logic (1800), l. 22.

Birch is used in striking and beating; which clearly denotes the generation of fire to be from the violent percussion and collision of bodies. Bacon, Physical Fables, II, Expi.

Would you know a catchpoll rightly derived, the corruption of a citizen is the generation of a sergeant. Middleton and Dekker, Boaring Gull, III, 1.

4. In math., the description of a geometrical figure by the motion of a point, line, plane, or figure, in accordance with a mathematical law. Also genesis.—5. That which is generated; progeny; offspring.

O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? Mat. III, 7.

Fourteen [years] they shall not see,
To bring false generations. Shak., W. T., II, 1.
Be young again, Melander! live to number
A happy generation, and die old
In comforts as in years! East, Lover's Melancholy, v. 1.

6. A single succession of living beings in natural descent, as the offspring or descendants in the same degree of the same parents.

By the fourth generation they shall come hither again. Gen. xv, 16.

A link among the days, to knit
The generations each with each. Trappson, In Memoriam, xl.

By selecting generation after generation, the sheep with the finest and longest wool, a breed of sheep is ultimately reared with wool almost generically different from that of the undomesticated race. J. Eske, Cosmic Philos., II, 9.

7. The whole body of persons of the same period or living at the same time: as, the present generation.

O faithless and perverse generation! Luke ix, 41.

8. Family; race; kind; by extension, any allied or associated group of persons; a class.

This Machomete reigned in Arabia the Zeer of our Lord Jesus Christ 610, and was of the Generation of Adam. Manderley, Travels, p. 140.

These players are an idle generation, and do much harm in a state. B. Jonson, Poetaster, l. 1.

The southern parts [of Mesopotamia] are inhabited by a very bad generation of Arabs. Pococke, Description of the East, II, l. 103.

We plant a solid foot into the Time,
And mould a generation strong to move. Trappson, Princess, v.

9. The age or period of a generation; hence, the average lifetime of all persons of synchronous age. The historical average, or that of all who pass the stage of infancy, is commonly reckoned at about thirty years, while the physiological average, or that of all who are born, is only about seventeen years.

A point concerning property which ought to be most speedily decided, frequently exercises the wit of ancient lawyers, for many generations. Burke, Vind. of Nat. Society.

Alternate generation. See alternate, and also parthenogenesis.—Equivocal generation. (a) Generation not from a parent of the same species. (b) Same as spontaneous generation.—Eternal generation. See eternal.—Fissiparous generation. In zool., reproduction by fission; disparately. Spontaneous generation, the supposed generation of living things from non-living matter. See abiogenesis.—Virgin generation. See parthenogenesis and parthenogenesis.

generationism (jen-e-rā-shon-izm), n. [generation + -ism.] In theol., the theory that the soul originates with the body in generation, and not by a distinct act of creation: same as traducianism.

generative (jen-e-rā-tiv), a. [= F. généralif = Pr. generativus = Sp. Pg. It. generativo; as generato + -ive.] Pertaining to generation or propagation; connected with or resulting from the process of begetting.

In grains and kernels the greatest part is the nutriment of that generative particle. Sir T. Browne.

If there hath been such a gradual diminution of the generative faculty upon the earth, why was there not the like decay in the production of vegetables? Bentley.

Generative person. In zool., the portion of a compound organism, as a hydroid polyp, which is borne upon a proliferating part; a medusoid or medusiform portion of such a polyp; a reproductive zooid. See amphidactylum, gonosome.—Generative reason (Gr. λογος ἀσπεκτικός), in the Stoic philos., the first being considered creative; nature.

generator (jen-e-rā-tor), n. [= F. générateur = Pr. gerador = It. generatore; generare, generate: see generate.] One who or that which begets, causes, or produces. Specifically: (a) In musical acoustics: (1) A tone which produces a series of harmonics. (2) A tone fundamental to a triad or other chord; a root. (b) Any vessel or apparatus for the production of gas or steam, as a steam boiler. (c) In elect., a dynamo electric machine. (d) In math., a generatrix; a right line lying in a ruled surface. (e) In making water-gas, the chamber containing incandescent carbon, into which steam is admitted for decomposition into gas. (f) In chem., the elements or compounds from which a more complex substance is obtained. E. D. Double generator. A new edge introduced between two non-contiguous summits of a polyhedron in order to generate another.

generatrix (jen-e-rā-trix), n. [= F. génératrice = It. generatrice; generare, generate: see generate.] 1. In math., that which generates; specifically, the point, line, or figure which by its motion is conceived to generate a line, surface, or solid.—2. In physics, a dynamo-electric machine employed to generate an electric current. Compare receptor.

genere (jen-e-re), n. [It., kind, sort, < L. genus (gener), kind: see genus.] In music, scale or key.

generic (jē-ner'ik), a. [= F. général = Sp. generico = Pr. It. generico; generare, generate: see generate.] 1. Pertaining to, of the nature of, or forming a mark of a genus, or a kind or group of similar things; comprehending a number of like things, without specifying them: opposed to specific. See genus.

For the acquisite part of wisdom is the generic power which includes both the specific powers of intuition and reflection. Theodore Parker, Truth and the Intellect.

Specifically.—2. In zool., and bot., having the taxonomic rank or classificatory value of a genus: as, a generic name or description; generic characters or differences; generic identity. Thus Canis, a genus of Canidae, is the generic name of all species of the dog family which agree in their generic characters, and present generic differences from all other Canidae.

3. Relating to gender. See gender.—4. Of a general nature; applicable or referring to any unit of the kind or class; general; not special.

The more concrete to concepts or generic images are formed to a large extent by a passive process of assimilation. J. Sully, Outlines of Psychology, p. 341.

5. Distinctly characteristic; so marked as to constitute or denote a distinct kind.

Those men whom modern writers set down as the Sophists, and denounce as the moral pestilence of their age, were not distinguished in any marked or generic way from their predecessors. Grise, Hist. Greece, II, 6.

Generic agreement or identity. The agreement of objects which belong to the same genus.—Generic area. The distributional or chorological area of a genus of animals or plants: the region to which the members of a genus are limited in distribution over the earth's surface. The place in a generic area where the genus is most numerous represented by species or individuals is known as its protopopis.—Generic description or diagnosis. A description or characterization of a genus, as in zoology or botany.—Generic difference. The disagreement of objects which belong to different genera; a characteristic of a being or an object which differentiates it generically from another or others.—Generic diversity. The disagreement between individuals of different genera.—Generic name. The denomination which comprehends all the species, as of a group of animals, plants, or fossils, which have generic characters in common. Thus, Canis is the generic name of certain animals of the dog kind; Felis, of the cat kind; Cervus, of the deer kind. See genus (a).

The word consumption being applicable to a proper and improper, to a true and a bastard, consumption, requires a generic description quadrate to both. Morrey, Of Consumptions.

generically (jē-ner'ikal), adv. 1. With regard to genus or kind; in a generic way; to a generic extent; by generic rank or classification: as, to separate two species generically; an animal generically related to another.

They may be called generically Arabs, who at a very ancient time had spread along the coast from Egypt to Morocco. Proude, Caesar, p. 38.

The sixth species (L. fascicularis) differs to a slight extent in many respects from the other species, and has considerable claims to be generically separated. Jarvis, Cirripedia, p. 72.

2. Distinctly; markedly: as, our aims are generically different.

genericalness (jē-ner'ikal-nes), n. The state or quality of being generic.

The question in dispute has no relation to the genericness of the objects on which we think, but to the genericness of thinking itself. Answer to Clarke's Third Defense.

generification (jē-ner'ikal-kā-shon), n. [< L. genus (gener), kind, genus, + -ficare, < facere, make.] Generalization; the process of generalizing. [Rare.]

The process of abstraction by which out of a proximately lower we evolve a proximately higher concept, is, when we speak with logical precision, called the process of generification. Sir W. Hamilton, Logic, xl.

generosity (jen-e-rōs'i-ti), n.; pl. generosities (-ities). [< F. générosité = Sp. generosidad = Pr. generosidade = It. generosità; generare, generate: see generate.] Nobility, excellence, goodness, nobility, etc.: see generous.] 1. Nobility; the order of nobles.

Mar. A petition granted them [the Roman populace], a strange one. Shak., Cor., I, 1.

To break the heart of generosity,
And make bold power lock pain. Shak., Cor., I, 1.

2. The quality of being generous; magnanimity; liberality of sentiment and action; more specifically, a disposition to give liberally or to bestow favors; a quality of the heart or mind opposed to meanness or parsimony.

They are of that vain number who had rather show their false generosity in giving away profusely to worthless flatterers than in paying just debts. Wycherley, Plain Dealer, IV, 1.

In so far as the sphere of generosity coincides with that of liberality, the former seems partly to transcend the latter, partly to refer more to the internal disposition, and to imply a complete triumph of unselfish over selfish impulses. H. Sulzberg, Methods of Ethics, p. 302.

3. Liberality in act; munificence: as, the object of one's generosity.—4. A generous act.

He by the touch of men was best inspired,
And caught his native greatness at rebound
From generouses itself had fired. Longell, Agamem., II, 1.

Order of Generosity. A Prussian order of distinction founded in 1845, but not organized till 1848, and superseded in 1740 by the order for Merit (which see, under merit).—Syn. 2 and 3. Generosity, Liberality, etc. See beneficence.

generous (jen-e-rus), a. [< OF. generosus, generosus, generosus, F. généreux = Pr. generosus = Sp. Pg. It. generoso, generoso; generare, generate: see generate.] 1. Being of noble or honorable birth or origin; well-born.

Twice have the trumpets sounded;
The generous and bravest citizens
Have bent the gates. Shak., M. for M., IV, 6.

2. Possessed of or showing blood or breeding; spirited; courageous; thoroughbred.

He [the trout] may be justly said, as the old poet said of wine, and we English say of venison, to be a generous fish. J. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 71.

The neighing of the generous horse was heard,
For battle by the busy groom prepar'd. Dryden, Pal. and Arc., III, 448.

3. Noble in character or quality; honorable; magnanimous.

Virtue, even in an Enemy, [is] respected by generous Minds. Baker, Chronicles, p. 128.

I have mistook the man: his resolute spirit
Proclaims him generous; he has a noble heart,
As free to utter good deeds as to act them. Deau. and Pl. Honest Man's Fortune, II, 3.

I know the Table Round, my friends of old;
All brave, and many generous, and some chaste. Tennyson, Merlin and Vivien.

4. Liberal; bountiful; munificent: as, a generous giver or gift.

Noble by heritage,
Generous, and free. Carey, The Contrivances, I, 2.

5. Strong; full of spirit: as, generous wine.
The most generous Wines of Spain grow in the middle Parts of the Continent. Hornell, Letters, p. 54.

6. Full; overflowing; abundant: as, a generous cup; a generous table.

The landscape was everywhere grand and beautiful.
Open and generous hills on all sides. S. Bowles, in Merriam, II, 28.

2. Native; natural; innate. [Rare.]

So there are not a few very much to be pitied, whose industry being not attended with natural parts, they have availed to little purpose, and rolled the stone in vain. Which chiefly proceedeth from natural incapacity and genial indisposition, at least to those particulars whereunto they apply their endeavours.

Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., l. 5.

3. Giving spirit or life; enlivening; warming; comforting; contributing to life and cheerfulness; supporting life.

The grand genial power of the system, that visible (and the Sun, would be soon regarded by them as a most beneficent Deity.

Warton, Divine Legation, III. § 6.

Is this a dinner? this a genial room?

No, 'tis a temple, and a heathenish.

Pope, Moral Essays, IV. 155.

Yet be genial airs and a pleasant sunshine left me.

Regent, Third of November, 1861.

4. Of a social spirit; cordial in disposition and manner; kindly; sympathetically cheerful.

The celebrated drinking ode of this genial archdeacon (Walter de Maupais) has the regular returns of the monkish rhyme.

T. Warton, Hist. Eng. Poetry, I. II.

A great broad-shoulder'd genial Englishman.

Tennyson, Princess, Conclusion.

He was so genial, so cordial, so encouraging, that it seemed as if the clouds . . . broke away as we came into his presence.

O. W. Holmes, Old Folio of Life, p. 62.

5. Relating to or exhibiting genius. [Rare.]

Men of genius have often attached the highest value to their less genial works.

Rare.

Syn. 3. Cheerful, inspiring. 4. Hearty, pleasant.

genial (jē-ni'āl), a. and n. [Also genial, genial; < Gr. γενναίος, chin, beard, < γενν = gēna = E. chin; see gēna and chin.] I. a. In anat., pertaining to the chin; situated on the chin; mental. Genial tubercles, in human anat., four small bony processes at the symphysis menti or middle line of the chin, on the inner aspect of the lower jaw bone, the upper pair for the insertion of the geniohyoglossal, and the lower for that of the geniohyoid muscles.

II. n. One of the dermal plates or scutes of the chin of reptiles.

geniality (jē-ni'āl-i-ti), n. [= G. genialitas = Dan. Sw. genialitet = Sp. genialidad = It. genialità, < It. genialità (< gēna), enjoyment, festivity, < genialis, genial; see genial.] The state or quality of being genial; especially, sympathetically cheerfulness or cordiality.

The arch of the prominent eyebrows, the well shaped Grecian nose, the smile lurking in the corners of the tight pressed lips, show an innate geniality which might be dashed with bitter on occasion.

Edinburgh Rev.

genie (jē-ni), n. [OF. genie, F. génie, genius, < L. genius; see genius.] Disposition; inclination; turn of mind; genius.

Dr. J. Wallis, the keeper of the University registers, &c., did put into the hands of A. Wood the keys of the school tower, . . . to the end that he might advance his erudite genie in antiquities. Let. of A. Wood, p. 117.

genie (jē-ni), n. [A corrupt form of junior, by confusion with genius. See junior and genius.] Same as junior. See junior.

Be he genie or affric, caliph or merchant of Bassora, into whose hands we had fallen, we resolved to let the adventure take its course.

B. Taylor, Lands of the Sarnen, p. 197.

genii, n. Latin plural of genius.

genio (jē-ni ō), n. [It. (= Sp. gēno), < L. genius; see genius.] A genius.

But, by reason of humane nature, we have daily experience that as humours and genies, so affections and judgment, which oftentimes is assailed to them, and every other thing else, doth vary and alter.

Benvenuto, Passengers' Dialogues (1612).

It is not only to the general but of a nation that great revolutions are owing, but to the extraordinary genies that lead them.

Steele, Letter, No. 5.

genioglossal (jē-ni-ō-glos'al), a. [As genioglossus + -al.] Pertaining to the chin and the tongue; applied to the genioglossus.

genioglossus (jē-ni-ō-glos'us), n.; pl. genioglossi (-i). [Gr. γενναίος, chin (see genial), + γλῶσσα, tongue.] A usual name of the geniohyoglossus.

geniohyoglossal (jē-ni-ō-hi-ō-glos'al), a. and n. [As geniohyoglossus + -al.] I. a. Pertaining to the chin, hyoid bone, and tongue; specifically applied to the geniohyoglossus.

II. n. The geniohyoglossus.

geniohyoglossus (jē-ni-ō-hi-ō-glos'us), n.; pl. geniohyoglossi (-i). [Gr. γενναίος, chin, + γλῶσσα, hyoid, + γλῶσσα, tongue.] A muscle of the tongue, so called from its triple connection with the chin, hyoid bone and tongue. It is a flat triangular muscle placed vertically in the tongue, on either side of the median line, arising from the upper genial tubercle of the lower jaw-bone, and spreading like a fan to its insertion in the hyoid bone and all along the under side of the tongue, various movements of which organ it subserves. Also called genioglossus.

geniohyoid (jē-ni-ō-hi'oid), a. and n. [Gr. γενναίος, chin, + γλῶσσα, hyoid.] I. a. Pertaining to the chin and the hyoid bone; specifically applied to the geniohyoides.

II. n. The geniohyoides.

geniohyoides (jē-ni-ō-hi-ōi'dē-an), a. [Gr. γενναίος + -an.] Same as geniohyoid.

geniohyoides (jē-ni-ō-hi-ōi'dē-us), n.; pl. geniohyoides (-i). [NL., < Gr. γενναίος, chin, + γλῶσσα, hyoid.] A muscle of the chin and hyoid arising from the genial tubercle of the lower jaw and inserted into the body of the hyoid bone. It is a slender straight muscle lying alongside its fellow, between the geniohyoglossus and the geniohyoglossus. Its action tends to depress the jaw and elevate the hyoid. Also called geniohyoid.

genioplasty (jē-ni'ō-plas'ti), n. [Gr. γενναίος, the chin, + πλαστός, form, mold.] In surg., the operation of restoring the chin.

Genipa (jen'i-pā), n. [NL., of W. Ind. origin.] A rubescent genus of tropical America, closely allied to Gardenia of the old world. There are 3 species. The fruit is succulent, with a rather thick rind, and is sometimes edible, as in the case of the genipap. The fruit of G. Brasiliensis yields a violet dye. The wood of G. Carota is remarkable for its flexibility, and is used for cart-shafts and in other ways. G. chusafolia, bearing a large meddible fruit called the seven-years apple, is a West Indian species that is also found in southern Florida.

genipap (jen'i-pap), n. [L. Genipapo, the Guiana name.] The fruit of Genipa Americana, of the West Indies and South America. It is of about the size of an orange, and of a pleasant vinous flavor. In Surinam it is often called marmelade-bos.

genip-tree (jen'ip-trē), n. [See Genipa.] 1. A tree of the genus Genipa. — 2. An old West Indian name for Melicocca bijuga and Hypelate paniculata, sapindaceous trees of Jamaica and other islands and the neighboring mainland.

genisaro (jen-i-sā'rō), n. A name given in Nicaragua to the Pithecolobium saman, a leguminous tree the pods of which are edible and used as food for cattle.

Genist, n. Same as Genie.

Genista (jē-nis'tā), n. [L. genista or genesta, the name esp. of Spanish broom, Spartium junceum, but applied also to the common broom and the greenweed; hence F. genêt, broom, and Plantagenet, the surname of the Angevine line of English kings, lit. broom-plant (plante à genêt), from the sprig of broom worn as a badge by their ancestor the Count of Anjou.] 1. A large genus of shrubby leguminous plants, often spiny, with simple leaves (or leafless) and yellow flowers. There are about 70 species native of Europe, northern Africa, and western Asia. The woodwaxen or dyers' greenweed, G. tinctoria, was formerly of importance as a dye plant, giving a bright yellow color, from which Kenda green was obtained by dipping the texture in a blue solution of woad. Some species are occasionally cultivated for ornament. The common broom, Cytisus scoparius, is by some included in this genus as G. scoparia.

2. In cutom., a genus of cecidomyiids. Bigot, 1854.

genital (jen'i-tal), a. and n. [ME. genital, < OF. genital, F. genital = Pr. Sp. genital = It. genitale, < L. genitalis, of or belonging to generation, < genitus, pp. of gignere, beget, generate; see genus.] I. a. 1. Pertaining to generation; generative; reproductive; procreative; as, the genital organs.

These fennous vapours . . . will doubtless compose as genital a matter as any can be prepared in the body of animals.

Glanville, Pre-existence of Soul, etc.

Specifically — 2. Pertaining to the organs of generation. — Accessory genital organs, or armor, in zool. the claspers and other external organs of the male, which serve to retain the female. — Genital canal, in embryol., the lumen of the genital cord. — Genital chamber, the genital sinus of a hydrozoan; a recess, sinus, or cavity which receives the genital products before their exit from the body. See cut under Aescula. — Genital cord (or chord), in embryol. See cord. — Genital gland, See gland. — Genital lobe, an expansion or lobe beneath the needed abdominal segment of the male dragon-fly. It contains the copulating sac, which previous to union with the female is filled with seminal fluid from the spermatic duct at the end of the abdomen. — Genital nerve, the genital branch of the genitocrural nerve, supplying the cremaster muscle of the male and the round ligament of the uterus of the female. — Genital plate, in echinoderms, one of the perforated plates which give exit to the generative products. — Genital products, the immediate products of any genital gland, male or female—that is, spermatozoa or ova of any kind. — Genital ridge, in embryol., a thickening of connective tissue at the side of the mesentery in the region of the primitive kidney, where the epithelium dips in to form the rudiments of ova. — Genital segments, in entom., the segments of the abdomen which are modified to form accessory pieces of the external generative organs, specifically, in the Hemiptera, the seventh and, when visible, the succeeding segments, which are so modified. Genital sinus, in Hydrata, the genital chamber (see above).

II. n. See genital.

genitalia (jen-i-ta'li-ä), n. pl. [L. (sc. membra), neut. pl. of genitalis, genital; see genital, a., genitals.] In zool., the generative organs; the genitals.

The genitalia (of Aspidaster) form a large part of the viscera, and the structure of the complex hermaphrodite apparatus is . . . peculiar. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 173.

genitals (jen-i-tal-z), n. pl. The sexual organs; especially, the external sexual organs; the genitalia.

Genite (je'nit), n. One of a sect of the ancient Jews, who in the Babylonish captivity, according to Breidenburgius, refrained from taking strange wives, and therefore claimed to be of the pure stock of Abraham. Also Genist.

Ho there nameth . . . others other sects, if they may beare that name: as the Genites or Genists, which stood vpon their stocke and kindred. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 140.

geniting, n. See genetung.

genitival (jen-i-ti'val or jen-i-ti-val), a. [Genitive + -al.] Relating or pertaining to the genitive.

genitive (jen-i-tiv), a. and n. [= D. genitief = G. Dan. Sw. genitiv, n.; = F. genitif = Pr. genitu = Sp. Pg. It. genitivo, < L. genitivus, usually in classical L. spelled genitivus, or of belonging to birth; in grammar, with or without casus, the genitive case (a mistranslation of Gr. γενετικός, the generic or general case, γενικός meaning also belonging to the family, also to generation, < γενεα = L. gens), < genitus, pp. of gignere, O.L. gignere, beget, produce; see genital, genus.] 1. a. In gram., pertaining to or indicating origin, source, possession, and the like; an epithet applied to a case in the declension of nouns, adjectives, pronouns, etc., which in English is called the possessive case, or to the relation expressed by such a case: as, patris, 'of a father, a father's,' is the genitive case of the Latin noun pater, a father.

What is your genitive case? Shak, M. W. of W., iv. 1.

II. n. In gram., a case in the declension of nouns, adjectives, pronouns, etc., expressing in the widest sense a relation of appurtenance between one thing and another, an adjectival relation of one noun to another, or more specifically source, origin, possession, and the like; in English grammar, the possessive case.

The Latin genitivus is a mere blunder, for the Greek word γενετικός could never mean genitivus. . . Genike in Greek had a much wider, a much more philosophical meaning. It meant gens, generatio, the general case, or rather the case which expresses the genus or kind. This is the real power of the genitive. If I say, 'a bird of the water,' of the water defines the genus to which a certain bird belongs. It is first to the genus of water birds. 'Man of the mountains' means a mountaineer. In phrases such as 'son of the father' or 'father of the son,' the genitive have the same effect. They predilate something of the son or of the father, and if we distinguished between the sons of the father and the sons of the mother, the genitives would mark the class or genus to which the sons respectively belonged. Max Müller, Sci. of Lang., iii.

Abbreviated gen.

genito-anal (jen-i-tō-ā-nal), a. [Genital + anal.] In entom., pertaining to the genitals and the anus: as, the genito-anal ring.

genitocrural (jen-i-tō-krō'ral), a. [Genital + crural.] Pertaining to the genitals and to the thigh; specifically applied to a branch of the second lumbar nerve which passes through the psoas muscle and is distributed to the genitalia and parts of the thigh. Its two main divisions are the genital and crural branches or nerves.

genitor (jen-i-tor), n. Same as genetung.

Dorothy gave her the hotter half of an imperfect genitor apple. S. Judd, Margaret, ii. 1.

genitor (jen-i-tor), n. [= F. geniteur = Sp. Pg. genitor = It. genitore, < L. genitor, < genitus, pp. of gignere, O.L. gignere, beget, produce; see gen- ital, genus.] 1. One who procreates; a sire; a progenitor. [Rare.]

High genitors, unconcerned did they call Time's sweetest first-fruits Keats, Endymion, i.

2. pl. The genitals.

genitoriest (jen-i-tō-riz), n. pl. [Pl. of "genitor", prop. adj. < L. genitor, < genitus, pp. of gignere, beget; see genitor.] The genitals. Huxell.

In primitive times, amongst other foul slanders spread against the Christians, one was, that they did adore the genitor of their priests. Bacon, Apophthegms, p. 115.

genito-urinary (jen-i-tō-ū'rī-nā-ri), a. [Genital + urinary.] Same as urogenital. Genito-urinary duct, sinus, etc. See urogenital. Genitum (jen-i-tum), n.; pl. genita (jen-i-ta) [Genitum, neut. of genitus, pp. of gignere, O.L. gignere, beget; see genital, genus.] In math., a geometrical figure generated by the movement of a point, line, plane, or figure.

geniture (jen-i-tur), n. [OF geniture, F. geniture = Pr. Sp. Pg. It. genitura, < L. genitura, < genitus, pp. of gignere, O.L. gignere, beget; see genital, genus.] 1. In astrology, birth; nativity.

Yes, he's lord of the geniture.
Whether you examine it by Ptolemy's way,
Or Messahalah's, Lach. or Alkindus
Fletcher (and other) bloody Brother IV.

This work, by merit first of fame secure
Is likewise happy in its geniture.
For since the hour when Charles ascends the throne,
It shew'd at once his fortune and his own.
Brooks, To Sir Robert Howard

2. The power of procreation; virility. F. D.
It abounds the geniture.
Forster, Treatise of Tobacco, p. 410.

3. pl. The genitals. F. D.
genius (je'nī-us), n.; pl. geniuses, geni (je'nī-us-ēz, -nī). [Genius, the tutelary spirit of a person, spirit, inclination, wit, genius, lit. 'inborn nature' (nature is from the same root), < gignere, O.L. gignere, beget, produce; see genus.]

1. The ruling or predominant spirit of a place, person, or thing; the power, principle, or influence that determines character, conduct, or destiny (supposed by the ancients to be a tutelary divinity, a good spirit, or an evil demon, usually striving with an opposing spirit for the mastery); that which controls, guides, or aids: as, my good genius came to the rescue; his evil genius enticed him. [In this sense and the following the plural is genii.]

Some say, the Geniuses Cries, "Come!" to him that in kindly mood the Shak, I. and C. iv. 1.

The word genius hath by some writers been erroneously adapted for genius. Each is a plural of the same word genus, but in different senses. When genius, in the singular, means a separate spirit or demon, good or bad, the plural is genii. When it means mental abilities, or a person, the plural is geniuses. G. Campbell, Philos. of Rhetoric, II. iii. 3.

A fairy should your Genius name
And gave you on your natal day.
Johnson, Margaret

After the third century, even the artistic type of the guardian genius reappeared in that of the guardian angel. Leake, Europ. Monks, I. 31.

His [Shakespeare's] evil angel, having a leading step by step and note by note to the stage, was one of that better genius who came to lead him into the better path of Marlowe. Southey, Shakespeare, p. 77.

2. A disembodied spirit regarded as affecting human beings in certain ways, but not as connected with any one individually.

The Abyssinians, to a many, are fearful of the night, unwilling to travel, and at day and night in that season when they imagine the world is in possession of certain genii,averse to intercourse with men.

Bacon, Sources of the Nile, II. 96.

3. A type or symbol, a concrete representative, as of an influence or a characteristic; a generic exemplification.

I do remember him at Chioeste. I'm like a man made after copper of a chess-parring. . . he was the very genius of fame. Shak, Hamlet, IV. iii. 2.

A golden lizard. The very genius of exquisite wit and wit had stopped breathless upon the threshold of our cabin. Brooks, Before the Mast, ch. 10.

4. Prevailing spirit or inclination, distinguishing proclivity, bent, or tendency, as of a person, place, time, institution, etc.; special aptitude or intellectual quality; intrinsic characteristic or qualification: as, a genius for poetry, or for diplomacy; the genius of Christianity, of the Elizabethan period, of the American Constitution, of the Vatican.

Taking with him his two Sisters, he retired into a Monastery, they into a Nunnery. This does not suit with the genius of an Englishman, who loves not to pull off his clothes till he goes to bed. Huxell, Letters, I. iii. 11.

Every age has a kind of universal genius, which inclines those that live in it to some particular studies.

Dryden, Essay on Dram. Poecy.

No woman can despise them [ceremonies] with impunity. Their genius delights in ceremonies, in forms, in decorating life with manners, with propriety, order, and grace. Benson, Woman.

It is this tendency on the part of the collective speakers of a language to approve or reject a proposed change according to its conformity with their already subsisting usages that we are accustomed to call by the fanciful name "the genius of a language."

Whitney, Lucey, Brit., A. III. 770.

Human nature has a much greater genius for sameness than for originality. Lowell, Study Windows, p. 68.

5. Exalted mental power distinguished by instinctive aptitude, and independent of tuition; phenomenal capability, derived from inspiration or exaltation, for intellectual creation or expression; that constitution of mind or perfection of faculties which enables a person to excel others in mental perception, comprehension, discrimination, and expression, especially in literature, art, and science.

By genius I would understand that power, or rather those powers of the mind, which are capable of penetrating into all things within our reach and knowledge, and of distinguishing their essential differences.

Feeling, Tom Jones, ix. 1.

Genius always imports something inventive or creative. H. Blair, Rhetoric, iii.

We owe to genius always the same debt, of lifting the curtain from the common, and showing us that divinity are sitting disguised in the seeming gang of gypsies and peddlers. Emerson, Works and Days.

Talent is that which is in a man's power, genius is that in whose power a man is.

Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 306.

6. A person having such mental power; a person of general or special intellectual facilities developed in a phenomenal degree. [In this sense the plural is geniuses. It was formerly also genii.]

Homer was the greater genius, Virgil the better artist. Pope, Blad. Pref.

The true genius is a mind of large general powers, accidentally directed to some particular direction.

Johnson.

In building that house, he won for himself, or for the nation, a genius whom he set to work a place in the history of art. E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 161.

Genius loci. [L.] The presiding divinity of a place; hence, the prevailing spirit of a place or an institution, as of a college. See def. 5. Syn. 5. Abilities, Gifts, Talents, Power, Aptitude, Faculty, Capacity, Genius, Ingenuity. Genius all indicate special or excellent power for doing work that is more or less intellectual. Abilities is the most general and common word for intellectual power of the active sort. Intellectual competence to do effective work, abilities are always either acquired or developed. (See ability.) Gifts are strictly endowments, or abilities regarded as conferred by the Creator. (See acquisition.) Talents comes to the same idea, its Biblical origin (Mat. xxv. 14) for making the powers seem primarily intrusted to one, for making or at least given like money. Faculty is regarding the former popularity and dignity, which it lost for a time. In the last century it stood for talents or gifts, excellent or superior endowments, as, he is a man of parts, or he is a man of good natural parts, the latter perhaps implying a failure to develop one's gifts. Aptitude is either natural bias or special fitness or skill. It may be native talent or developed ability. Faculty is cultivated aptitude, a highly trained power of doing something. The distinction between a faculty for and the faculty of should be noticed, the former being the kind of faculty now under consideration and the latter a bodily faculty, as the faculty of speech, hearing, etc. Capacity is receptive power, as, capacity to learn. It is a power of receiving. It is most remarkable in the different degrees of the ability with which different men acquire a language. See J. Mackintosh, Capacity (Genius) extraordinarily developed faculty. In many directions or in one. It is especially the creative power of original and original combinations. It comes with talents or abilities as being primarily bestowed, not acquired, and it includes capacity and aptitude in their highest forms. Ingenuity is lower than genius, in so far as it is not bestowed, having more less superficial phenomena and often in serving less exalted purposes; as, the ingenuity of the mechanic of the clockwork, of the sophist. Character is still lower, being a sort of mental docility, which is exercised in faculty in learning or felicity in expression. It may be a merely manual docility. (See quotation from Coleridge under idea.) It should be noticed that all these words, except parts, may be used in the singular for skill or power or natural bias in some particular direction, as, ability in debate, a talent for drawing, the genius of conversation, an aptitude for oration, a genius for argument, etc. See wisdom and virtue.

As we advance in life, we learn the limits of our abilities. Frederic, Heart Studies on Great Subjects, II. 215.

Conversation in its better part

May be called a gift, and not an art.

Copier, Conversation, I. 4.

The man of talents possesses them like so many tools, does his job with them, and there an end; but the man of genius is possessed by it, and it makes him into a hook or a life according to its whim.

Lowell, Piscatawa Travels, p. 66.

All my endeavors to distinguish myself were only for want of a great title and fortune, that I might be used like a lord by those who have an opinion of my parts; whether right or wrong is no great matter. And so the reputation of wit and great learning does the office of a riband or a coach and six.

Swift, To Bolingbroke.

That his style was no easy acquisition (though, of course, the aptitude was innate), he [Dryden] himself tells us.
Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 30.

For, above all things, he had what we Yankees call faculty—the knack of doing everything.
G. W. Curtis, Int. to Cecil Deane, p. 12.

As the sum and crown of what is to be done for technical education, I look to the provision of a machinery for winnowing out the capacities and giving them scope.
Hurley, Tech. Education.

Sir Isaac Newton and Milton were equally men of Genius. Sir Robert Walpole and Lord Godolphin were ministers of great abilities, though they did not possess either the brilliant talents of Bolingbroke or the commanding genius of Chatham.
Sir J. Mackintosh.

There is also another species of genius we call ingenuity, or the inventive faculty, which frequently accompanies or takes the place of the higher flights of genius, that meantime lies idle, or fallow, to recruit its powers.
Jon Bee, Essay on Samuel Foote.

Patience and tenacity of purpose are worth more than twice their weight of cleverness.
Huxley, Critiques and Addresses, p. 58.

genleset, genteset, n. [The form gentleset is no doubt wrong; the origin of genteset is uncertain.] An old architectural term of doubtful form and meaning: said by the Oxford Glossary to have been applied by William of Worcester apparently to the cusps or featherings in the arch of a doorway.

genet¹, n. See jenet¹.

genet², n. See jenet².

Genoa velvet. See Genoese velvet, under Genoese.

genoblast (jen'ô-blast), n. [NL., < Gr. γένος, genos, + βλαστός, blastos, germ.] The bisexual nucleus of an impregnated ovum, regarded as composed of a female part, feminonucleus, and of a male part, masculonucleus; a marionucleus.
H. D. Minot, Proc. Biol. Soc. Nat. Hist., XIX, 170.

genoblastic (jen'ô-blast'ik), a. [genoblast + -ic.] Germinating as a result of union of sexual elements; gamogenetic; pertaining to a genoblast. See the extract.

This author [E. Van Beneden] . . . suggests that the periphrastic pronucleus is probably partially formed of spermatogenic substance, that the central pronucleus is female, and that the segmentation nucleus is a compound body resulting from the union of these two, and is probably, therefore, bisexual. This statement includes all the basal facts of the genoblastic theory.
A. Huxley, Amer. Jour. Sci., 3d ser., XXXI, 330.

Genoese (jen'ô-sê' or -sê'), a. and n. [Genoa + -ese; cf. F. Genois, It. Genovese, < It. Genova, < L. Genua, Genoa. The plural was formerly also Genoveses. Cf. Genovay.] 1. a. Relating or pertaining to Genoa, a city of northwestern Italy, or to the republic of Genoa constituted by its citizens, existing from the tenth century till 1797, and very powerful in the middle ages. — Genoese embroidery, needlework done on fine linen or cotton, with outlines of thin cord and buttonhole-stitch, parts of the material being cut away and the openings filled with wheels and other simple patterns. — Genoese velvet, a rich fabric of which the pattern is in velvet pile and the background flat and smooth, of silk or silk and gold. The manufacture of this velvet is not peculiar to Genoa. Also called Genoa velvet.

II. n. sing. and pl. An inhabitant or a native, or the people, of Genoa.

Also Genovese.

genouillière (zhô-nô-lyâr'), n. [F., < genou, < L. genu = knee.] 1. Milt.: (a) The knee-piece, of hammered iron, introduced toward the close of the thirteenth century, and worn at first over the chausses of mail, being held in place by a strap passing round the leg, and consisting at first of a dish-shaped or slightly pointed piece forming a part of the jamb or of the cuissart in the fourteenth century, and later furnished with large wings which projected backward on each side of the knee-joint. — (b) In fort.: (a) The part of the interior slope of the parapet below the sill of an embrasure, serving to cover the lower part of the gun-carriage. (b) The height of the parapet above the banquettes in a barbette battery.

Genouillière, middle of 15th century. From Volstead's "The Art of the Middle Ages."

-genous. [(1) < L. genus, -a, -um, or as noun or adj. of one term, < L. gena, m., -born, as in indigenous, indigena, native, indigenous, amigena, river-born, montigena, mountain-born, etc.: see -gen. (2) < -gen + -ous, as in acro-genous, nitrogenous.] 1. The terminal element in some words of Latin origin, meaning '-born,' as in indigenous, born within a country, amigenous, river-born, montigenous, mountain-born, etc. — 2. The termination of adjectives from nouns in -gen, as in acrogenous, nitrogenous, etc.

Genovese (jen'ô-vê's' or -vêz'), a. and n. [ME. Genovayse; < It. Genovese, < Genova, Genoa: see Genoese.] Same as Genoese. [Rare.] Being but a Genovese, I am handled worse than had I been a Moor.
Tennyson, Columbus.

Genowayt, n. [Early mod. E. also Genowry, Genoway, etc. (and as an existing surname Jenoway, Jenoway, Jannay, Janney). < ME. Jenoway, Jannay, Janney, usually in pl. Jenoways, Jenoways, etc., orig. also sing., Genowayse, etc., a Genoese, a merchant engaged in the Genoese trade, < It. Genovese, a Genovese, < Genova, Genoa: see Genoese, Genovese.] A Genoese. genre (zhon'r), n. [F., kind, genus, mode, style, etc.; particularly in the arts, with a distinct epithet; < L. genus (gener-), kind: see genus and gender, n.] 1. Genus; kind; sort; style. [Rare.] The prodigious wealth of our language in beautiful works of this genre is almost unknown.
N. Lander, Ser. of Eng. Verse, p. 245.

2. In painting, specifically, a representation of some phase of common life, as a domestic interior, a rural or village scene, etc. The term is sometimes used in the same sense with reference to sculpture and the drama. In French it is also applied with a descriptive epithet to other kinds of painting, as genre historique, the historical style, genre de paysage, the landscape style. In English writing it is most commonly used in combination as a descriptive term, either with or without a hyphen: as, genre pictures; a genre painter. There are comic and genre pictures of parties.
J. F. Clarke, Ten Great Religions, vi, 1.

Only within these few centuries has painting been divided into historical, landscape, marine, architectural, genre, animal, still-life, etc.
H. Spencer, Universal Progress, p. 22.

His subjects, too, were no longer the homely things of the genre painter.
Encyc. Brit., XXIV, 500.

gens (jenz), n.; pl. gentes (jen'tez). [L., a clan or family (see def.), a race, nation, people, < √ gen in gignere, OL. gennē, beget, produce, genus, a race, kind, allied to E. ken and kind: see genus, kin, kind, n.] 1. In ancient Rome, a clan or house embracing several families claiming descent from a common ancestor, united by a common name and by certain religious rites and legal privileges and obligations, but not necessarily by consanguinity: as, the Fabian gens, all bearing the name Fabius; the Julian gens, all named Julius; the Cornelian gens, etc. Hence — 2. In historical and ethnological use, a tribe or clan; any community of persons in a primitive state of society constituting a distinct or independent branch of a general aggregate or race. The union of the gentes or nations is temporary and casual only; when the emergency is over, each tribal ruler is independent as before. Stubb, Const. Hist., § 22.

There was nothing between the worship of the House-hold and the worship of the Gens.
W. E. Hearn, Aryan Household, p. 141.

gent¹ (jent), a. [ME. gent, < OF. gent, F. gent = Pr. gent = OSP. gento, Olt. gente, pretty, fine, abbr., with recession of accent, from L. gentilis, gentile, etc.: see gentle, gentel, gentry, jaunty.] 1. Noble; gentle.

Spenser, F. Q., I, ix, 27.

2. Neat; slender; elegant.
Fair was the young wyf, and therewithal
As any weak hir body gent and smal.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 18.

Her middle was both small and gent.
Greene, Description of the Shepherd and his Wife.

3. Polished; refined.
The goose with hire facondo gent.
Chaucer, Parliament of Fowls, l. 358.

gent² (jent), n. [Abbr. of gentleman, first used in the 16th century, prob. at first with some ref. to gent¹, a., but in more general use taken up in speech from the written abbr. "gent," in law records, lists of names, etc., and in plays.

as "1st Gent.," "2d Gent.," etc.]. An abbreviation of gentleman. [Vulgar; in literary use, humorous or colloquial.]

And behold, at this moment the reverend gent enters from the vestry.
Thackeray, Newcomes, xlv.

The thing named "pants" is certain documents, A word not made for gentlemen, but gent.
O. W. Holmes, Urania.

genteel (jen-tél'), a. [In this form first found in the 17th century, being an E. adaptation of gentile pronounced as in the contemporary F. gentil, m., gentile, f. (the i pron. as E. ee), gentile, affable, courteous (see gentile, a., 4); another form in imitation of the F. pron. was jaunty, jaunty, now jaunty. From the OF. form of the same word is reg. derived the E. gentile, while gentile, except in the obs. sense 'genteel,' is directly from the L. See gentle, gentile, genty, jaunty.] 1. Polite; well-bred; decorous in manners or behavior; refined: as, genteel company. The colony [New Haven] was under the conduct of as holy, and as prudent, and as genteel persons as most that ever visited these nooks of America.
C. Mather, Mag. Chris., i, 6.

A genteel man, brother of the Calumac of Glegg, came to see me, whom I had seen at the Agn's.
Pucke, Description of the East, I, 123.

Isn't he a handsome man? — tell me that. — A genteel man? a pretty figure of a man?
Sheridan, The Rivals, iv, 2.

2. Adapted to, suitable for, or characteristic of polite society; free from vulgarity or meanness in appearance, quality, amount, etc.; elegant; becoming; adequate: as, genteel manners; a genteel address; genteel comedy; a genteel income or allowance. [Mercher] soon returned and took a house in Covent garden, painting portraits and pictures of familiar life in a genteel style of his own, and with a little Watteau.
Walpole, Anecdotes of Painting, IV, III.

Whoever supposes that Lady Austen's fortune is precarious is mistaken. I can assure you . . . that it is both genteel and perfectly safe.
Comper.

The crowd was uncomfortable, and . . . there was not a genteel face to be seen.
Jane Austen, Northanger Abbey, p. 30.

3. Fashionable; stylish; à la mode. 'Tis the most genteel and received wear now, sir.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, I, 1.

Do now send a genteel conveyance for them; for, I assure you, they were most of them used to ride in their own carriages.
Sheridan, School for Scandal, iv, 1.

He endeavors hard to make rascality genteel, by converting rascals into coxcombs.
Whipple, Ess. and Rev., II, 112.

Genteel business (thent'). See business. — The genteel, that which is genteel; the manners of well-bred or fashionable society; "the fashionable."

Mr. Adams, delightful as he is, has no pretension to "the genteel."
R. L. Stevenson, Some Gentlemen in Fiction.

— Syn. Gentel, polite, well-mannered, polished. Genteel refers to the outward chiefly; polite to the outward as an expression of inward refinement and kindness. Gentel has lately tended to express a somewhat fastidious pride of achievement, of family position, and the like. Genteel is often largely negative, meaning free from what is low, vulgar, or connected with the uncultivated classes; polite is positive and active, meaning that one acts in a certain way. Polite has, however, a passive meaning, that of 'polished': as, polite society, polite literature. See polite.

genteelize (jen-tél'iz), v. t.; pret. and pp. gentelized, ppr. gentelizing. [gentel + -ize.] To render genteel. [Rare.]

A man cannot dress but his ideas get cloth'd at the same time; and if he dresses like a gentleman, every one of them stands presented to his imagination gentelized along with him.
Sterne, Tristram Shandy, ix, 13.

genteelly (jen-tél'i), adv. In a genteel manner; in the manner of well-bred people.

Most exactly, neigently, genteelly dress'd!
Steele, Grief à la Mode, II, 1.

I have long neglected him as being a prodigal or (as Mr. Browne more genteelly calls him) a privileged writer, who takes the liberty to say any thing, and whose reproach is no scandal.
Waterland, Works, X, 414.

genteelness (jen-tél'nes), n. The state or quality of being genteel; gentility. [Rare.]

Next to him [Corregio] Parmegiano has dignified the genteelness of modern effeminacy, by uniting it with the simplicity of the ancients and the grandeur and severity of Michael Angelo.
Sir J. Reynolds, Discourses, iv.

Gentle's green. See green.

genthite (gen'thit), n. [After a mineralogist, Dr. F. A. Genth of Pennsylvania (born 1822).] A hydrous silicate of nickel and magnesium, occurring in amorphous stalactitic incrustations.

gentiana (jen'-shian), n. [< ME. gencyan, < OF. gentiane = Sp. Pg. genciana, < L. gentiana, Gr. γέντιος, also gentian; gentian; said to have been named after an Illyrian king Gentius, Gr. Γέντιος, who was the first to discover its properties.] The common name for species of the genus Gentiana. The official gentian, affording the gentian-root of pharmacists, is the G. lutea, a tall rhizomatous species of southern and central Europe, though the roots of other species, as of G. pycnantha and G. pannonica, are frequently substituted for it. The more common American gentians are the fringed gentian (G. crinita), with showy sky-blue, delicately fringed corollas, and the closed gentian (G. Andrieuxii) and soapwort gentian (G. Saponaria), both with nearly closed corollas.

Gentian (Gentiana lutea).

More sad than cherry, making in good sooth,
Like the fringe d gentian, a late autumn spring.
Lovell, Legend of Britany, l. 10.

False gentian, Platycodon grandiflorus, a gentianaceous plant of Europe, northern Asia, and western North America. — Horse-gentian, Trientalis perfoliata, a caprifoliaceous plant of North America, with a bitter root. — Spurred gentian, Halimolobos, a gentianaceous plant of North America, the corolla of which has 4 or 5 spurs.

Gentiana (jen'-shian), n. [< L. gentiana; see gentian.] A genus of plants, the type of the order Gentianaceae. They are perennial or annual herbs, with opposite, entire, and glabrous leaves, and usually showy, bright colored flowers. There are about 180 species, found in the mountains and temperate regions of the northern hemisphere, throughout the Andes, and very sparingly in Australia and New Zealand; over 40 are natives of the United States. The flowers are usually blue, but are sometimes yellow, white, or (in the Andes) red. All the species are characterized by an extremely bitter principle without astringency or acidity, on which account the roots of various species, especially of the European G. lutea, are used in medicine as a tonic. See gentian. — Gentiana blue. Same as spirit-blue.

Gentianaceae (jen'-shian-nā'-sē-ā), n. pl. [< L. gentiana + -aceae.] A natural order of gamopetalous exogens, including about 50 genera and 500 widely distributed species. They are smooth bitter herbs, with mostly opposite, entire, and sessile leaves, regular flowers, and a usually one-celled capsule with numerous small seeds. Besides the typical genus, Gentiana, the other principal genera are Limonium, Swertia, and Enkhydra. The order also includes the familiar genera Sabatia and Prosera, and the bog bean, Menyanthes, which is remarkable in the order for its alternate, petiolate, and mostly trifoliate leaves.

gentianaceous (jen'-shian-nā'-shius), a. Pertaining to or belonging to the Gentianaceae.

gentianal (jen'-shian-al), a. [< gentian + -al.] Pertaining to the gentians, or to the Gentianaceae.

gentian-bitter (jen'-shian-bit'-er), n. A more or less pure gentiopern.

gentianella (jen'-shian-nel'-ā), n. [< L. gentiana, gentian; see gentian.] 1. A common name for Gentiana acutula, a dwarf perennial species of the Alps, bearing large, beautiful, intensely blue flowers. — 2. A particular shade of blue.

gentian-spirit (jen'-shian-spir'-it), n. An alcoholic liquor produced by the vinous fermentation of an infusion of gentian. It is much drunk by the Swiss. Imp. Diet.

gentianwort (jen'-shian-wört), n. A plant belonging to the order Gentianaceae.

gentil, a. and n. A Middle English form of gentile.

gentile (jen'-til or -till), a. and n. [In defn. 1, 2, 3 directly from L.; in def. 4 from F. gentil, m., gentil, f., gentil, also, formerly, genteel, gentil (see genteel, gentle), = Sp. gentil = Pg. gentio = It. gentile, gentile, < L. gentilis, of or belonging to the same gens or clan, of or belonging to the same nation or people, pl. gentiles, foreigners as opposed to Romans, in L.L. opposed to Jewish or Christian, the heathen, pagans, with sing. gentile, a heathen, < gen(-)s, a tribe, family, clan: see gens.] 1. a. 1. Of or belonging to a gens or clan; of the same clan or family.

Another result [of Solon's policy] was to increase the number of people who stood outside these gentile and phratric divisions which were concomitants of the patriarchal type and of personal rule.

U. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 488.
The Agnatic Gentile groups, consisting of all the descendants, through males, of a common male ancestor, began to exist in every association of men and women which held together for more than a single generation.

Maine, Early Law and Custom, p. 287, note A.
2 (in this sense only jen'-til). In Script., belonging to a non-Jewish nation; pertaining to a heathen people; in the United States, applied by the Mormons to persons not of their church. [Commonly with a capital letter.]

Now again is there a positive nucleus of gentile influence . . . renewed in the city [Salt Lake].

S. Bowles, The New West, p. 209.

3. In gram., expressing nationality, local extraction, or place of abode; describing or designating a person as belonging to a certain race, country, district, town, or locality by birth or otherwise; as, a gentile noun (as Greek, Arab, Englishman, etc.); a gentile adjective (as Floristine, Spanish, etc.). — 4. Worthy of a gentleman; genteel; honorable. See genteel, gentle.

We make art servile, and the trade gentle (Yet both corrupted with ingenious guile)
To compass earth, and with her empty store
To fill our arms, and grasp one handful more Quarles, Emblems, II. 2.

Till at last the greatest slavery to sin be accounted but good humour, and a gentle compliance with the fashions of the world.
Stillingfleet, Sermons, I. 11.

For Plotinus, his deportment was so gentle, that his audience was composed of a confluence of the noblest and most illustrious personages of Rome.

Bp. Parker, Platonick Philos., p. 31.

— Syn. 2. See gentile, n.

II. n. 1. A member of a gens or clan.

The Agnati were a group of actual or adoptive descendants, through males, from a known and remote ancestor. The Gentiles were a similar group of descendants from an ancestor long since forgotten.

Maine, Early Law and Custom, p. 283, note A.

2 (jen'-til). In Script., one belonging to a non-Jewish nation; any person not a Jew; a heathen; sometimes, in later writings, one who is neither a Jew nor a Christian. [Commonly with a capital in this use and the next.]

In the beginning of Christianity, the Fathers with Contragenes, and Contra Gentiles, they were all one. But after all were Christians, the better part of People still retained the name of Gentiles, throughout the four Provinces of the Roman Empire.

Selden, Table Talk, p. 52.

3 (jen'-til). Among the Mormons, one who is not of their church. — 4. In gram., a noun or an adjective derived from the name of a country or locality, and designating its natives or people; as, the words Italian, American, Athenian, are gentiles. — Syn. 2. Gentile, Barbarian, Pagan, Heathen. A barbarian was to the Greeks a foreigner, especially one of alien speech. In the New Testament the word seems to mean a stranger or foreigner, but in Rom. 1:14 one not a Greek, and the related not cultivated. 1. Heathen, or the word of which it was a translation, signified to the Jews one not a Jew, but later one who was neither Jew nor Christian, or from the Roman standpoint, one not a Roman. Pagan and heathen are primarily the same in meaning, but pagan is sometimes distinctively applied to those nations that, although worshipping false gods, are more civilized, as the Greeks and Romans, and heathen to uncivilized idolaters, as the tribes of Africa. A Mohammedan is not counted as a pagan, much less a heathen. See ingentile.

Glory, honour, and power, to every man that worketh good to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile. Rom. ii. 10.

The long struggle between the heathen manners, and moral sentiments of the barbarians and the totally opposite characteristics of Roman life.

Selden, Table Talk, p. 41.

A Pagan, snatched in a second moment,
So might I, standing on the pleasant bank
Have glimpses that would make me less forlorn Wentworth, Minor Sonnets, l. 53.

The missionaries did not disdain to work upon the senses of the heathen by anything that could impart a higher dignity to the Christian cultus as compared with the pagan.

Gentile, Tent Method, Chron. I. 6.

gentilesse, n. [< gen gentilese; < ME. gentilese, < OF. gentilese, < gentry, gentility, nobility, pl. gentilese, pretty conceits, devices, = F. gentilese (= Pr. Sp. Pg. gentileza = It. gentilezza, < gentile, gentle, noble, etc.; see gentle, Gentrice and gentry, q. v., are other forms of the same word.)] Gentle birth; character or manners of a person of gentle birth; courtesy; complaisance; delicacy.

For some folk will be wondrous richere,
And some for strokes, and some for gentilese.

Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 196.

Her years advancing her to the use of reason there was a pretty emulation among them who should render her mistress of most gentilese, and teach her the most witty and subtle discourses, to serve her upon all occasions.

Chemical Hist. of France (1686).
gentilish (jen'-til-ish), a. [< gentle + -ish.] Heathenish; pagan.

I cannot but yet further admit, on the other side, how any man, . . . being a Christian, can assume such extraordinary honour and worship to himself, while the Kingdom of Christ our common King and Lord is hid to this world, and such gentilish imitation forbid in express words by himself to all his disciples. Milton, Free Commonwealth.

gentiliam (jen'-til-iz-m), n. [= Sp. Pg. gentiliama; < gen gentile + -iam.] The state or character of being gentile or a gentile; formerly, heathenism; paganism; the worship of false gods.

A free Commonwealth . . . plainly commended, or rather enjoined by our Saviour himself, to all Christians, not without remarkable disallowance, and the brand of gentiliism upon kingships. Milton, Free Commonwealth.

A proselyte could not be admitted from gentilism or idolatry, unless he gave up his name to the religion.

Jos. Taylor, Works (ed. 1836), II. 408.

gentilial (jen'-til-ial), a. Same as gentilitions.

It will . . . be found upon examination that, according to the historians, the public devotion was principally directed towards gentilial, tutelary, and local deities.

Farmer, Worship of Human Spirits, III. § 1.

Patros, the local name, from which the gentilial noun "Patrosim" is formed, occurs frequently in the writings of the Jewish prophets, where it designates, apparently, a district of Egypt. G. Davidson, Origin of Nations, II. 318.

gentilitions (jen'-til-iz-shun), a. [= Sp. gentilitio, < L. gentilitius, more correctly gentiliticus, belonging to a particular clan or gens, also national, < gentilis; see gentile.] Pertaining to a gens or aggregate family; peculiar to a gens, people, or nation.

Nor is it proved or probable that Sergius changed the name of Boecadi Porco, for this was his surname or gentilitious appellation. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., vi. 18.

Sir Thomas Browne uses with effect the argument that a mixed race cannot have a national smell. Among a mongrel people, he contends, no odor could be gentilitious. P. Robinson, Under the Sun, p. 302.

gentility (jen'-til-i-ti), n. [< ME. gentylete, < OF. gentile, gentle birth, F. gentilité = Sp. gentilidad = Pg. gentilidade = It. gentilità, heathenism, < L. gentilitas (-is), relationship in the same gens, i. e. heathenism, < gentilis, gentile; see gentile, gentle.] 1. The quality or state of belonging to a certain gens, clan, or family; gentile relationship or stock. [Obsolete or archaic.]

The surname is the name of the gentilitis and stocks, which the gentile doth take of the father always, as the old Romans did. Sir T. Smith, Commonwealth, III. 8.

"Prohibition of marriage would surely endanger" the gentility of the nation. N. and Q., 7th ser., IV. 155.

The grammarian observes that there is a certain agnation and gentility among words. All the cases of the noun Amillius are descended from the nominative, just as all the members of the gens Amillii, all the Amilli, are descended from a single original Amillius. [Varro, de Lingua Latina, VIII. 4.] The Romans, therefore, regarded gentility as a kinship among men not essentially different from agnation. Maine, Early Law and Custom, p. 283, note A.

2. Noble or gentle birth.

By him yelpeth of late gentility, nor that by weneth by a gentle woe [They boast of their gentility, for they think to be of gentle blood].

Agamemnon of Iuvet (E. E. T. 8), p. 68.

Either the commoner only must be wealthy, and the gentel and noble men needy and miserable, or else, excluding gentility, all men must be of one degree and sort, and a new name provided.

Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, I. 2.

3. People of good birth; gentry.

Gavelkind must needs in the end make a poor gentility.

Sir J. Davies, State of Ireland.

4. Gentile character; paganism; heathenism.

Place,lander, or gentile, as well within the coasts and limits of gentility as within the dominions and belongings of the gentile Emperor and Duke.

Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 272.

When the people began to capt the falsehood of oracles, whereupon all gentility was built, their heart were vitally smitten from it.

Hooker, Purges, Polity, v. § 2.

5. The quality or state of being gentel; condition, appearance, or manner characteristic of polite society; genteel behavior; fashionable-ness; stylishness.

Thus a gentle heart should ever show
By courteous the fruit of true gentility.

R. J. Harrington.

Neither did they establish their claims to gentility at the expense of the hitherto, for as yet those offenders against the pockets of society, and the tranquillity of all aspiring young gentlemen, were unknown to New Amsterdam.

Irvine, Knickerbocker, p. 178.

In the elder English dramatists, . . . there is a constant recognition of gentility, as if a noble behaviour were as easily marked in the society of their age as color is in our American population. Benson, Essays, 1st ser., p. 222.

gentilize (jen'ti-liz), v.; pret. and pp. gentilized, ppr. gentilizing. [Formerly also gentleize; < gentil (now gentle) or gentile + -ize. Cf. gentleize.] I. trans. To render gentle, polite, or gentlemanly; raise to the rank of gentlemen. [Rare.]

Dissembling breakers, made of all deceptions,
Who falsify your meanness and your wealths
To enrich your souls, and your vanity sons
To gentelize with proud professions.
Sylvestre, tr. of De Barthes Weekes, l. 3.
Religion is the most gentlemanly thing in the world.
It alone will gentelize. If unmixed with cant. Coleridge.

II. intrans. 1. To live like a gentile, or like a heathen.

God's known benediction against the gentelizing Israhelites, who, though they were governed in a Commonwealth of God's own ordinance, he only their King, they his peculiar People, yet . . . beheld for a King.
Milton, Free Commonwealth.

2. To play the gentleman. Norden, Surveyor's Dialogue (1608).

gentillyt, adv. See gently. Chaucer.

gentiopiricrin (jen'ti-ō-pik'rīn), n. [genti(an) + Gr. πικρός, bitter.] The bitter principle of gentian ($C_{20}H_{30}O_{12}$), a neutral body crystallizing in colorless needles which are freely soluble in water. U. S. Dispensatory.

The L. gentilis appears in E. in many different forms, namely, gentle, gentel, gentile, and abbr. gent, genty, jauntily, genty, etc.; see these forms.] I. a. 1. Of good birth or family; well-born; specifically, belonging to the gentry as distinguished from the nobility: as, the studies of noble and gentle youth.

Kyngs Brangone hadde a gentill lady to his wif, that was daughter to kyngs Adryan, the Emperour of Constantinoble, that was myghty and riche.
Morte (E. E. T. S.), II, 156

Clerk like, experience d, with h no less adorns
Our gentry than our parents noble names.
In whose success we are gentle. Shak., W. T., l. 2.
I am as gentle as yourself, as freeborn
Fletcher (and another), Loves Pilgrimage, II, 1.

2. Pertaining to or characteristic of good birth or station; honorable; respectable; refined.

Gentile of nurture, a noble of lineage.
Was non that bare a name, that did sulke vassalage
Rob. of Brunne, p. 188.
A hedge-born swain
That doth presume to bond of gentle blood.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iv, 1.

3. Of well-bred character or quality; gracious; courteous; kindly and considerate; not rough or harsh; mild; soothing: as, a gentle nurse; a gentle nature, manner, voice.

Sir Gawain saide that he hadde well devised, and that of gentill herte moved this purpos.
Morte (E. E. T. S.), III, 613

The gentle minde by gentle deeds is knowne Spenser, F. Q., VI, iii, 1.
It argues an attractive and gentle nature in him [Aske], that his serving man died of grief when he was arrested.
R. W. Dixon, Hist. Church of Eng., vi.

4. Tame; docile; tractable; peaceable; not wild or refractory: as, a gentle horse or hawk.

The ruffians . . . took
And bore him to the naked hall of Doorn
(His gentle charger following him unled)
Emerson, Gentle

5. Improved by cultivation; ameliorated; domesticated.

If thou wilt take of a gentle tree
Not while attle alle withoute asperite,
When it is two yere olde or III, to thive, Goode is to sette it.
Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 88.

6. Soft; mild in action, performance, or use; not rude or boisterous: as, a gentle breeze; a gentle tap; a gentle tone.

The quality of mercy is not strain'd;
It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven
Upon the place beneath. Shak., M. of V., iv, 1.
The path of the gentle winds is seen,
Where the small waves dance, and the young woods lean.
Bryant, Song of the Stars.

7. Refreshing; reviving.

There groweth the fulle gode Wyn, that men clepen Bigon, that is fulle myghty and gentle in drynkyng.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 200.

8. Gradual; easy; not steep; moderate in degree; not sharply defined: as, a gentle slope; the gentle curves of a river or a figure.

At certain places the inclination changes from a gentler to a steeper slope.
Tyndall, Forces of Water, p. 106.

Shoreward, sometimes in traces, often with inclines so gentle as hardly to be traced, the tidal waves steal softly to the river's bank.
Harper's Mag., LXVII, 167.

Gentle falcon. Same as falcon gentle. Gentle reader, courteous, considerate reader: a phrase common until recently especially in the preface of books.

Receive, thankfully, gentle reader, these sermons faithfully collected, without any shadow of suspicion of anything in the same being added or abridged.
Lutimer, Sermons (1649), Pref.

The gentle craft, a descriptive phrase used specifically for shortmaking and (after Isaac Walton) for angling.

Marry, because you have drunk with the King,
And the King hath so graciously pledged you,
You shall no more be called shortmakers;
But you and yours, to the world's end,
Shall be called the trade of the gentle craft.
Greene, George a Greene (1590).

And since that, one of the gentle craft, who took me in for the excellent gift he had in tickling a lady's heel.
The Wizard (MS. Play, 1640).

He [Venator] agrees to accompany Piscator in his sport, adopts him as his master and guide, and in time becomes initiated into the practice and mystery of the gentle craft.
Chambers, Cyc. of Eng. Lit., Isaac Walton

The gentle (or gentler) sex, women collectively; womankind, opposed to the stronger sex. Syn. 3 and 4. Gentle, Mild, Soft, Tame, Mild, placid, dove-like, quiet, peaceful, pacific, moderate, element, tender, merciful, kind, indulgent; tractable, docile. Of the first six words, meek applies only to personal character and to behavior. It is wholly good in the Bible, and now indicates a defect of character only occasionally by hyperbole. The others may be either physical or moral. The meaning of blond is founded upon the pleasant feeling of warm breezes, etc.; it suggests a peculiarly soothing impression, as a blond demure, or an artful endeavor to make such an impression. Soft suggests that which yields somewhat upon physical contact, and hence anything not making firm resistance or striking hard. As to animals, gentle refers to nature, being opposed to rough or mean, while tame is opposed to wild, and refers to familiarity with man, as, a tame duck. Tame is used in a bad sense of spirit and of intellectual productions: as, a tame spirit, some very tame remarks. Mild goes further than gentle in expressing softness of nature, it is chiefly a word of nature or character, while gentle is chiefly a word of action. Mild is sometimes opposed to arrogant, factious, etc.

He [Roger Williams] does not show himself a very strong or very wise man, but a thoroughly gentle and good one.
Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 246

Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth.
Mat. v, 5.

As meek as the man Moses, and withal
As bold as in Agrippa's presence Paul Compter, Exposition, l. 414.

Wherefore cannot I be Like things of the season gay, like the beautiful season blond?
Tennyson, Maud, iv.

A soft answer turneth away wrath.
Prov. xv, 1.

The historian himself, tame and creeping as he is in his ordinary style, warm in sympathy with the Emperor [Cæsar].
De Quincey, Philos. of Rom. Hist.

My mother was as mild as any saint,
Half canonized by all that look'd on her.
Johnson, Princess, l.

Flood worms and snails, or crawling gentle small.
John Devereux (Arber's Eng. Garner), l. 173.

Gentles, which are grubs hatched in meat that has been long blown, are a favorite bait in Europe; but, in spite of their beautiful name, are horrid objects, and not in vogue with us.
R. B. Roosevelt, Game Fish (1884), p. 33.

gentle (jen'tl), v. t.; pret. and pp. gentled, ppr. gentling. [Gentle, a.] 1. To make or constitute gentle, or as if gentle; place in the rank of gentlemen; raise from a vulgar or ignoble condition.

Be he ne'er so vile,
This day shall gentle his condition.
Shak., Hen. V., iv, 3.

And all this raking toyle, and carke and care,
Is for his clownish first borne soune and heire,
Who must be gentled by his ill got peile;
Though he, to get it, got the diuill himselfe.
John Taylor, Works (1630).

2. To make gentle in manner or appearance; render mild and amiable; soften; subdue: as, to gentle a colt.

B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, i, 2.

3. A man of good breeding, courtesy, and kindness; hence, a man distinguished for fine sense of honor, strict regard for his obligations, and consideration for the rights and feelings of others.

Bare the so thou have no blame;
Than men wille say thereafter
That a gentylman was heere.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 22.

In the days gentilman were so trowe that thei wolde rather lese their lif than be for sworn.
Morte (E. E. T. S.), III, 657.

For what, I pray, is a gentleman, what properties hath he, what qualities are characteristic or peculiar to him, whereby he is distinguished from others and raised above the vulgar? are they not especially two, courage and courtesy?
Barrow, Works, III, xxi.

The appellation of gentleman is never to be affixed to a man's circumstances, but to his behaviour in them.
Steele, Tatler, No. 377.

If at this day the gentleman is the creation rather of culture than of Christianity, that is because it is easier to conform to a conventional standard of good taste than to an inward law.
H. N. Ozonham, Short Studies, p. 220.

The gentleman is a man of truth, kind of his own actions, and expressing that lordship in his behaviour.
Emerson, Manners.

4. As a polite form of speech, a man in general; any man, but particularly, where discrimination is used, any man of respectable appearance or good manners; in the plural, a form of address to a company of men, or to all the men in an audience: as, welcome, gentlemen; ladies and gentlemen. This use of gentleman for men, to the neglect of gradation, like that of lady for women, is often carried to excess, and is to be avoided except where required by the unquestioned rules of politeness. See lady.

A gentleman, a friend of mine,
He came on purpose to visit me.
Lord Jamie Douglas (Child's Ballads, IV, 138).

A Finch . . . thus pert replied:
Methinks the gentleman, quoth she,
Opposite in the apple tree,
By his good will would keep us single.
Cooper, Fairing Time Anticipated.

It is the "one thing needful," this genuineness; work in which it is found has value, other work has no right to exist, and had better be destroyed.
J. R. Seeley, Nat. Religion, p. 155.

genupectoral (jen-u-pek'tó-rál), a. [L. genu = E. knee, + pectus (pector), breast.] In pathol., pertaining to the knees and the breast: as, in the genupectoral position (that is, with the knees drawn up toward the breast).

genus (jé'nus), n.; pl. genera (jen'e-rá), rarely genuses (jé'nus-es). [In earlier use in the form gender (see gender, n.); C. L. L. genus (gener), birth, origin, a race, sort, kind (C. Gr. γένος (gēnos, orig. gēnos*), descent, origin, a race, stock, etc., sex, gender, a generation, etc., = E. kin, q. v.), C. Gr. γένος (gēnos, OL. genere, beget, produce, = Gr. γίγναι, 2d aor. γίγναι, mid. and pass., be born, become, be = Skt. √ jam, beget. The words derived from the L. and Gr. √ gen, γίγναι, are very numerous: from L. are genus, gender, n., gender, r., engender, general, gener-ate, generic, generous, congenit, etc.; genus, genial, congenial, ingenious, ingenue, genet, etc.; genus, gentile, gentle, gentel, gently, jaunty, etc.; genital, gentile, genuine, ingenious, indigenous, progeny, progenitor, etc.; from Gr. are genealogy, genesis, biogenesis, etc.; genetic, heterogeneous, homogeneous, endogen, exogen, hydrogen, oxygen, etc.; gonocally, gonophore, etc.; cosmogony, geogony, thelogy, etc., and many other words in -gen, -genic, -genous, -gony, -gony, etc.] A kind; a sort; a class. Technically (a) In tone, that which can be produced of things differing in species; a class having other classes under it.

We collect things under comprehensive ideas, with names annexed to them, into genera and species, i. e. into "kinds" and "sorts."
Lücke, Human Understanding, II. xxvii, 6

(b) In zool. and bot., a classificatory group ranking next above the species, containing a group of species (sometimes a single species) possessing certain structural characters different from those of any other. The value assigned to a genus is wholly arbitrary; that is, it is entirely a matter of opinion or current usage what characters shall be considered generic and thus constitute a genus; and genera are constantly modified and shifted by specialists, the tendency being mostly toward restriction of genera, with the consequent multiplication of their number, and the coining of new generic names. A genus has no natural, much less necessary, distinction, its meaning being at best a matter of expert opinion; and the same is true of the species, family, order, etc. A genus of the animal kingdom in the time of Linnaeus and other early naturalists was a group of species approximately equivalent to a modern family, sometimes even to an order. Probably upward of 100,000 generic names of as many supposed genera have been coined or used in zoology; those in current use present are estimated at about 50,000, or an average of about (rather more than one) genus for every five species in the animal kingdom. In botany the genera are less restricted and on average a much larger number of species, the 9,000 plant kingdom genera, for example, including 100,000 species. The usable name of any genus is that which has priority of publication, if it has been properly published and characterized, and is not the same as the prior name of some other genus. The names of the genus and the species (together) form the scientific name of an animal or plant. In writing the technical name of any animal or plant, the generic term always precedes the specific, and begins with a capital letter, as, Musca domestica, the house fly, where Musca is the genus, and domestica differentiates the species. Genera are often subdivided into lesser groups called subgenera. (See subgenus.) A group of genera constitutes a family or subfamily. The name of a genus as such has properly no plural. If a genus name, as for example Ada, is pluralized, as Adas, it means, not two or more genera named Ada, but either (a) all the species of Ada, or (b) some supergeneric group of which Ada is the type. The former usage is loose, or somewhat cant, the latter is frequent and regular in zoology. A genus name is always supposed to be Latin (though its derivation is in the great majority of cases from the Greek), and its plural, if used, is in Latin form; but when it is also Anglicized an English plural is used, as, the chinchillas, the animals of the genus Chinchilla.

Genera are most closely allied groups of animals, differing . . . simply in the ultimate structural peculiarities of some of their parts; and this is, I believe, the best definition which can be given of genera.
Jussieu, Essay on Classification, II. 45.

(c) In old music, a formula or method of dividing the treble-chord. Three genera were distinguished: the diatonic, in which whole steps or "tones" were used; the chromatic, in which only half-steps or semitones were used; and the enharmonic, in which intervals less than a half-step were used. — Highest, supreme, or most general genus, in logic, a genus which has no higher or supergenus. — Homonymous genus, a genus to which the different species under it do not belong in the same sense; an equivocal genus. — Subaltern or middle genus, a genus which is at the same time a species of a higher genus.

geny. [L. or NL. -genia, C. Gr. -γενία, C. -γενή, the form in comp. of γενος = L. gones, kind, genus, C. √ γεν, produce, bear: see gonus.] A terminal element meaning 'production, generation,' etc., in some abstract compound nouns of Greek origin, usually accompanied by concrete nouns in -gen and by adjectives in -genous. See -gen and -genous.

Genypterus (jé-nip'te-rus), n. [NL., C. Gr. γένυς, chin, jaw, = E. chin, and πτερον, wing, fin, = E. feather.] A genus of fishes, of the family Ophidiidae. A New Zealand species, G. blacodes, known as the ling or cloudy bay-cod, attains a length of 5 feet and a weight of from 15 to 20 pounds.

genys (jé'nis), n. [See gonys.] In ornith., same as gonys. Sunderall.

geo (jé'ó), n. [North. Sc., also written geoe, rarely geu, gor; C. lecl. gĩa, a chasm or rift in fells or crags.] A narrow inlet walled in by steep cliffs.

A strange wild land of stacks and skerries, of voes and geos, and of cliffs and caves.
R. Tudor, The Orkneys and Shetlands.

geo-. [L. geo-, C. Gr. γη-, very rarely γιο-, combining form of Attic and Ionic γη, Doric γιά, poet. Ionic γία, also αία, the earth, land, a land or country.] An element in many compound words of Greek origin, meaning 'the earth' or 'earth,' or 'land.'

geoblast (jé'ó-blást), n. [C. Gr. γη, earth, + βλαστός, a germ: see blastus.] In bot., a plumule which in germination rises from underground, the cotyledons remaining buried, as in the pea.

geobotanical (jé'ó-bó-tan'i-kál), a. Relating to geographical botany, or the distribution of plants; phytogeographical. Nature, XXXVII: 570.

Geocarcinidae (jé'ó-kär-sin'i-dé), n. pl. [NL., C. Geocarcinus (cf. Geocarcinus) + -idae.] Same as Geocarcinidae.

Geocarcinus (jé'ó-kär'si-nus), n. Same as Geocarcinus.

geocentric (jé'ó-sen'trik), a. [C. Gr. γη, the earth, + κεντρον, center: see center.] In astron., having reference to the earth for its center; in relation to the earth as a center; hence, seen from the earth: a term applied to the place of a planet as it would be seen from the center of the earth, in opposition to its heliocentric place as conceived to be seen from the center of the sun.

Geocentric latitude, the latitude of a body's geocentric place. See celestial latitude, under latitude. — Geocentric longitude, the longitude of a body's geocentric place. See celestial longitude, under longitude.

geocentrical (jé'ó-sen'tri-kál), a. Same as geocentric.

geocentrically (jé'ó-sen'tri-kál-i), adv. In a geocentric manner.

Geocichla (jé'ó-sik'li), n. [NL. (Kuhl, 1823 or earlier), C. Gr. γη, the earth, ground, + αίχλη, a thrush.] A large genus of turdoid or cichlo-morphic passerine birds, belonging to the subfamily Turdinae; the ground-thrushes, of which there are about 40 species, of markedly terrestrial habits, and having a peculiar pattern of coloration on the wings. These thrushes are chiefly Asiatic (including the islands of the oriental region sub-logically related to Asia), but several are African, and a few Australian. None occur in Europe regularly. See ground-thrush, 2.

geocichline (jé'ó-sik'lin), a. [C. Geocichla + -ine.] Resembling a ground-thrush; characteristic of or peculiar to the genus Geocichla; as, a geocichline thrush; "wing geocichline or psophocichline." Seebohm, Cat. Birds, British Museum, p. 146.

Geococcyx (jé'ó-kok'siks), n. [NL., C. Gr. γη, the earth, + κοκκύς, a cuckoo: see coccyx.] A genus of birds, of the family (Cuculidae or Cuculidae), and subfamily Saunderinae. They are characterized by having the head crested, the plumage coarse, variegated, and lustrous on the upper part, the wings short and vaulted, the tail very long, of ten graduated tapering feathers, and the feet zygodactylous and large and strong, in adaptation to the terrestrial habits of the species. G. californianus is the typical species. It is a common bird of the southwestern United States, where it is variously known as the chaparral-cock, road-runner, snaky-riller, peewee, and ground-cuckoo. Another species, G. affinis, occurs in Mexico. See cat under chaparral-cock.

Geococcyx (jé'ó-kok'siks), n. pl. [NL., pl. of Geococcyx.] A superfamily of heteropterous insects, the land-bugs or Geocoris. Burmester, 1895.

Geocoris (jē-ōk'ō-sis), n. pl. [NL. (Uhler, 1877), < Geocoris + -is.] A subfamily of Leptogasteridae, typified by the genus Geocoris, having no basal areolet to the membrane. There are genera of small and inconspicuous species found in Europe and both Americas. Also Geocoridae, Geocorinae.

Geocoris (jē-ōk'ō-sis), n. [NL. (Fallen, 1814), < Gr. γῆ, the earth, + κόρις, a bug.] A genus of heteropterous insects, of the family Lygaeidae, typical of the subfamily Geocorinae, of which about 12 United States species are known.

Geocorism (jē-ō-kor'is-m), n. pl. [NL., an irreg. pl. of Geocoris.] A section of heteropterous insects, founded by Latreille (1827) in distinction from Hydrocorism; the land-bugs. They all live in the open air, instead of in the water, and are for the most part found upon the leaves of trees and plants, though some do not quit the ground, and others are aquatic to the extent of living upon the water. They are characterized by the free antennae, longer than the head, and inserted between the eyes near the anterior margin of the head. The great majority of Heteroptera belong to this division, among them the common bedbug. It is a group of varying and indefinite extent. Also called Geocoris (Burmeister, 1835) and Geocorinae (Spinola, 1857), Amecurus or Ameurinae and Gemmacorinae.

geocorinite (jē-ō-kor'it), n. [< Gr. γῆ, the earth, + κόρις, Saturn, the alchemistic name of lead, + -ite.] A lead-gray ore with a metallic luster, consisting of antimony, lead, sulphur, and a little arsenic.

geocyclic (jē-ō-sik'lik), a. [< Gr. γῆ, the earth, + κύκλος, a circle; see cyclic.] Of or pertaining to the revolutions of the earth. Geocyclic machine, a machine intended to present in what manner the changes of the seasons, the increase and decrease of the length of the day, etc., are caused by the inclination of the axis of the earth to the plane of the ecliptic at an angle of 66½°, and how the axis, by remaining parallel to itself in all points of its path round the sun, invariably preserves this inclination.

geode (jē-ōid), n. [= F. gode, < L. godes, a certain precious stone, < Gr. γῆ, earth-like, + -eidos, form.] A concretionary stone or pebble, hollow inside, and often having the walls of the cavity lined with crystals.

Geode (Quartz)

Geodes of quartz are far more common than any others. Geodes are of frequent occurrence in the limestone rocks of various regions as in the Niagara limestone in western New York, and in the Mississippi valley, in the Keokuk group, which is of Carboniferous age. In this division of the series there is also called geode-bed, in which geodes ranging from 1 to 20 inches in diameter, are abundant. Many of these are beautiful for their agate structure, or for their lining of druse quartz; some also contain crystallized calcite, dolomite, blende, or pyrites.

Geodephaga, n. pl. See Geodephaga.

geodephagous, a. See geodephagous.

geodesia (jē-ō-dē-si-ā), n. Same as geodesy.

geodesian (jē-ō-dē-si-an), n. [< geodesy + -ian.] Same as geodesist.

geodesic (jē-ō-dēs'ik), a. and n. [= F. géodésique = Sp. geodésico = Pg. It. geodesico, as geodesy + -ic.] a. Same as geodetic. Geodesic curvature, See curvature. Geodesic curve, Same as geodesic line.

Geodesic line, a line so drawn upon a surface as to coincide with the position of a string stretched across the surface between any two points in the line. The geodesic line is the shortest or longest line on the surface between any two points in it and its osculating plane is everywhere normal to the surface.

II. n. A geodesic line.

geodesical (jē-ō-dēs'ik-al), a. Same as geodetic.

geodesist (jē-ō-dēs'ist), n. [< geodesy + -ist.] One versed in geodesy; a geodesic surveyor. Also geodesman, geodete.

The geodesist may come to owe some of his most important data to the observers of the lunar motions. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXVI, 48.

Geodesmus (jē-ō-dēs'mus), n. [NL., < Gr. γῆ, the earth, + δέσμος, a band.] A genus of monogonoporous dendroecious turbellarians, of the family Geoplaniidae, or land-planarians. Geodesmus bilentus is found in potters' earth.

geodesy (jē-ō-dē-si), n. [= D. G. geodesie = Dan. geodesi = F. géodésie = Sp. Pg. It. geodesia, < Gr. γῆ, the earth, land, + μέτρον, divide.] Formerly, the art of land-surveying in general, but now restricted to that branch of applied mathematics, distinctively called higher geodesy, which investigates the figures and areas of large portions of the earth's surface, the exact determinations of geographical positions and the azimuths of directions, the general figure of the earth, and the variations of the intensity of gravity in different regions, by means of direct observation and measurement. The operations of topography and hydrography are now considered as extraneous to geodesy, but leveling of the most precise kind is included, as well as the observation of the tides. Also geodetics.

Of these facts, further applied, is sprung the feat of geodesy, or land-measuring, more cunningly to measure and survey land, woods, and waters, afar off.

See Pref. to Euclid (1870)

geodete (jē-ō-dēt), n. [< geodesy, with accom. term, as in exepete.] Same as geodesist.

Dangerous ascents and solitary life on the top of high mountains with no other society than that of the few assistants who accompany him, are common occurrences for the geodete. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXX, 244.

geodetic (jē-ō-dēt'ik), a. [< geodesy, with accom. term, as in genetic.] 1. Pertaining to geodesy or to surveying. — 2. Pertaining to the extension of theorems of plane geometry to figures drawn on curved surfaces.

Also geodesic, geodesical, geodetical.

geodetical (jē-ō-dēt'ik-al), a. Same as geodetic. geodetically (jē-ō-dēt'ik-al), adv. In a geodetic manner; in accordance with the principles of geodesy.

geodetics (jē-ō-dēt'iks), n. [Pl. of geodetic; see -ics.] Same as geodesy.

Geodia (jē-ō-dī-ā), n. [NL., < Gr. γῆ, earth-like; see geode.] A genus of sponges, giving name to a family Geodiidae, of the group Tetractinellina or the order Tetractinellida, having remarkably large and stout internal spicules. The genus first appears in the Jurassic period. These fossil sponges have some resemblance to geodes, whence the name.

geodiferous (jē-ō-dif'ē-rus), a. [< geode + -ferous = E. beard.] Containing or abounding in geodes.

geodiid (jē-ō-dī'id), n. A sponge of the family Geodiidae.

Geodiidae (jē-ō-dī'id-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Geodia + -idae.] A family of tetractinellid or tetractinellid choriastidan sponges, typified by the genus Geodia, having small chambers and outlets and a cortex of globose spicules. Also Geodiidae. geodized (jē-ō-dī-zd), a. [< geode + -ize + -ed.] Converted into a geode; having a hollow interior, the walls of the cavity being lined with crystals.

The geodized fossils of the Keokuk limestone. Amer. Jour. Sci., ser. 3, XXX, 578.

Geodromica (jē-ō-drom'ik-ā), n. pl. [NL., < L. geodromicus, < Gr. γῆ, the earth, + δρόμος, a running, < δρομή, run.] A sub-section or series of heteropterous insects, comprising those which are thoroughly terrestrial or aerial. The great group Reductantia are characteristic of the Geodromica, which correspond to the Geocoris minus certain equivocal subgeneric forms.

Geomyda (jē-ō-mī-dā), n. [NL., < Gr. γῆ, the earth, + myda, (myda), (myda), the freshwater tortoise; see Emyda.] A genus of turtles, typical of a subfamily Geomydinae. J. F. Gray, 1834. Also Geomyda.

Geomydina (jē-ō-mī-dī-nā), n. pl. [NL., < Geomyda + -ina.] A subfamily of Emydidae or Cheloniidae, typified by the genus Geomyda. It was proposed for a genus by the head covered with thick and hard skin, the head covered in front with thick, hard, and grooved shields, and the feet very short. The head is very small, and the body is very short. The head is very small, and the body is very short. The head is very small, and the body is very short.

Geoffrea (jē-ō-frē-ā), n. [NL., named in honor of E. F. Geoffroy, a French physician (1672-1731). The name Geoffroy Geoffroy, Geoffroy, E. Geoffroy, Jeffrey Geoffroy is of O.H.G. origin, G. Geoffried, and means 'God peace', see God and frith.] A genus of leguminous trees of tropical America, of which there are four species. The leaves are large, broad, and have a drupe round, edible pod containing 2 seeds. The standard flower is of Brazil, and is one of the most beautiful of the genus.

geog. An abbreviation of geography.

Geogale (jē-ō-gāl), n. [NL., < Gr. γῆ, the earth, + γαλήνη, a sea, a gale.] A genus of small shrew-like insectivorous mammals, of the subfamily Geogalidae, having the tibia and fibula distinct, 3 premolars and 3 molars in each half of the upper jaw, and 2 premolars and 3 molars in each half of the lower. The type and only known species is Geogale madagascariensis (Macleay, 1881) and is about the size of a mouse. Macleay, 1881.

geogalid (jē-ō-gāl'id), n. One of the Geogalidae. Geogalidae (jē-ō-gāl'id-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Geogale + -idae.] A family of Madagascan insectivorous mammals, constituted by the genus Geogale, separated from Oryzoryctes and removed from the family Potamogalidae to form the type of the present group. See Geogale.

Geogallina (jē-ō-gāl'ī-nā), n. pl. [NL., < Geogale + -ina.] A subfamily of Potamogalidae, including the genera Geogale and Hydrogale. See Geogalidae.

geogenic (jē-ō-jen'ik), a. [< geogeny + -ic.] Pertaining to geogeny, or to the theory of the formation of the earth. Also geogenic, geogenical.

geogenous (jē-ō-jē-nus), a. [< Gr. γῆ, the earth, + γένος, produced; see -genous.] In mycology, growing on the earth or on organic matter in the soil; applied to some fungi, in distinction from those that grow upon organic bodies not in the soil.

geogeny (jē-ō-jē-ni), n. [< Gr. γῆ, the earth, + γένος, < γῆ, produce; see -geny.] That branch of geology which relates to the theory of the earth's formation, and especially to the earlier stages of its development, and to its relations as a member of the solar system. Nearly identical in meaning with cosmogony as used by some writers. The word is not in general use among geologists. Also, more correctly, geogony.

Geoglossum (jē-ō-glos'sum), n. [NL., < Gr. γῆ, the earth, + γλῶσσα, the tongue.] Earth-tongue, a genus of ascomycetous fungi found in bogs and meadows, all the species growing upon the earth. There are 7 British and a larger number of American species.

geognosis (jē-ō-gnō'sis), n. [NL.; see geognosy.] Same as geognosy.

He has no bent towards exploration, or the enlargement of our geognosis. George Eliot, Middlemarch, ix.

geognost (jē-ō-gnōst), n. [= F. géognoste; < Gr. γῆ, the earth, + γνῶσις, knowledge; see gnostic.] One versed in geognosy; a geologist. [Rare.]

The travellers, except to the volcanic district of St. Paul, have been such bad geognosts that I cannot get enough from them. Knapley, Life, II, 141.

geognostic (jē-ō-gnōst'ik), a. [= F. géognostique; < G. geognostisch; as geognosy, with termin. accom. to gnostic.] Pertaining to geognosy or geognosis.

Guided by physical laws, the geognostic student must bear in mind the probability of some extraordinary tidal action in the early periods of the earth's history. Winchell, World Life, p. 258.

geognostical (jē-ō-gnōst'ik-al), a. Same as geognostic.

geognostically (jē-ō-gnōst'ik-al), adv. As regards geognosy.

Alluvial soil consists chemically and geognostically of substantially the same mineral matters as the compact mountain masses from the disintegration of which it has originated. Pop. Sci. Mo., XX, 327.

geognosy (jē-ō-gnō'si), n. [= D. G. geognosie; < Sw. gnos, geognosie; < F. géognosie; < NL. geognosis, < Gr. γῆ, the earth, + γνῶσις, knowledge; see gnosis.] Literally, knowledge of the earth; a geological term variously used, (a) The study of rocks, independently of their arrangement into a chronological series. Take, (b) That division of geology which describes the constituent parts of the earth, its development of air and water, its solid crust and the probable condition of its interior. A. Geikie, (c) Local geology—that is, the description of the geological structure and character of special geographical regions or areas. Also geognosis. [The word is not in general use. See Syn. Geology.] See geology.

geogonic, geogonical (jē-ō-gōn'ik, -ik-al), a. Same as geogeny.

geogony (jē-ō-gō-ni), n. [< Gr. γῆ, the earth, + γένος, generation, < γῆ, produce; see gennae.] Same as geogeny.

geographer (jē-ō-g'ro-fēr), n. [< geography + -er.] One who is versed in or treats of geography.

I do not say to be a good geographer a man should visit every mountain, river, promontory, and creek upon the face of the earth, visit the buildings and survey the land every where, as if he were going to make a purchase. Locke, Conduct of Understanding, § 2.

geographic (jē-ō-graf'ik), a. [= F. géographique; < Sp. geográfico; < Pg. geográfico; < It. geografico, < L. geographica, < Gr. geographikos, of or for geography, < γῆ, geographos, geography; see geography.] Same as geographical.

It is the geographic and not the geographic latitude which gives the true position of the observer relative to the earth's center. Neubach and Holden, Astron., p. 203.

geographical (jē-ō-graf'ik-al), a. [< geography + -ical.] Pertaining to geography; relating to the surface of the earth or of any part of it.

At the beginning of the first century before Christ the Roman power was far from having reached the full measure of its geographical extent. E. A. Freeman, Amer. Lects., p. 324.

Geographical botany, distribution, horizon, mile, etc. See the nouns. Geographical position of a place, its position as determined by its latitude and longitude and its height above the sea-level. Geographical zoology, zoogeography. geographically (jē-ō-graf'i-kal-i), adv. In a geographical manner; as regards geography. geographize (jē-ō-graf-i-zē), v. t. and pp. geographized, ppr. geographizing. [Gr. γεωγραφίζω, describe the earth's surface, < γεωγραφία, describing the earth's surface: see geography.] To treat geographically; make geographically distinct. [Rare.]

While Strabo was fully alive to the importance of the great rivers and mountain chains which (to use his own expressive phrase) geographēi a country, Ptolemy dealt with this part of his subject in a manner as to be often worse than useless. Encyc. Brit., N. S. 36.

geography (jē-ō-graf-i), n.; pl. geographies (-fiz). [= D. geographia = G. geographia = Dan. Sw. geograf = F. géographie = Sp. geografía = Pg. geographia = It. geografia, < L. geographia, < Gr. γεωγραφία, geography, < γεωγραφία, a geographer, lit. 'earth-describing'; < γεω, the earth, + γραφία, write.] 1. The science of the description of the earth's surface in its present condition, and of the distribution upon it of its various products and animals, especially of mankind, etc. See phrases below. The object of the geographer is to describe the earth's surface as it now exists. The geologist, on the other hand, seeks to throw light on the past history of the globe, although in doing this he must constantly refer to and study its present condition. Abbey's Nat. Hist.

Strabo, in his works of geographia—that is to say, of the description of the earth—wrote, etc. Udall, U. of Apophthegms of Erasmus, p. 307.

The study of geography is both profitable and delightful; but the writer thereof, though some of them exact enough in setting down longitudes and latitudes, yet in those other relations of manners, religion, government, and such like, accounted geographical, have for the most part missed their proportions. Milton, Hist. Moscovia, Pref.

2. A book containing a description of the earth or of a portion of it; particularly, a school-book for teaching the science of geography. Botanical geography. Same as geographical botany (which see, under botany). Descriptive geography, that part of the science of geography which involves only a statement of facts. Analyzing, comparing, and reasoning upon these facts is the domain of physical geography, or physiography. Medical geography, the description of the surface of the globe as regards the influence of situation on the health, vital functions, and diseases of its inhabitants. Thomson. Physical geography. See physiography. Political and historical geography, the study of the division of the earth's surface among different tribes, peoples, and governments. Simple political geography is the study of the present condition of things in that respect; historical geography investigation and records the changes in the governmental control of territory which have occurred from time to time. This branch of the science is, in fact, history from a geographical point of view, or that kind of history which, to be made intelligible, requires the aid of maps. Sacred or Biblical geography, the geography of Palestine and other biblically mentioned in the Bible, having for its object the elucidation of Scripture.

geoid (jē-oid), n. [Gr. γαίωδα, usually contr. γαίωδ, earth-like; see geode.] An imaginary surface which coincides with the mean sea-level over the ocean, and extends under the continents everywhere at that level at which the mean surface of the sea would stand if it were allowed to flow in through a small subterranean canal. The geoid has no simple geometrical form, but bulges out from the mean spheroid in some places (under the continents and some of the deep or parts of the ocean) and is depressed beneath the mean spheroid in other places.

geol. An abbreviation of geology.

geolatry (jē-ol'a-tri), n. [Gr. γῆ, the earth, + λατρεία, worship.] Earth worship, or the worship of terrestrial objects.

To this succeeded astrology in the East and geolatry in the West. See G. Cor. Mythol. of Asian Nations, 10.

geologist (jē-ol'ō-jist), n. [N. geology + -ist.] A geologist. [Rare.] geologian (jē-ol'ō-jian), n. [< geology + -ian.] A geologist. [Rare.] geologic, geological (jē-ol'ō-jik, -i-kal), a. [= F. géologique, < NL. geologicus, < geologia, geology: see geology.] Of or pertaining to geology.

Geological dynamics. See dynamics.

geologically (jē-ol'ō-jik-al-i), adv. In a geological manner; as regards geology.

geologiste, v. t. See geologize.

geologist (jē-ol'ō-jist), n. [< geology + -ist.] One who is versed in the science or engaged in the study of geology; specifically, one employed in the investigation or exposition of the structure of the earth, or any part of it: as the geologist of an exploring expedition; a state geologist.

geologize (jē-ol'ō-jiz), v. t. and pp. geologized, ppr. geologizing. [< geology + -ize.] To study geology; make geological investigations; discourse as a geologist. Also spelled geologise, geology (jē-ol'ō-jiz), n.; pl. geologies (-jiz). [= F. géologie = Sp. geología = Pg. It. geologia = D. G. geologie = Dan. Hw. geologi, < NL. geologia, < Gr. γῆ, the earth, + λογία, < λόγος, speak: see -ology.] The science of the past and present condition of the earth, with special reference to the physical changes which it has undergone or which may still be taking place. Almost every branch of physical and natural science is, or may be, called upon to throw light on the problems which present themselves to the geologist. Closely connected with geology, and indeed almost inseparable from it, is paleontology, or the study of ancient forms of life, since the rocks are found on examination to contain in many places remains of plants or animals, sometimes closely resembling, and often very different from, any now living on the earth. It is almost exclusively the order of succession of forms of life thus found which gives the geologist the means of making out a chronological arrangement for the different stratified formations. Physical geography, or physiography, is the necessary introduction to geology, and forms the link which unites the work of the geographer to that of the geologist. Abbreviated geol. See paleontology, petrography, and lithology. Agricultural geology. See agriculture. Dynamic geology. See dynamics. Physical geology. See physical geology. Structural geology. See structural geology. Syn. Geology, Geomancy. Both mean the same thing, but, with an unnecessary degree of refinement in terms, it has been proposed to call our description of the structures of the earth geology and our theory of their origin geomancy. See G. Cor. U. of Geol. (1835), 1, 358.

geom. An abbreviation of geometry.

geomallic (jē-ō-mal'ik), a. [< geomaly + -ic.] Of or pertaining to geomalism; exhibiting geomalism. [Rare.] geomalism (jē-ō-m'al-izm), n. [< Gr. γῆ, the earth, + αἰσθησις, even, level (see anomalous), + -ism.] A tendency of an animal to react against the attraction of gravitation by equal growth in horizontal planes, so as to balance one side with another, and one lateral organ with another. Thus the oyster and many other animals are, when young normally bilateral, but subsequently, when they are turned over and attached by one side, the dorsum and venter, which were primarily unequal and held vertically, take the place of the right and left sides and assume a horizontal posture. See Hoot. Proc. Amer. Assoc. Adv. Sci., 1880, p. 341.

Geomatism appears in its primitive aspect among the savages, since they are comparatively soft and supported by a pilable and primitively fragmentary and unstable bed. See Nat. Hist., 1, 50.

geomaly (jē-ō-m'a-li), n. Same as geomatism.

geomancer, n. [< ME. geomancer, < OF. geomance: see geomancy.] Same as geomancy.

geomancer (jē-ō-man'ser), n. One versed in or practising geomancy.

Fortune-tellers, jugglers, geomancers, though commonly men of inferior rank, daily delude them (the vulgar). See T. Brown. Vulg. Err., 1, 2.

geomancy (jē-ō-man-si), n. [*< ME. geomantie, < OF. geomancia, F. géomancie = Sp. geomancia = Pg. geomancia = It. geomancia, < ML. geomantia, < Gr. γῆ, the earth, + μαντεία, divination, Cf. *omance.] The pretended art of divining future events, or of ascertaining the luckiness or unluckiness of any event or locality, by means of signs connected with the earth, as from the figure indicated by points taken at random on the surface, or from the disposition of the particles of a handful of dust or earth thrown down at random, or, as in China, from the configuration and aspect of a particular region in its relation to some other. Also geomanty.

What serve we of him that bilieve to divynacles, as by flight of byrnysses (or birds), or of beestes, or by sort, by geomancy, by divyns by chyrkynge of dore, or crakynge of houses, by gawynage of sties, and such manere wraichedness. Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

So did I with earth he saw a Braupene three hundred years old: he addeth, that they are studious in Astrologie, Geomancie, and Philosophie. Peregrine, Pilgrimage, p. 420.

geomantic, geomantical (jē-ō-man'tik, -tik-al), a. Of or pertaining to geomancy; of the nature of geomancy.

Two geomantic figures were shewyd to him: he addeth, that they are studious in Astrologie, Geomancie, and Philosophie. Peregrine, Pilgrimage, p. 420.

geomantically (jē-ō-man'tik-al-i), adv. In a geomantic manner; by means of geomancy.

geomanty (jē-ō-man'ti), n. [< ML. geomantia, see geomancy.] Same as geomancy. E. D.

geometer (jē-ō-m'e-ter), n. [= F. géomètre = Sp. geometa = Pg. It. geometra = G. geometer, < L. geometres, I. L. also geometra, < Gr. γεωμετρος, a measurer, geometer, < γῆ, the earth, land, + μετρον, a measure.] In earlier form geometrian. 1. One skilled in geometry; a geometrian; hence, a mathematician in general.

All who are ever so little of geometers will remember the time when their notions of an angle, as a magnitude, were as vague as, perhaps more so than, those of a moral quality. Jerome, Pol. Econ., p. 10.

I have reexamined the memoirs of the great geometers. B. Peirce, Analytic Mechanics, Pref.

2t. A gager. Davies.

I quatridge give to the geometer

Most duly;

And he will see, and yet be blind.

Robin Conscience, 1683 (Harl. Misc., 1, 52).

3. In entom., properly, a larva of any moth of the family Geometridae; loosely, any larva which is destitute of ventral prolegs, and walks by alternately extending the body and contracting it in the form of a loop with the two ends drawn together. These larvae are also called measuring worms, span-worms, loop-worms, loopers, etc. The term geometer is also applied to the adult of geometrid moths. See entom. under Cudaria and Haploides.

Geometra (jē-ō-m'e-trā), n. [NL., < Gr. γεωμετρον, a land-measurer: see geometer.] A genus of moths, giving name to the family Geometridae. Oken, 1815.

Geometras (jē-ō-m'e-trā), n. pl. [NL., pl. of Geometra.] A Linnean (1758) group of moths. See Geometridae.

geometral (jē-ō-m'e-tral), a. [= F. géometral = It. geometrale.] Pertaining to geometry; geometrical. [Rare.] geometrian, n. [ME. geometrien, < OF. geometrien, a geometer, < geometer, geometry: see geometry.] A geometer. Chaucer.

geometric, geometrical (jē-ō-met'rik, -ri-kal), a. [= F. géométrique = Sp. métrico = Pg. It. geometrico (cf. D. G. geometrisch = Sw. Dan. geometrisk), < L. geometricus, < Gr. γεωμετρικός, < γεωμετρία, geometry: see geometry.] 1. Pertaining to geometry; according to the rules or principles of geometry; done or determined by geometry.

The cargazon being taken out, and the goods freighted in tenne of our ships for London, to the end that the biggness, height, length, breadth, and other dimensions of so huge a vessel might by the exact rules of geometrical observations be truly taken. Hakluyt's Voyages, II, 11, 166.

In this (the Greek method of analysis) we have no trace of the systematic development of geometric truth, and the method was apparently regarded by the ancients themselves as imperfect. Encyc. Brit., XV, 630.

The peculiar mesencephalic structure of the retina is obviously the fundamental cause for the pre-eminence of the eye as a geometrical sense. G. T. Ladd, Physiol. Psychology, p. 426.

2. Bounded by straight lines and angles; forming straight lines and angles; as, geometric forms; geometrical ornament or markings on an insect. Geometrical addition, clamp, drawing. See the nouns. Geometrical analysis, the analysis of the ancient geometers. See analysis, 3 (a). Geometrical conics, the theory of conic sections treated without the aid of coordinates. Geometrical effection, foot, mean, etc. See the nouns. Geometrical optics, the theory of the focal of lenses and mirrors, with other purely geometrical optics connected with light. Geometrical pace, a unit of length, equal to 5 geometrical feet. Geometrical progression, radius, etc. See the nouns. Geometrical proportion, an equation between ratios. See proportion. Geometrical spider, a spider which constructs a geometrical web. Geometrical spider's web, a web formed of radiating lines connected by a single line, which is carried spirally from the circumference nearly to the center. The geometrical web is peculiar to certain groups of spiders, and is variously modified in the different species. Geometrical stairs, stairs of which the steps are supported at one end only, this end being built into the wall. Geometrical tree. See tree. Geometric construction, the representation of the conditions of an algebraic problem by geometrical lines. Geometric curves or lines, those curves or lines in which the relation between the abscissas and ordinates is expressed by a finite algebraic equation. Geometric Dec- grated style. See decorated.—Geometric decoration, decoration by means of straight lines or curves, or small surfaces bounded by such lines or curves, with the suggestion of plant or animal forms or the like. For and meanders, zigzags, chevrons, circles, and triangles which frequently interlace with one another, forming elaborate star-shaped patterns, dog-tooth, notches of different kinds, and all similar forms, whether applied to a flat surface or carved in greater or less relief, are included in geometric decoration.—Geometric elevation, lo-out, etc. See the noun.—Geometric style, in arch., that development of the Pointed medieval architecture of England which includes the examples just previous to the most perfect artistic achievement of the style, or perhaps even the examples of highest excellence. It succeeded the Lancet or Early English style in the early part of the thirteenth century, and is characterized by the adoption of tracery, as yet in simple geometric forms, in broader windows, in place of the plain, narrow lancets of the preceding style, together with modifications of consistent character in wall-decoration and other sculptured ornament. With the advance of the thirteenth century, the severity and geometric simplicity of line in tracery and ornament became less marked, and the style passed gradually into the decorated. See cut on preceding page.

Geometrically (jē-ō-met'ri-kal-i), adv. In a geometric manner; according to the principles of geometry.—Geometrically irrational, transcendental: said of a curve.—Geometrically rational, algebraic.

Geometrician (jē-ō-met'ri-sh'yan), n. [Geometria + -ian. Cf. arithmetician, mathematician, etc.] One skilled in geometry; a geometer in sense 1.

Geometrid (jē-ō-met'rid), a. and n. I. a. In entom., pertaining to the moths of the section Geometrina, whose larvae are measuring-worms.

II. n. A moth of the family Geometridae or section Geometrina, or its larva; a measuring-worm.

Geometridae (jē-ō-met'ri-dā), n. pl. [NL. < Geometra + -idae.] A large family of heterocerous lepidopterous insects or moths, named from the genus Geometra, whose larvae are measuring-worms; the geometers, geometrids, phalaenids, or Phalaenidae. This group regarded as a family, is divided into 26 subfamilies, named Uropierinae, Rhynchosinae, Enachromorphae, Amphidromae, Boarminae, Disatophinae, Geometrinae, Microsericinae, Polyphaginae, Ephyrinae, Acridolinae, Mecocercinae, Calamini, Mecurinae, Edoniinae, Hazinae, Zereminae, Lycinae, Hyberuminae, Larentinae, Eubolinae, Nominae, Hyalinae, Enantimorphae, Rhoplocinae, and Hypocrepinae. In some systems, as Guenée's, these are all elevated to the rank of families, ending in -idae, and the superfamily thus constituted, called Phalaenidae, is the Geometrinae of English authors. The names Geometridae and Phalaenidae are exactly synonymous, and the various names resulting from the changes in termination of the two words are applied to what is practically an identical group of moths, rated higher or lower in the taxonomic scale, according to the classificatory views of different authors. See the extract, and cuts under Calania and Haploides.

The Geometridae or Phalaenidae form a family of great size, being exceeded in numbers among the Lepidoptera only by the Noctuidae and Tineidae, and probably equalled only by the Pyrastidae and Tortricidae. They are . . . widely distributed over the globe, and the caterpillars of many species have proved very destructive to some of our most important vegetable productions. The moths have rather long, slender bodies, the thorax without tufts or crests. Ocelli are present in some species, and absent in others. The antennae are either simple, ciliated, or pectinated. The fore wings are large and triangular; the outer margin . . . is nearly as long as the hinder margin. The hind wings are ample. . . . In some species, the females are wingless, or have only rudimentary wings, which are useless for flight. . . . The caterpillars are slender and naked, usually with two pairs of abdominal legs, though rarely they have three or four pairs. This deficiency causes them to move along with a looping gait, and hence they are often called "measuring worms," from which fact the family name [Geometridae] was given.

Stand. Nat. Hist., II. 445.

geometrist, n. See geometrician.

geometristform (jē-ō-met'ri-fōrm), a. [Geometra + L. forma, form.] In entom., resembling in form a moth of the family Geometridae.

Geometrina (jē-ō-met'ri-nā), n. pl. [NL. < Geometra + -ina.] In entom., a group of heterocerous lepidopterous insects; the geometers or geometrid moths.

Geometrinae (jē-ō-met'ri-nā), n. pl. [NL. < Geometra + -inae.] One of numerous restricted subfamilies of Geometridae, named from the genus Geometra.

geometrine (jē-ō-met'ri-n), a. [Geometra + -ine.] Pertaining to the Geometridae.

geometrize (jē-ō-met'riz), v. t. [pret. and pp. geometrized, ppr. geometrizing.] [Geometry + -ize.] To solve geometrical problems; speculate geometrically; practise geometry. The use of this word originated from Plato's saying (repeated by Pictarch) that God continually geometrizes.

Nature (in crystallization) . . . confined herself to geometrical.

All things were disposed, according to their nature and use, in number and measure, by the magnificent architect; who in the one did every where geometrize as well as in the other.

Dan. geometri*, < L. geometria, < Gr. γεωμετρία, geometry, < γεωμετρον, a land-measurer, a geometer: see geometer.] 1. That branch of mathematics which deduces the properties of figures in space from their defining conditions, by means of assumed properties of space. Abbreviated geom.

Through which a man hath the sleight
Of length, of brede, of depth, of height.

Geometrie, Geome, Conf. Amant, vii.

2. A text-book of geometry. Abstract geometry, the general theory of the connections of more than two variables. Geometry, in its analytical treatment, appears as identical with the algebra of two or three variables. A similar study of the connections of a number of variables in general is called in dimensional geometry, and abstract geometry as not descending to particulars.

Algebraic, algorithmic, analytical, Cartesian, coordinate, etc., geometry. See the adjective. Common or elementary geometry, that treatment of geometry which assumes no previous knowledge of the subject, and is supposed to be well known in all other mathematical writings. This discipline remains in nearly the condition in which Euclid left it. See Euclidean geometry.—Descriptive geometry (invented by Gaspard Monge, 1749), the theory of making projections of any accurately defined figure such that from them can be deduced, not only its projective, but also its metrical properties. It is highly useful in engineering. The name is also applied to the theory of geometry in general treated by means of projections. Elliptic geometry, a system which assumes that space returns into itself, so that there are no points whose distance exceeds a certain finite distance.—Enumerative or denumerative geometry, the theory of the number of solutions of geometrical problems, and of the number of incidences and coincidences in a diagram drawn under given conditions. Euclidean geometry, a system of geometry which adopts the assumptions of Euclid with regard to space, namely, that space is an infinite continuum of three dimensions, that rigid bodies are capable of translation and rotation in all directions in every position, and that the sum of the three angles of a plane triangle is equal to two right angles.—Geometry of forces, the theory of congruences and complex of forces. Geometry of position, (a) A branch of geometry created by the French revolutionary statesman Carnot, which traces the connection between the changes of an equation and the changes of position of a locus. (b) Modern projective geometry, commonly written in German Geometrie der Lage, to distinguish it from (c).

Geometry of space, geometry of three dimensions, geometry of figures not restricted to a plane or other surface. Geometry of the compasses, a system of geometry in which the postulate that a right line be describable is not admitted, but instead links turn about pivots and are connected together. The first important discovery in this branch of geometry was the Poncelet cell. See cell.

Graphical geometry. Same as projective geometry.—Higher geometry, any geometry not elementary, especially, modern synthetic geometry.—Hyperbolic geometry, a system which assumes that space, though infinite in measurement, has a real and definite boundary, separating the points at a real distance from points at an imaginary distance.—Linear or line geometry, the theory of systems of rays, congruences, and complexes.

Metric or quantitative geometry treats of the distances of points or the magnitude of angles, arcs, areas, volumes, etc. Modern geometry, the synthetic geometry which has been developed in the nineteenth century by Carnot (Geometrie de position, 1780), Brianchon (Le Mémoire sur les lignes du second ordre, 1806), Poncelet (Traité des propriétés projectives des figures, 1822), Möbius (Lehrbuch der Geometrie, 1826), Steiner (Systematische Entwicklung, 1828), Chasles (Leçons de géométrie supérieure, 1837), von Staudt (Geometrie der Lage, 1847) and others. Organic geometry, (a) A kind of geometry invented by MacLaurin (1719) in which more complicated curves are produced from less complicated ones. Hence, (b) Higher synthetic geometry in general. Parabolic geometry, a system which assumes (in harmony with Euclidean principles) that the locus of an infinite distance consists of two coincident planes with an imaginary circle upon them.—Plane geometry, the geometry of figures all lying in one plane. Practical geometry, (a) surveying. (b) The art of geometrical drawing.—Projective geometry, a method of investigating geometry by the application of the theory of projections.—Segmentary geometry, modern synthetic geometry, especially when treated by means of the anharmonic ratio.

Solid geometry, (a) The elementary geometry of solid bodies. (b) Geometry of three dimensions. Speculative geometry, the science of geometry proper, as distinguished from practical geometry. Spherical geometry, the geometry of figures drawn on the surface of a sphere.—Synthetic geometry, geometry treated not by means of coordinates or other algebraic devices, but by means chiefly of projections. Theoretical geometry, same as speculative geometry. To hang by geometry, to have the clothes hang angularly, out of shape, or in rags.

Look you, here's Jarvis hang by geometry, and here's the gentleman.

Rosely, Match at Midnight, iii.

Transcendental geometry, all geometry not elementary, especially, geometry treated by the calculus.

geomorphy (jē-ō-mōr-fi), n. [Gr. γῆ, the earth, + μορφή, form.] The theory of the figure of the earth.

geomyid (jē-ō-mī'id), n. One of the Geomyiidae.

Geomyiidae (jē-ō-mī'id-ē), n. pl. [NL. < Geomys + -idae.] A remarkable American family of myomorphous rodents; the pouched rats or pocket-gophers. They are characterized by the enormous external cheek-pouches lined with fur not communicating with the mouth, and extending in some cases along the neck as far as the shoulders; dental formula, 2 in-

Under Side of Head of Geomys personatus, showing outline of external cheek pouches and sub-ocular incisors.

Geomyinae (jē-ō-mī'ī-nē), n. pl. [NL. < Geomys + -inae.] A subfamily of Saccomyidae; the pouched rats. See Geomyidae.

Geomys (jē-ō-mīs), n. [NL. < Gr. γῆ, the earth, + mys = E. mouse.] The typical genus of Geomyidae, with grooved incisors, rudimentary external ears, and enormous fore claws. There are several species of North and Central America, sharing with those of Thomomys the name gopher. G. burrus is the common pocket gopher of the United States, especially in the Mississippi valley; G. tridecemlineatus Georgia, Florida and Alabama; G. carolinensis found in Texas and New Mexico; G. merriami is the gopher of Mexico; and G. hispidus is the gopher of Central America.

geo-navigation (jē-ō-nay-i-ga'shon), n. [Gr. γῆ, the earth, + E. navigation.] That mode of navigation in which the place of a ship at sea is determined by referring it, by the course and distance sailed, to some other spot on the surface of the earth. Harbord. See dead reckoning.

Geonoma (jē-ō-nō-mī), n. [NL., so called in allusion to its rapid propagation, < Gr. γεωμνη, also γεωμνη, a colonist, one receiving a portion of distributed lands, < γῆ, the earth, + νομος, distribute.] A genus of low, slender, graceful, unarmed palms, with reed-like stems, of about 100 species, common in the forests of tropical America. The leaves are entire, or bilobed, or more or less pinnately cleft, the flowers are small upon a simple or forked spadix, and the small one seeded fruit is usually black.

geonomic (jē-ō-nō-mīk), a. [Geonomy + -ic.] Pertaining to geonomy.

geonomy (jē-ō-nō-mī), n. [Gr. γῆ, the earth, + νομος, a law.] The science of the physical laws relating to the earth, including geology and physical geography.

geophagism (jē-ō-fa-giz-m), n. [Gr. γῆ, the earth, + φαγναι, to eat.] Same as geophagy.

geophagist (jē-ō-fa-gist), n. [Gr. γῆ, the earth, + φαγναι, to eat.] One who practises geophagism; one who eats earth.

geophagous (jē-ō-fa-gus), a. [NL. geophagus, < Gr. γῆ, the earth, + φαγναι, for which γεωφάγος, earth-eating, < γῆ, the earth, + φαγναι, eat.] Earth-eating; as, geophagous tribes.

geophagy (jē-ō-fa-gi), n. [Gr. γῆ, the earth, + φαγναι, earth-eating; see geophagous.] The act or practice of eating earth, as dirt, clay, chalk, etc. See dirt-eating. Also geophagism.

Geophila (jē-ō-fī-lā), n. pl. [NL. (Möller, 1828), neut. pl. of geophilus; see geophilous.] A group, generally ranked as a suborder, of terrestrial pulmonate gastropods; the land-snails and land-slugs, including those forms which have the eyes at the tips of the tentacles. The group is named for the large white land snails generally, such as the Lymnaea, Helix, Vaginalia, and related families. Also called Stylommatophora and Nephropoda.

geophilian (jē-ō-fī-lī-an), a. and n. I. a. Of or pertaining to the Geophila or terrestrial inoperculate pulmoniferous gastropods.

II. n. A member of this group. Compare gastrophilous, hydropophilous.

geophilid (jē-ō-fī-līd), n. A myriapod of the family Geophilidae.

Geophilidae (jē-ō-fī-lī-dē), n. pl. [NL. < Geophila + -idae.] A family of centipeds, of the order Chilopoda and class Myriapoda, containing terrestrial forms (whence the name) which have numerous (90 to 200) similar flattened segments, with short legs, 14-jointed antennae, single jointed tarsi, and no eyes. There are several genera besides Geophila.

Geophilinae (jē-ō-fī-lī-nē), n. pl. [NL. < Geophila + -inae.] A subfamily group of centipeds. See Geophilidae. Also written Geophilini.

geophilous (jē-ōf'i-lus), a. [< NL. geophilus, < Gr. γῆ, the earth, + φίλος, loving.] Loving the ground: specifically applied to sundry animals, especially the Geophila or land-snails.

Geophilus (jē-ōf'i-lus), n. [NL. < see geophilous.] 1. The typical genus of centipeds of the family Geophilidae, having the anterior segment of the head square. G. electricus, a European species, is phosphorescent, shining like a glow-worm. W. E. Leach, 1812.—2. A genus of coleopterous insects. Schönherr, 1826.—3. A genus of pigeons: same as Cathartes. P. J. Selby, 1840.

geophysical (jē-ō-fiz'i-kul), a. [< Gr. γῆ, the earth, + φυσικός, physical: see physic.] Relating to the physics of the earth.

The geophysical problems which geological history has to treat are widely confined to the concluding chapters.

geophysics (jē-ō-fiz'iks), n. [< Gr. γῆ, the earth, + φυσική, physics: see physics.] Physics of the earth: same as physiography.

Geopinus (jē-ō-pi-nus), n. [NL. < Gr. γῆ, the earth, + πῦμα, dirt, filth.] A genus of caraboid beetles, of the subfamily Harpalini, having the left mandible longer than the other and overlapping it. G. maculatus is a common New England species. J. L. Le Conte, 1848.

Geopinus maculatus

Geoplane (jē-ō-plā-nē), n. [NL. < Gr. γῆ, the earth, + πλάνη, level:] see Planaria.] The typical genus of land-planarians of the family Geoplanidae.

Geoplanidae (jē-ō-plā-nī-dē), n. pl. [NL. < Geoplane + -idae.] A family of monogonoporous dendrocoelous turbellarians, characterized by an elongated and flattened form, and having the body furnished with a foot-like ventral surface: the land-planarians.

geoponic (jē-ō-pō-nik), a. and n. [< Gr. γεωργός, of or for agriculture, < γεωργία, agriculture, < γεωρός, a tiller of the earth, < γῆ, the earth, + πονέω, work, toil, πονός, n., work, toil.] 1. a. Pertaining to agriculture or the tillage of the earth.

Two or three notabilities of Rockland, with geoponic and glabrous, bumpless foreheads.

G. W. Holmes, Eldest Venner, III.

II. n. One who tills or cultivates the earth.

The wholesome blasts of the North wind (much accounted of among builders and geoponics for immision of pure air) . . . (come) in from that part which lies open to the sea.

Draught, Polyblithon, x. 82, note.

geoponical (jē-ō-pō-nī-kal), a. [< geoponic + -al.] Same as geoponic.

Those geoponical rules and precepts of agriculture which are delivered by diverse authors, are not to be generally received.

See P. Brown, Vulgar Err., VI. 3.

geoponicist (jē-ō-pō-nī-iks), n. [Pl. of geoponic, q. v., after Gr. γεωργός, ad., the name of a treatise on agriculture compiled by Cassianus Bassus.] The art or science of cultivating the earth.

Herbs and wholesome sallets, and other plain and useful parts of geoponica.

Enc. I. a.

georama (jē-ō-rā-mē), n. [< Gr. γῆ, the earth, + ὥραμα, a view, < ὥρα, see.] A large hollow globe or spherical chamber lined with cloth on which is depicted a general view of the geography of the earth's surface so as to be seen by a spectator from the interior. Brande.

geordie (jē-ō-dī), n. [A familiar dim. of George.] 1. A guinea: so called from the figure of St. George on the obverse. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

He draws a homely silken purse
As long as my tail white, through the steaks,
The yellow lettered geordie keels.

Burns, The Two Dogs.

2. The name given by the coal-miners of England to the form of safety-lamp invented by George Stephenson.—3. An English sailing collier hailing from one of the ports on the northeast coast of England.

You thought of the Thimble as you looked at her, of the Tyne, of the channel awarn with just such vessels as she—geordies deep with coal.

W. C. Russell, Jack's Courtship, xlv.

George (jōrj), n. [From the proper name George, < F. George, Georges, = Sp. Jorge = Pg. Jorge = It. Giorgio, < L.L. Georgius, < Gr. γεωργός, a husbandman, farmer, prop. an adj., tilling the ground, < γῆ, the earth, the ground, + ἔργον, work, till: see work.] 1. A jewel including a figure in colored enamels of St. George on horseback encountering the dragon, worn pendant from the collar of the order by knights of the Garter. See garter.

Look on my George: I am a gentleman.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iv. 1.

Before his going he did give me some jewels to keep for him. viz. that that the King of Sweden did give him, with the King's own picture in it most excellently done, and a brave George, all of diamonds.

Peppis, Diary, I. 158.

2. [< L. c.] A loaf, supposed to have been originally stamped with a figure of St. George.

Cubbed in a cabin, on a mattress laid,
On a brown george with low no-sworders fed.
Diplom., tr. of Perishock Satires, v.

3. [< L. c.] A large curled wig worn in the eighteenth century.—4. [< L. c.] Same as george, 10.—5. A George-noble. Lesser George, a badge of the Order of the Garter worn on occasions of comparatively little ceremony, pendant from a ribbon. It is an oval with the representation of St. George killing the dragon in gold upon an enameled ground, bordered by a buckled garter.

George-noble (jōrj'no-bl), n. An English gold coin of the reign of Henry VIII., worth at the time 6s. 8d. The name George (derived from the figure Obverse.

Reverse.

of St. George on the obverse of the coin was given it to distinguish it from the earlier English gold coins named nobles.

Nor full nor fasting can the earth take rest,
While his George noble rusts in his chest;
He sleeps but once, and dreams of bugles blown.
Ep. Hall, Satires, IV. vi. 31.

George's cod. See cod.

Georgesman (jōrj'jēz-man), n. pl. Georgesmen (-men). [< Gr. georgos (see def) + man.] A codfish-schooner fishing on George's Banks. [Gloucester, Massachusetts, U. S.]

Some half dozen Georgesmen arrived last night
Boston (Mass.) Advertiser, Jan. 12, 1880.

Georgia (jōrj'jā), n. [NL. (Barclay and Girard, 1853), named from the State of Georgia.] 1. In herpet., a genus of ordinary colubrine serpents, the type of which is G. constrictor of the southern United States.—2. In entom., a genus of longicorn beetles, of the family Cerambycidae, having but one species, G. ranthomabena of South America. Thomson, 1857.

Georgia bark, hamster, etc. See the nouns.

Georgian (jōrj'jān), a. and n. [In def. 1 and 2, < L.L. Georgicus, Georgus. In def. 3, < Georgia, prop. form, adj. (see terra), < Georgicus, a personal name (see George), the colony being named after George II. in 1732.] I. a. 1. Belonging or relating to the four kings of England named George, or to any one of them, or to the period of their successive reigns (1714–1830).

One Georgian star adorns the skies.
Cooper, Queen's Visit to London.

Putting aside . . . his claim to literary greatness, Hook will be remembered as one of the most brilliant, capable, and original figures of Georgian times.

Fairbairn, Brit. Mus., VII. 114.

2. Specifically, of the style of art or of decoration prevailing during the reigns of the four Georges, especially of George I. and George II.—3. Belonging or relating to the State of Georgia in the United States.

II. n. A native or an inhabitant of the State of Georgia in the United States.

N. A. B. C., CXXVI. 235.

Georgian (jōrj'jān), a. and n. [< Georgia, a Latinized form (accumb. to Georgia, Georgia, of the origin) of Pers. Gurj, a native or an inhabitant of Georgia (Pers. Georgiā) in the Caucasus; the Russ. form is Grusia.] The native name of the country is Kartli or Kartli, the Kartalinians being the principal branch of the race.] I. a. Belonging or relating to Georgia in Asia.

II. n. An inhabitant of Georgia, a district in Transcaucasia, Russia, an independent kingdom from very ancient times (known to the ancient Greeks as Iberia), but annexed to Russia in 1801. The Georgians are a very handsome race, of the purest Caucasian type.

georgic (jōrj'jik), a. and n. [I. a. = F. gêorgique, < L. georgicus, < Gr. γεωργικός, agricultural, < γεωργός, a tiller of the ground, a husbandman, farmer: see George. II. n. < L. georgica (see carmina) or sing. georgicum (see carmen), the title of an agricultural poem by Virgil, after Gr. τὰ γεωργικά, a treatise on agriculture: see I.] I. a. Relating to agriculture and rural affairs; agricultural.

Here I peruse the Mantuan's Georgic strains,
And learn the labours of Italian swains.
Gay, Rural Sports, I.

II. n. A poem on agriculture or rural affairs: as, the Georgics of Virgil.

A Georgic . . . is some part of the science of husbandry put into a pleasing dress, and set off with all the beauties and embellishments of poetry.

Adams, On Virgil's Georgics.

Georgium Sidus (jōrj'ji-sid'us), [NL., George's star: see George and sidereal.] A name for the planet now called Uranus, given by its discoverer, Sir William Herschel, in honor of George III., but not accepted by astronomers.

Georhychidae, Georhychus. Incorrect forms of Georchida, Georchus.

Georissal (jē-ō-ris'sal), n. pl. See Georyssidae.

Georissus (jē-ō-ris'sus), n. See Georyssus.

Georchida (jē-ō-rk'i-dā), n. pl. [NL., < Georchus + -ida.] A family of rodents, taking name from the genus Georchus: the mole-rats: now called Spalacidae.

Georchina (jē-ō-rk'i-nā), n. pl. [NL., < Georchus + -ina.] Same as Georchida.

Georchus (jē-ō-rk'us), n. [NL., < Gr. γεωργός, throwing up the earth, < γῆ, the earth, + ὥρα, dig up (< ὥρα, a digging).] A genus of mole-rats, or fossorial myomorphie rodents of the family Spalacidae and subfamily Bathyergina. They have unnotched incisors, and 1 premolar in each upper and lower half jaw: the best-known species is the South African G. capensis, called the Cape wood mole. The name is an old one (Illiger, 1811), and has often been improperly extended to include various animals not generally related to the above, as the American pocket gopher or Geomys.

Georyssidae (jē-ō-ris'sī-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Georyssus + -idae.] A family of clavicorn beetles, having the dorsal segments of the abdomen partly membranous, the ventral segments free, the tarsi 4-jointed, the wings not fringed with hairs, the anterior coxae oval and contiguous, and the prosternum semi-membranous. Also Georissi.

Georyssus (jē-ō-ris'sus), n. [NL. (Latreille, 1807): prop. Georchus: see Georchus.] The typical genus of the family Georyssidae. G. pygmaeus is a British species. Also spelled Georissus.

Geosaurus (jē-ō-sā-rus), n. [< Gr. γῆ, the earth, + σαῦρος, a lizard.] A Cuvierian (1829) genus of fossil saurians, discovered by Soemmering in the Lias of Franconia, supposed to be nearest related to the monitors or varanians. The only species known is S. giganteus.

geoscopic (jē-ō-skōp'ik), a. [< geoscopy + -ic.] Pertaining to geoscopy.

geoscopy (jē-ō-skō-pi), n. [< Gr. γῆ, the earth, + σκοπέω, view.] Knowledge of the earth, ground, or soil obtained by inspection.

geoselenic (jē-ō-sē-len'ik), a. [< Gr. γῆ, the earth, + σελήνη, the moon.] Relating to the earth and the moon, or to their joint action or mutual relations: as, geoselenic phenomena.

Geositta (jē-ō-sit'tā), n. [NL., < Gr. γῆ, the ground, + σitta, the nuthatch: see Sitta.] A genus of furnarian birds of South America, of terrestrial habits, and somewhat resembling Geranium carolinianum.

larks, though of a different family and suborder. Divisions of the genus are known as Gerobian and Geobates. W. Stearnson, 1837.

Geopelia (jē-ō-spi'zē), n. [NL., < Gr. γῆ, the ground, + πτερό, a bird of the finch kind, perhaps the chaffinch.] A remarkable genus of fringilline birds peculiar to the Galapagos islands, having an enormous bill. G. magnirostris is an example; there are several others. J. Gould, 1837.

Geostatic (jē-ō-stat'ik), a. [< Gr. γῆ, the earth, + στατός, causing to stand; see static.] Capable of sustaining the pressure of superincumbent earth. A geostatic arch has a curve of such a nature that the vertical pressure is proportional to the depth below a fixed horizontal plane, and the horizontal pressure bears to the vertical pressure a fixed ratio depending on the nature of the superincumbent materials. [In old use opposed to hydrostatic.]

Geostatics (jē-ō-stat'iks), n. [Pl. of geostatic; see -ics.] The statics of rigid bodies.

Geosynclinal (jē-ō-sin-kl'i-nāl), n. [< Gr. γῆ, the earth, + E. synclinal, q. v.] In geol., a region of depression, having, consequently, a synclinal structure. See geantlinal.

The making of the Alleghany range was carried forward through a long-continued subsidence—a geosynclinal—not a true synclinal, since the rocks of the bending crust may have had in them many true or simple synclinals as well as anticlinals.

J. D. Dana, Amer. Jour. Sci., 3d ser., V, 430.

Geotectonic (jē-ō-tek-ton'ik), a. [< Gr. γῆ, the earth, + τέκνω, a builder.] Relating to the structure or the arrangement of the materials composing the crust of the earth.

It is only possible, for the present, to deduce special geotectonic conditions under which natural gas has so far been exploited. Science, VI, 181.

Geotectonic geology. Same as structural geology (which see, under structural).

Geotenthis (jē-ō-tēn'this), n. [NL. (Münster, 1843), < Gr. γῆ, the earth, + τέθω, a cuttlefish or squid.] A genus of fossil squids or calamaries whose pens are found abundantly in the Lias and Oolite formations. The ink-bag and other fragments, in addition to the pens, occur in the Oxford clay.

Geothermic (jē-ō-thēr'mik), a. [< Gr. γῆ, the earth, + θερμός, heat.] Of or pertaining to the internal heat of the earth.

Geothermometer (jē-ō-thēr-mom'eter), n. [< Gr. γῆ, the earth, + E. thermometer.] An instrument for measuring the degree of terrestrial heat at different places, especially in mines and artesian wells.

Geothlypes (jē-ō-thlip'ē-ō), n. pl. [NL., < Geothlypis + -es.] A section of Sylviolidae, typified by the genus Geothlypis; the ground-warblers. S. F. Baird, 1864.

Geothlypis (jē-ō-th'li-pis), n. [NL. (Cabanis, 1847), < Gr. γῆ, the earth, + Θαύρις, an alleged proper name.] A genus of American passerine birds, of the family Mniotiltidae, or Sylviolidae, Maryland Yellowthroat (Geothlypis trichas).

containing certain ground-warblers, such as the abundant and familiar Maryland yellowthroat, G. trichas. There are many more species, of the warmer parts of America, all olive above and more or less yellow below, with a characteristic black mask. Some related forms are the mourning-warbler of the eastern United States, G. philadelphia, and its western representative, G. maculirostris. The genus Opocornis, containing the Kentucky and the Connecticut warblers, is now sometimes brought under Geothlypis.

Geotic (jē-ō'tik), a. [< Gr. γῆ, the earth, + -otic.] Belonging to earth; terrestrial. Bailey.

Geotriton (jē-ō-tri'ton), n. [NL., < Gr. γῆ, the ground, + τριτών, triton; see triton.] A genus of salamanders or newts, of the family Plethodontidae, having the premaxillary bone divided. G. fuscus of Italy is the only European representative of the family and the only species of the genus, it is restricted to Sardinia and Lucania.

Geotropic (jē-ō-trop'ik), a. [< Gr. γῆ, the earth, + τροπή, a turning, direction, & τροπή, turn.] Of or pertaining to, or exhibiting, geotropism; turning or inclining toward the earth.

When the direction of growth is downward, the organ is said to be positively geotropic, when upward, negatively geotropic. Bosc, Botany, p. 194.

Geotropism (jē-ō-trop'izm), n. [< geotropic + -ism.] In bot., growth downward, as shown in the roots of plants and sometimes in stems and rootstocks; the power or tendency to grow toward the earth.

The powers of growth which exist in young seedlings would certainly be called instinctive if they existed in animals, and they are quite as indispensable as those just mentioned in supplying the wants which first arise. These two instincts are the power of directing the growth in relation to the force of gravity, and in relation to light, the first being called geotropism, the second heliotropism. E. Darwin.

Geotropy (jē-ō-trop'i), n. Same as geotropism.

Geotrygon (jē-ō-tri'gon), n. [NL., < Gr. γῆ, the earth, + τρυγών, the turtle dove, < τρυγώ, make a low, murmuring sound.] A genus of pigeons of the warmer parts of America, of stout form, having short rounded wings with fulvous first primary, and a very short tail; the partridge-doves. A Jamaican species, G. crested or sylvatica, is known as the mountain witch. P. H. Cramer, 1847.

Verreaux Partridge dove (Geotrygon verreauxi).

Geotrypes (jē-ō-tri'pēs), n. [NL., < Gr. γῆ, the earth, + τρυπή, a hole, τρυπάω, bore, pierce.]

A Fabrician genus of beetles, typical of the family Geotrupidae.

G. stereocoma is the dung beetle—drone beetle, or watchman beetle of Great Britain. It is a very extensive and widely distributed group, containing over 100 species from all parts of the world. None are North American. As originally (1836) pseudohemal system exists in most of them; and the nervous system forms an esophageal ring. The group has affinities with the Turbellaria, the Asiatic (especially the polychaetes annelids), and the Rotifera. The Gephyrea are divided into Adaria and Chastifera, and by Gephyra into Inermes and Chastifera. The former of these embraces the apoda-worms, and is practically equivalent to the Apodanthes. The Chastifera are represented by such genera as Chastifer and Hemellia. The group is made by Lankester one of the phyla or prime divisions of the animal kingdom, and is divided into the four classes Chastifera, Polychaeta, Sipunculata, and Phoronida. It was formerly considered an order of echinoderms, under the name Apoda and Apodocellata. Also written Gephyrea, gephyrean (jē-ō-rō'an), a. and n. [< Gephyrea + -an.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the Gephyrea.

This was discovered by Krohn in 1858 to be a Gephyra worm. W. B. Carpenter, Microsc., § 662.

II. n. One of the Gephyrea.

Also gephyrean.

Gephyrocercal (jē-ō-rō-sēr'kal), a. [< Gr. γῆ, a bridge, & κερκός, tail.] In zool., having the tail-fin formed from the hinder portions of the dorsal and anal fins, which unite over the end of the aborted axis of the body, as the family Mohida. J. A. Ryder, 1884.

Gephyrocercal (jē-ō-rō-sēr'sil), n. [As gephyrocercal + -y.] The state of being gephyrocercal. J. A. Ryder.

Gephyrrhina (jē-ō-rī'nā), n. pl. [NL. (Thacher, 1877), < Gr. γέφυρα, bridge, & ρίς, ρίς, nose.] A section of vertebrates characterized by two external nostrils on each side separated by a cutaneous interspace or bridge. It includes almost all the fishes, exclusive of the dipnoans and selachians.

gepont, n. See jupon.

ger. An abbreviation of gerund.

Ger. A common abbreviation of German.

-ger. [L. -ger, m., -gera, f., -gerum, neut. (as in armiger, corniger, etc.), < gerere, bear, carry; see gerund. Cf. gerous.] A terminal element in words of Latin origin, meaning 'bearing,' as in armiger, etc.

gerah (gē'rā), n. [Heb.] Among the ancient Jews, a unit of weight and of monetary reckoning, the twentieth part of a heavy shekel, or about three-fourths of a gram.

Geranarchus (jēr-nār'kūs), n. [NL., < Gr. γέρων, a crane, & ἀρχή, ruler, < ἀρχω, rule.] Same as Geranias. Gloger, 1842.

Gerani (jēr'nī), n. pl. [NL., pl. of geranus, < Gr. γέρων, a crane.] In Merriam's classification of birds (1813), a group of his Grallae composed of the cranes and some related birds, as the trumpeters (Poepha); nearly equivalent to the Alectorides graufines of Cuvier.

Geraniaceae (jē-rā-ni-ā-sē), n. pl. [NL., form, pl. of geraniaceus, see geraniaceus.] An order of polypetalous exogens, allied to the Rutaceae, but in which the leaves are not glandular-punctate, the axis of the lobed fruit is persistent, or its carpels are distinct and indehiscent, and the flowers are often showy and irregular. The order as now understood is very polymorphous, comprising a half-dozen or more tribes which have been ranked as distinct orders by some authorities. It includes 70 genera and 750 species, distributed through the temperate and subtropical regions of the globe, but especially abundant in South Africa. The larger genera are Oxalis, Pelargonium, Impatiens, Geranium, Erodium, and Tropaeolum.

geraniaceous (jē-rā-ni-ā-sē), a. [< NL. geraniaceus, < L. geranium, geranium; see geranium.] Pertaining or belonging to the order Geraniaceae.

geranial (jē-rā-ni-āl), a. [< geranium + -al.] Same as geraniaceous.

geranium (jē-rā-ni-um), n. [NL., < L. Geranium, < Gr. γέρων, geranium, crane's-bill, so called in reference to the long projecting beak of the seed-capsule, < γέρων, a crane, as E. crane, q. v.] 1. A plant of the genus Geranium.—2. [cop.] A genus of herbaceous plants (rarely undershrubs), the type of the order Geraniaceae, distinguished by opposite lobed leaves, regular flowers, and five one-seeded carpels which separate elastically from the axis at maturity, the styles forming long tails which become revolute or spirally twisted. There are about 100 species, inhabiting temperate regions, of which about 60 are in North America. They have blue or rose-colored flowers, and a few of the species are rarely cultivated in gardens. Most of the species are native, and the roots of several have been used in medicine, as of the G. macranthum, a common plant in the United States. From the long beak of the fruit, the common species have received the name of crane's-bill. The herb-robert, G. robertianum, with dissected leaves, is native of both Europe and the United States.

3. A plant of the genus Pelargonium, of South Africa, of which many varieties are common in house-culture and gardens under the names of sourlet geranium, rose geranium, etc.

Geranium bonariense
Her crimson honors. Courper, Task, III, 377.

4. One of several plants of other genera.—Beefsteak- or strawberry-geranium, the Saxifraga carnifolia, a house plant from China and Japan, with heart-shaped leaves and spreading by runners. Feather-geranium, the Geranium oak, Chenopodium foliosum. Indian geranium, a fragrant grass of the East Indies, Andropogon zosterifolius, which yields the geranium-oil of perfumers. Nettle-geranium, the common clove of gardens, Colona Blumei.

geranomorph (jér'-nô-môrf), n. One of the Geranomorphae.

Geranomorphæ (jér'-nô-môrf-fo), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. γέρων, a crane, + μορφή, form.] In Huxley's system (1867), a superfamily of schizognathous birds, having a comparatively strong rostrum, usually no basipterygoid processes, concavo-convex lamellar maxillopalatines, a truncated angle of the mandible, the sternum comparatively narrow and notched or entire, the crura bare above the nuchal ridge, no pulvifurcula, and two ceca. The cranes and rails, now usually called Alcedinæ or Paludicæ, are the leading representatives of the group. Also named Geranionæ.

geranomorphie (jér'-nô-môrf-fo), a. Having the characters of the Geranomorphæ.

Geranomyia (jér'-nô-mi'-ya), n. [NL. (Haldane, 1833), < Gr. γέρων, a crane, + μυία, a fly.] A genus of crane-flies or Pipulidæ, having a very long proboscis and scutellum, as G. unicolor of England and Ireland.

gerant (jô'-rant), n. [< F. gerant, manager, ppr. of gérer, manage, carry on, < L. gerere, carry, carry on, perform.] The acting partner or manager of a joint-stock association, newspaper establishment, etc. Imp. Dict.

gerarchy, n. An obsolete (Middle English) form of hierarchy.

gerard, n. See gerard.

gerard (jér'-dâ), n. A West Indian snail, Gerardia bicolor. J. E. Gray.

Gerardia (jér'-dâ-di-ô), n. [NL., named after John Gerard, an English herbalist of the 16th century.] 1. A genus of erect annual or perennial herbs, of the order Scrophulariaceæ, of North and South America, mostly extirpated. They have showy yellow, rose-colored, or purple flowers, but are mostly root parishes, and consequently are not found in cultivation. Of the 20 species, 2 belong to the eastern and southern sections of the United States. 2. In zool., the typical genus of corals of the family Gerardiidae.

Gerardiidae (jér'-dâ-di-ô-di-ô), n. pl. [NL., < Gerardia, 2, + -idae.] A family of antipatharian or scleroblastic corals, represented by the genus Gerardia.

gerated (jér'-â-ted), a. [Appar. < F. géré, carry, manage, + -ated + -ed.] In her., covered by a number of small bearings (compare some); especially, differentiated by the use of such small bearings. See difference, and marks of cadency (under cadency).

geratologic (jér'-â-to-lô-jik), a. [< geratologu + -ic.] Of or pertaining to geratology. Amer. Naturalist.

geratologist (jér'-â-to-lô-jist), n. [< geratology + -ist.] One who is versed in geratology.

geratologous (jér'-â-to-lô-jus), a. [< geratologu + -ous.] Pertaining to geratology.

Those shells appear among the geratologu and pathological types. J. Hunt, Science, III, 191.

geratology (jér'-â-to-lô-jî), n. [< Gr. γέρων, a crane, old age, + -λογία, a science, speak; see -ology.] The study of decrepitude and decay, as of the changes wrought in a species or other group of animals approaching extinction.

We may trace the death of an entire race, and show that it takes place in accordance with the laws of geratology. J. Hunt, Science, III, 191.

gerbe (jêrb), n. [< F. gerbe, a sheaf; see garb.] 1. In her., same as garb. 2. A strong paper case filled with a pyrotechnic composition, used in fireworks; a bouquet or sheaf of fire.

Herbs are choked cases, not unlike Roman candles, but often of much larger size. Their fire spreads like a sheaf of wheat. They may be packed with variously colored stars, which will rise 30 feet or more. Encyc. Brit., XX, 148.

gerbe-fuse (jêrb'-fûz), n. In pyrotechny, a kind of fuse used for connecting the parts of a set piece or figure, so prepared as to emit in burning a sheaf or shower of fire similar to that of the gerbe.

gerbil, gerbill (jêrb'-bil), n. [= F. gerbille, < NL. Gerbillus, q. v.] A book-name of any animal of the subfamily Gerbillinae.

Gerbillinae (jêr-bil'-nâ), n. pl. [NL., < Gerbillus + -inae.] A subfamily of rodents, of the family Muridae. The gerbils, all of which are of the Palearctic, Indian, and Ethiopian regions, have generally a long and hairy tail, elongated hind limbs, large osseous bulges of the skull, and narrow incisors. Other genera than Gerbillus are Myodomys, Thomomys, and Dasyomys.

Gerbillus (jêr-bil'-us), n. [NL., dim. of gerbua, another form of gerbou, q. v.] The typical and leading genus of Gerbillinae, containing upward of 40 species, of which the Egyptian gerbil, G. agyptiacus, is one of the best-known; another is G. longicauda. Desmarest, 1804.

gerbo, gerboa, n. See gerbou.

Gerboldæ (jêr-bô'-lô), n. pl. [NL., < Gerbou + -idæ.] A family of rodent mammals; the gerbils; same as Dipodidae.

gerbua, n. See gerbou.

gerd, n. An obsolete form of gerd.

gerd, n. An obsolete form of gerd.

gerdel, n. An obsolete form of gerdel.

geret, n. A Middle English form of geret.

gerafa (AS. pron. gē-af-a), n. [AS. gerafa; see reeve, sheriff.] In Anglo-Saxon hist., an officer corresponding to the steward or seneschal of Norman times; a reeve. The principal classes were the scyrgerfa or sheriff, the hundredscrota or bailiff, and the tun gerfa, or reeve of the township.

In the courts of the hundred and the shire, the gerfa and four best men appeared for the township. Stobbs Const. Hist., 4 B.

gerenda (jêr-rên'-dâ), n. pl. [L., neut. pl. of gerendus, gerundive of gerere, carry, carry on, perform.] Things to be done or conducted; agenda.

gerent (jêr'-ent), a. and n. [L. gerent = s. ppr. of gerere, carry, carry on, perform.] 1. a. Bearing; carrying; carrying on; now used only in composition; as, viagerent, belligerent.

II. a. A ruling power or agency; a doer or performer. [Rare.]

And so sympathy pains with self-section, the two centers of human life on earth. R. L. Stevenson, Walt Whitman.

gerfalcon (jêr-fâ'-kôn), n. [Also written gyrfalcon, and formerly gyrfalcon, gyrfalcon, gyrfalcon (after D. and G.); < ME. gyrfalcon, gyrfalcon, gyrfalcon, etc., rarely gyrfalcon, gyrfalcon (also gyrfalk), < OF. gyrfalcon, gyrfalcon, gyrfalcon, also gyrfalk, gyrfalk = Pr. gyrfalk, gyrfalk = Sp. gyrfalk, gyrfalk = Pg. gyrfalk = It. gyrfalk, gyrfalk, gyrfalk (cf. MD. gyrfalk, D. gyrfalk, MHG. gyrfalk, gyrfalk, G. gyrfalk, gyrfalk, also gyrfalk = Old Dan. gyrfalk = Icel. gyrfalk, adapted from the Rom., with ref. to MHG. gyr, G. gyr, D. gyr, a vulture, which is prob. connected with OHG. gyr, MHG. gyr, G. dial. gyr, greedy, OHG. gyr, gyr, MHG. gyr, gyr, also gyrer, G. gyrer, greedy, eager, from the same root as F. gerard, q. v.; cf. Sw. gyrfalk, a gerfalcon, < gyr = Icel. gyr, a vulture, + falk, falcon.) < ML. gyrfalcon (found in Gesner and Kilian, and no doubt earlier, and now the NL. generic name, lit. 'sacred falcon'; < Gr. γέρων, sacred, + L. falcon), being an adapted translation of the Gr. βίβλος, dial. gyr, a falcon (< Gr. γέρων, a falcon), a name popularly associated with agor, sacred, but in fact connected only remotely. The spelling gyrfalcon, ML. gyrfalcon, gyrfalcon, rests upon a false etymology, the name being referred to L. gyrus, a circle, gyrare, turn round in a circle (see gyre), in supposed reference to its circling flight; but a circling flight is not peculiar to this falcon, and the ML. forms gyrfalcon, gyrfalcon, etc., are plainly reductions of the Rom. forms.] A large falcon of arctic Europe, Falco gyrfalcon, or one of other kinds of boreal falcons forming the subgenus Hierofalco, of large size, very robust organization, and highly rapacious nature. The continental forms are mostly dark-colored, some of them quite blackish, but others are white, more or less spotted with a dusky color as those of Iceland and Greenland. Naturalists are not agreed whether there is but a single variable species or several; the latter opinion prevails. See falcon, Hierofalco.

Above the Chamber of this Chariot, that the Emperor sitteth the inn, he sett upon a Perche 4 or 5 or 8 Gerfalcone. Mandeville, Travels, p. 141.

He had . . . staghounds, foxhounds, harriers, packs for the boar and packs for the wolf, gerfalcone for the heron and haggards for the wild-duck. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., 11.

And a great white gerfalcon did he hold upon his fist. William Morris, Earthly Paradise, I, 14.

gerfalcon, gerfawcon, n. Obsolete forms of gerfalcon.

gerfaukt, n. A Middle English form of gerfalcon.

gerfaunt, n. [ME., a corrupt form of the Ar. zaraf, zarafa, zorafa, a giraffe: see giraffe.] A giraffe.

There also ben many beastes, that ben clept gerfaunt; that is a best pomele or spotted, that is but a litle more-higher, than is a Stele, but he luthre the necke a 20 Cubytes long; and his Crump and his Tayl is as of an Hert; and he may loken over a gret high fous. Mandeville, Travels, p. 222.

gerfult, a. [ME. gerful, gerful, gerful, equiv. to ger, changeable, < gere*, gire*, a circle, course; see gyre.] Changeable; capricious.

To prove in that thil gerful violence. Chaucer, Troilus, iv, 256.

gerhardtite (jêr-hârd'-tî), n. [Named after a chemist (Gerhardt born in Strasburg 1816, died 1856).] A basic nitrate of copper occurring in dark-green orthorhombic crystals, with cuprite and malachite, at Jerome in Arizona.

gerisht, a. [ME. geryshe, gerysch; < gere*, gire*, a circle, course (see gerful), + -ish.] Wild; inconstant. Palsgrave.

Now geryshe ghel and anon aftr wrothe. Lighate, Minor Poems, p. 245.

gerkint, n. See gherkin.

gerland, n. A Middle English form of garland. Chaucer.

ger-laughtert, n. [< ger (appar. some corruption) + laughtert.] Coarse laughter. Nares.

Use the more grave counsellors smiles, not as rude hobblers ger-laughtert, who think they are never merry except they eat the house out of the window with extreme scurility. Melton Six Gold Poetickian (1600).

gerling (jêr'-ling), n. [Perhaps a var. of yearling, with orig. g.] A salmon which has returned the second time from the sea. [Local, Eng.]

gerlond, n. A Middle English form of garland. Chaucer.

germ (jêrm), n. [Formerly also germe (and germen, german, q. v.); < F. germe = Pr. germe, germ = Sp. germen = Pg. germen, germe = It. germe, < L. germen, a sprig, offshoot, sprout, bud, germ, embryo; origin uncertain.] 1. In biol., the first rudiment of any organism; the earliest stage in the development of an organism; the simplest recognizable condition of a living thing; in bot., technically, the embryo of a seed, or, in the laudable use of the word, the ovary. In popular language often used specifically to denote the mature spores of fungi and of other lower cryptogams, especially of funicular kinds, and, in the case of bacteria, the entire organism.

The germ out of which a human being is evolved differs in no visible respect from the germ out of which every animal and plant is evolved. H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 82.

2. By extension, an early or but slightly developed state of an organism; an early embryo. See embryo.

He marks the bounds which Winter may not pass, And blinks his pointed fury; in its case, Russet and rufous folds up the tender germ, Unmolested, with undisturbed art. Courper, Task, vi, 104.

3. Some or any microbe or micro-organism; a spore; as, a cholera-germ. See germicide.

The different kinds of contagia . . . may in essence be cast off in various conditions of a low type, either in their incubated condition or in a germ-stage. H. C. Easton, Quain's Med. Dict., p. 522.

4. That from which anything springs or may spring as if from a seed or root; a rudimentary element; a formative principle; as, the germs of civil liberty or of prosperity.

Religion then has its germs in our nature, and its development is entrusted to our own care. Channing, Perfect Life, p. 2.

The germ of the process of synthesis is best illustrated in constructive imagination. J. Sully, Outlines of Psychol., p. 227.

Germ theory. (a) In biol., the doctrine of biogenesis; the theory that living matter cannot be produced by evolution or development from non-living matter, but is necessarily produced from germs or seeds. The doctrine is opposed to that of abiogenesis, or spontaneous generation. See biogenesis. (b) In pathol., the doctrine that zymotic diseases, together with some not usually classed as zymotic, are due to the presence in the body of living organisms. These organisms, which, so far as they have been positively identified, belong for the most part to the group of bacteria, produce their morbid effects by their vital activity, and probably in large part by the formation of poisons called pyrogens. This doctrine no longer rests upon indirect evidence alone, but also on the positive identification of the febrile organisms in a certain number of diseases, as in phthisis, anthrax, relapsing fever, typhoid fever, and some others. — Syn. Fetus, Rudimental, See embryo.

germain, a. See germane.

german (jér'man), a. and n. [The same as germano (q. v.), formerly german. < ME. german, german, german, < OF. germain = Pr. german, german = OSp. germano, Sp. hermano, akin (as noun, a brother, hermana, a sister). = Pg. It. germano, < L. germanus, near akin (of brothers and sisters who have the same parents, or at least the same father); from the same root as germen, a germ: see germ. As applied to terms of kindred, this adj. follows its noun, according to the F. idiom.] I. a. 1. Sprung from the same father and mother or from brothers or sisters: always placed after its noun.

We byeth alle . . . children of holy cherche brother germays of uader and of moder.

Agende of Inyght (E. E. T. S.), p. 146.
Ye have no bretheren ne cosyns germays.
Chaucer, Tale of Melibeus.

Brother german denotes one who is brother both by the father's and mother's side, consanguine german, children of brothers or sisters.

2t. Nearly related; closely akin.

Wert thou a leopard, thou wert german to the lion.
Shak., T. of A., iv. 3.

3t. Closely connected; germane.

Ger. The carriages, sir, are the hangers.
Hom. The phrase would be more german to the matter, if we could carry cannon by our sides.

Cousin german. See cousin.

II. n. One sprung from the same stock; specifically, a full brother, sister, or cousin.

One now, proud Mercutio, Thyselfe thy message do to german deliver.

You'll have counters for cousins, and gennets for germans.
Shak., Othello, i. 1.

German (jér'man), a. and n. [< L. Germanus, a. and n., German, Germani, n. pl., the Germans, Germania, Germany. The name is prob. of Celtic origin, and is said to mean 'shouters,' or, according to another explanation, 'neighbors.' The G. word for 'German' is Deutsch: 'a German' ein Deutscher; see Deutsch.] I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to an important Teutonic race inhabiting central Europe, or to Germany, or to its inhabitants or their language. At the beginning of the Christian era the Germans occupied central Europe eastward to the Vistula, southward to the Carpathians and Danube, and westward to beyond the Rhine. Among their chief tribes were the Suevi, Lombards, Vandals, Heruli, Chatti, Quadi, Ubi, and Cherusci. After the epoch of migration in the third and fourth centuries, many tribes as the Franks, Burgundians, Lombards, and Vandals, settled permanently in other regions, and became merged in the new French, Italian and Spanish nations. In the East the Germans were displaced by Slavs, although important parts of this region have since been Germanized. Since about the twelfth century the Germans have called themselves die Deutschen. In medieval and modern times they have occupied a region which has had many political changes, but which has remained substantially the same extent for centuries. The former Roman German empire contained various lands not inhabited by Germans. At the present time the Germans form the great majority in the reconstituted German empire; they number over one fourth of the inhabitants of Austria-Hungary, chiefly in the western and northwestern parts; there are about 1,000,000 Germans in the Baltic provinces and elsewhere in Russia, and over two thirds of the Swiss are of German race and language. Abbreviated Ger. or G. — German Baptists. See Dunker. — German bit, black, etc. See the noun. — German carp, an English look-name for the Carassius vulgaris or gibelio. — German Catholic, one of a religious party or body in Germany whose members seceded from the Roman Catholic Church in 1844 and succeeding years, and gradually adopted various ideas different from those of orthodox Christianity. The progress was hindered by governmental interference and by internal disputes between the two chief leaders, Bonge and Czarski. After the revolution of 1848 nearly all its members were gradually absorbed in other religious bodies. — German duck, see duck. — German empire. See Holy Roman Empire, under empire. — German fute. See fute. — German fringes, gold, horse, millet, etc. See the noun. — German paste, a kind of paste composed of pea-meal, sweet almonds, lard, sugar, bay-saffron, and hard boiled egg, used for feeding larks, thrushes, nightingales, and other singing birds. — German plate-glass. Same as broad glass (which see, under broad). — German porcelain and pottery, porcelain and pottery produced in Germany. The best-known varieties of German porcelain are those of Meissen (generally called Dresden) and Berlin. Other celebrated factories are those of Aachen, Höchst, Frankenthal, Ludwigsburg, Nymphenburg, and Grunshreinbach. — German sarcaparilla, silver, etc. See the noun. — German sixth, in music, a chord of the extreme sixth, containing the major third and perfect fifth of the bass, as shown in the figure. — German snipe, the dowitcher; so called in distinction from English snipe. Also called Dutch snipe. — German stitch, a stitch used in wadded work, in which alternately a tapestry-stitch and a tent-stitch are worked, forming a diagonal line. — German text, a form of black-letter with profusely flourished and very large capital letters.

Specimen of German Text.

German tinder. Same as anodon. — German wool. Same as Berlin wool (which see, under wool).

II. n. 1. A member of the German race, or a native or an inhabitant of Germany. See I. — 2. The language of Germany or of the German people, a sub-branch or division of the Teutonic or Germanic branch of Indo-European or Arvan language. Its two principal divisions are the Low German, of the northern or lower part of the country, and the High German, of the southern or higher part. See High German, Low German, below.

3. Especially, the literary language of Germany. It is one of the High-German dialects, the former court and official dialect of Saxony (though not entirely free from elements of other dialects) and was brought into general learned and literary use early in the sixteenth century, by Luther's writings, especially by his translation of the Bible. — High German, a collective name for the dialects of central and southern Germany, as distinguished from the Low German of the north. The dialects it includes are many and of various groups, e. g., Alemannic, Frankish, Austrian, etc. Its history is divided by the existing literary documents into three periods: Old High German, from the eighth to the twelfth century (the leading dialect, Frisian, the literature chiefly Christianizing); Middle High German, from the twelfth to the sixteenth century (one of the leading dialects, Swabian, the literature chiefly epic, as the Nibelungenlied and Helden saga, and lyric, as the writings of the Minnesingers); and the New High German, or the Modern German, or German from the sixteenth century down. See above. — Low German, a collective name for the dialects of northern Germany and the Low Countries, among which the Netherlandish or Dutch and the Plattdeutsch have literature at the present time. In a restricted sense, the name is applied to the Low German as spoken in the northern parts of Germany. It is divided historically into three periods: Old Low German, Middle Low German, and Modern Low German, corresponding substantially to the periods of High German. The dialects of the Teutonic invaders of Britain were of the Old Low German class. See Anglo-Saxon, English, Frisian, Dutch, etc.

4. [l. c.] In dancing: (a) An elaborate form of the cotillon, in which round dances predominate and the figures vary according to the invention of the leader, and in which the changing of partners and giving of favors form a special feature. (b) An entertainment at which the German exclusively is danced.

There was no german that morning, and the hotel band was going through its repertoire of the benefit of a sham pageant party on the lawn.

5. [l. c.] In coal-mining, a stick, filled with gunpowder, used as a fuse in blasting. [Eng.] germander (jér-man'dér), n. [< ME. germander, < OF. germandier, F. germandier = Pr. germandria (ML. germandria, G. germander) = Sp. camedris, camedrio = It. camandria, camandria, camandria; various corruptions of L. chamaedrys, wall-germander, < Gr. chamaedrys, lit. 'a small wall-germander'; on the ground, + drys, a tree, esp. the oak. Cf. chamaelon, camomile.] A common name for lubiate plants of the genus Tuercia, but especially for T. chamaedrys, having purple flowers, common in England. The water-germander, T. scandens, and the wild-germander or wood-germander, T. scabra, are the germander of the United States. [F. Camellia see.]

For December and January and the latter part of November, you must take such things as are perennial winter-bolty, i. e., bay, . . . germander, fig., orange tree, lemon tree, and myrtles, if they be desired.

Her clear germander eye
Droop'd in the great factor's early gleam.

6. [l. c.] A name for a Stemmaton montana, an ornamental tropical tree as in fig.

germane (jér-man'), a. [Formerly also germain; the same as german (q. v.), but directly < L. germanus, akin: see german.] 1t. Closely akin; german.

Baldwin, brother germane of the duke of Lorraine.
H. W. & C. Rogers, II. 10.

Not be alone shall suffer . . . that are germane to him, though removed by time, shall all come under the banner.

Hence — 2. Bearing a close relation; relevant, pertinent.

It will give a kind of constitution thoroughly germane to the nature and purposes of a county representation, according to the old rule of the constitution. Gladstone.

[History], a study of all that is most germane to the true and perpetual genius of Oxford.

Germanic (jér-man'ik), a. and n. [= D. Germanisch = G. Germanisch = Dan. Sv. Germanisk, Germanisk = F. Germanique = Sp. Pg. It. Germanico, < L. Germanicus, < Germani, the Germans.] I. a. 1. Of or belonging to Germany or the Germans. — 2. In a wider sense, of or belonging to the peoples of Germany and their kindred, or to their institutions; Teutonic.

II. n. The language of the Teutonic or Germanic peoples. See Teutonic.

Germanism (jér'man-izm), n. [= D. G. Germanismus = Dan. Germanisme = Sv. Germanism = F. Germanisme = It. Germanismo; as German + -ism.] 1. The quality of being German in feelings or sentiment; regard for love of German institutions, interests, and ideas.

The German liberals . . . overflow with talk of Germanism, German unity, the German nation, the German empire, the German army, and the German navy, the German church, and German science.

H. Spencer, Study of Sociol., p. 214.
Carlyle was profoundly imbued with Germanism.
N. A. Rev., CXXXIX. 165.

2. An imitation of German speech; an idiom or phrase copied from the German or resembling German in construction.

It is full of Latinisms, Gallicisms, Germanisms, and all such but Englishisms.

Germanist (jér'man-ist), n. [< German + -ist.] A student of the German language; in a wider sense, a student or one having an expert knowledge of Germanic or Teutonic philology.

We are all to meet, along with a certain Mrs. Austin, a young Germanist.
Carlyle, in Freude.

germanium (jér-ma'ni-um), n. [NL., < L. Germania, Germany: see German.] Chemical symbol, Ge; specific gravity, 5.409; atomic weight, 72.3. An element discovered in 1885 by Winkler in the mineral argyrodite, which is a sulphid of germanium and silver. It is a metal of gray-white color and fine metallic luster, and crystallizes in octahedrons. It melts at about 200° C. It does not tarnish in air at ordinary temperature, is insoluble in hydrochloric acid, is oxidized by nitric acid, and dissolves in aqua regia. In the periodic system germanium takes the place of the hypothetical ekasilicon, between gallium and arsenic on the one hand and silicon and zinc on the other. Germanium is also said to be present in the mineral euxenite.

Germanization (jér'man-i-zá'shon), n. [< Germanize + -ation.] The act of Germanizing, or the state of being Germanized.

That the Turk has got to go is now hardly open to doubt, and in as far as British statesmanship can promote the Germanization, as opposed to the Russification, of Turkey in Europe, our policy should be directed to that end.

Nineteenth Century, XXI. 556.

Germanize (jér'man-iz), v. t.; pref. and pp. Germanized, pp. Germanizing. [— F. germaniser; as German + -ize.] 1. To render German in character or sentiment; cause to conform to German ideals or methods.

When the Emperor Anne . . . intrusted the whole administration of the country to her favorite, Baron, the German influence became almost exclusive, and the court, the official world, and the school were Germanized.

D. M. Wallace, Russia, p. 187.
Many Germans, the Swiss so far as they are Germanized, the Slavonians, the Poles, and the Turks, are short-headed.

Huxley, Critiques and Addresses, p. 151.

2. To translate into German.

The Dutch hath him who Germanized the story of Shalott.

Sylvester, Tr. of the Barabara Weeks, II., Babylon.

germ-area (jér'ma're-á), n. That part of a germinating ovum of some animals where a mass of endoderm-cells are heaped up on the inner surface of a hollow sphere of ectoderm-cells, and which is specially the seat of further germinative processes. See germ disk.

germarium (jér-ma'ri-um), n.; pl. germaria (a.). [NL., < L. germ (or germ), germ, + -arium.]

The proper ovum or ovary of some of the lower animals, as the flat-bodied turbellarians and trematoid worms, which evolves the ova, and distinguished from the vitellarium.

There is a single or double germarium, having nearly the same structure as the ovary of Macrourium, and the ova are formed in it in the same way.

Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 101.

germ-cell (jér'm-sel), n. 1. A germ when it is a cell, or has the morphological value of a cell; an impregnated ovum about to germinate, but not yet become more than a single cell; a cytula. — 2. One of the

Fig. 1. Germ cell of a Trématode (from a Trématode).
a. Nucleus; b. Nucleolus; c. Cytoplasm; d. Cell membrane; e. Contractile vacuole; f. Part of the cell wall (highly magnified).

similar cells of a germinating organism; a cell resulting from segmentation of the vitellus; a blastomere.

The germ-cell assimilates the surrounding yolk, and propagates its kind by spontaneous fission, whence the first cell has been termed the primary germ-cell, and its progeny the derivative germ-cell. Brande and Cox.

germ-cup (jér'm'kup), n. That germ-form of a germ which is a gastrula. See gastrula, and extract under germ-form.

germ-disease (jér'm'di-zé'), n. Any disease produced by a microscopic parasite or microbe.

germ-disk (jér'm'disk), n. The germ-area of a germ when of a discoidal shape. In a mammal it is specifically the part of the blastoderm, in other animals it is of a different morphological character, but is always the seat of specially active germination after the formation of the original blastoderm. Also called animal disk.

germen (jér'men), n. [Also germin; < L. germen (germin), a sprout, offshoot, germ; see germ.] 1. A germin; an ovum; an egg, as of a bird, while still in the ovary. [Rare.]

Then, all shaking thought,
Crack nature's moulds, all germens spill at once,
That make ungulate man. Shak., Lear, III, 2.

The germen in the seed of a plant. Boyle, Works, VI, 594.

2. A shoot or sprout. See the extract.

The tenant for life can cut all that is not timber, with certain exceptions. He cannot cut ornamental trees, and he cannot destroy "germens," as the old law calls them, or stools of underwood, and he cannot destroy trees planted for the protection of banks and various exceptions of that kind.

L. A. Gooden, Modern Law of Real Property, p. 49.

8. The ovary. Compare germarium.

germ-form (jér'm'fórm), n. The form of a germ at any period of its germination or development, with reference to its morphological value. Thus, the ectula, the morula, the blastula, and the gastrula are successive germ-forms in the history of most germs.

This highly important and interesting germ-form is called the germ cup, or the . . . gastrula. Haeckel, Evol. of Man (trans.), I, 102.

germ-gland (jér'm'glánd), n. A gland that produces germs; an ovary or spermary; an ovary or testis; especially, a primitive indifferent gland which is subsequently differentiated into the essential glandular organ of either sex.

In Gordin the excretory ducts of the paired germ-glands are in both sexes united with the hind gut. Giesebrecht, Comp. Anat. (trans.), p. 180.

germ-history (jér'm'hís'to-ri), n. The embryology of any given organism; ontogeny; distinguished from tribal history or phylogeny.

germicidal (jér'mi sí-dál), a. [< germicide + -al.] Pertaining to or of the nature of a germicide; germ-killing; as, germicidal gases.

Some organisms, on the other hand, are either in themselves innocuous or are killed when they enter the blood, which is a fluid tissue and as such is germicide; hence the tissues in a healthy condition are spoken of as germicidal. Encyc. Brit., XXII, 680.

germicide (jér'mi síd), n. [< L. germen (germin), a germ, + -cida, a killer, < cadere, kill.] That which destroys germs; specifically, a substance capable of killing the germs, microbes, or micro-organisms of certain zymotic diseases, as cholera, or used for that purpose.

These aggressions [of fever in whooping cough] have always with us in an incipient use in the virus of the disease; . . . they are better second or prevented by whatever aids the resisting power of the child than by . . . the use of special germicides. Quinn Med. Dict., p. 137.

germiculture (jér'mi-kul'tur), n. [< L. germen (germin), a germ, + cultura, culture.] The artificial cultivation of the microscopical organisms (bacteria) connected with certain diseases. See germ theory, under germ.

germiculturist (jér'mi-kul'tur-ist), n. [< germiculture + -ist.] One who makes artificial cultures of germs, especially of bacteria; a bacteriologist.

The third point—the antiseptic value of these bodies still remains for the germiculturist to determine. Medical News, III, 640.

germin, n. Same as germen, 2.

germinal (jér'mi-nál), a. [= F. germinal = Sp. Pg. germinal = It. germinale, < L. germen (germin), a sprout, offshoot, germ; see germ.] Pertaining to or constituting a germ; of the nature of a germ or of germination; germinative; as, germinal vesicles; germinal ideas or principles.

These germinal ideas of making his mind tell upon the world at large . . . had been sprouting under cover. George Eliot, Middlemarch, I, 304.

Germinant or living matter is always transparent, colourless, and, as far as can be ascertained by examination with the highest powers, perfectly structureless, and it exhibits these same characters at every period of existence. Koide, Protoplasm, p. 38.

Germinal disk, a germ disk. Germinal epithelium, see epithelium. Germinal membrane, a blastodermic membrane or blastoderm; also, the cell-wall of an ovum. — Germinal pole, the central point from which development spreads in the ovum of some animals, as a bird or mammal; the pole of a germ-area. Quinn. — Germinal spot, the nucleus of a germ cell or ovum. Also called nucleus germinativus and spot of Wagner, because discovered by Wagner, 1826. — Germinal vesicle, the nucleus of an ovum, contained in the vitellus and containing the nucleolus or germinal spot; also called vacuole of Purkinje, because discovered by Purkinje, 1825. The name, like germinal spot, is a misnomer, as this vesicle does not germinate, but soon disappears, and is replaced by a nucleus which includes male elements in ova which are fecundated and therefore able to germinate; both terms are used chiefly in text-books of human anatomy.

Germinal (zhär-mé-nál'), n. [< L. germen (germin), a sprout, offshoot, germ; see germinant, a.] The seventh month of the French revolutionary calendar. It commenced (in 1794) March 21st and ended April 19th.

germinant (jér'mi-nánt), a. [< L. germinant (germin), pp. of germinare, germinate; see germinate.] Germinating; sprouting; beginning to grow; growing; gradually developing.

Prophesies . . . are not fulfilled gradually at once, but have springing and germinating accomplishment throughout many ages. Bacon, Advancement of Learning, II, 130.

May it not one day be written for the praise of the American Bar, that it helped to keep the true idea of the state alive and germinating in the American mind? R. Chittenden, Addresses, p. 138.

germinate (jér'mi-nát), v. [< pret. and pp. germinatus, pp. of germinare, < L. germinatus, pp. of germinare (> It. germinare = Pg. Sp. germinar = OF. germiner), sprout, bud, germinate, < germen (germin), a sprout, bud, germ; see germ.] 1. intrans. 1. To act as a germ; begin to undergo development toward a more complete form or state; form or be formed into an embryo, as an impregnated ovum. — 2. Specifically, to sprout; bud; shoot; begin to vegetate or grow, as a plant or its seed.

Their tree of life shall germinate. Jer. Paine, Works (ed. 1835), II, 135.

The preceptor will sow the seeds of that taste which will soon germinate. Goldsmith, Cultivation of Taste.

II. trans. To cause to sprout; put forth; produce. [Rare.]

In the leafy months of June and July several French departments germinate a set of rebellious paper leaves, named Proclamations, Resolutions, Journal, or Duimals, of the Union for Resistance to Oppression. Catulle, French Rev., II, iv, 1.

germination (jér'mi-ná'shon), n. [< ME. germinacion = F. germination = Sp. germinacion = Pg. germinação = It. germinazione, < L. germinatio, sprouting forth, budding, < germinare, pp. germinatus, sprout, bud; see germinate.] The act, process, or result of germinating; the evolution of a germ or seed; the formation of an embryo from an ovum.

The perpetual bawm and germinations, the thrustings forth and swelling of his senses. Jer. Paine, Works (ed. 1835), II, 137.

Specifically, in bot. (a) The process of development of the embryo of a seed into a perfect plant. The conditions necessary for germination are the presence of moisture, free oxygen, as in atmospheric air, and warmth. Moisture softens the integuments of the seed and relaxes the tissues of the embryo, at the same time dissolving such nutrient matters in the seed as sugar, dextrine, etc. In readiness for their assimilation by the embryo. The absorption of oxygen is necessary for the chemical changes which always accompany growth. The degree of warmth needed to excite to action the vital forces of the plant varies in different species, some seeds, as those of wheat, being capable of germinating upon melting ice, while others require a temperature of over 60° F. During germination various chemical changes take place in the starch and other inorganic material stored up for the use of the embryo in the cotyledons or in the albumen of the seed, rendering them soluble and fit for assimilation, which changes are usually accompanied by an increase of temperature, as is seen in the process of malthus. As an immediate result of the growing process thus excited and carried on in the seed a root is produced which strikes downward, fixing itself in the soil and beginning to absorb therefrom nourishment for the new plant. At the same time the other extremity of the axis of growth is directed upward and develops a stem and leaves. (b) The similar development of a plant from the spore in cryptogams. (c) The early period of growth in a bud, as of a bulb or of a rhizome. (d) The protrusion and growth of the pollen tube from the pollen grain.

germinative (jér'mi-ná-tiv), a. [= F. germinatif = Pr. germinatif = Pg. It. germinativo; as germinare + -iv.] Pertaining to, constituting, or capable of germination; germinative.

germinet (jér'min), r. i. [ME. germinet; < OF. germiner, germinate; see germinate.] To germinate; sprout.

But save the gemmes in the summer,
That hope of future germinet may be. Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 112.

germ-layer (jér'm'lá'ér), n. In biol., any blastodermic membrane or blastoderm; any layer of cells, forming a membrane, which enters into the structure of a germ in its early stages. The first is the single blastoderm of a blastula or vesicular morula. By invagination this germ-form becomes a gastrula, with two germ layers, the hypoblast blastodermic layer, or ectoderm, and the epiblast blastodermic layer, or endoderm; development between which two of a third mesoblastic layer of cells, or mesoderm, and subsequent splitting of this into an inner and an outer layer, called splanchnopleure and somatopleure, results in the four germ-layers of most metazoic animals. Names of special germ-layers or germ membranes are: blastophylla, epiblast, mesoblast, hypoblast, endoderm, ectoderm, mesoderm, somatopleure, splanchnopleure, etc. They are also called layers, as skin-layer, serous layer, etc. See cuts under gastrula and gastrulation.

The Metazoa can alone be considered as true animals, and the origin from two primary germ-layers may be held to form the primary character of the animal kingdom. Haeckel, Evol. of Man (trans.), I, 88.

germ-membrane (jér'm'mem'brán), n. A germ-layer.

germon (jér'mon), n. [< NL. germa; origin obscure.] Oreogobius germon, a fish of the family Scombridae, closely related to the common tunny.

germ-peg (jér'm'peg), n. A corruption of germ-pod.

germ-plasma (jér'm'pláz'mí), n. Protoplasm peculiar to a germ or ovum, and supposed to influence or determine the character of the resulting organism, by virtue of its special chemical or molecular composition. (Germ plasma may thus be considered, theoretically, as the physical basis of all the phenomena which are grouped under the name of heredity.)

The germ plasma is regarded as a substance of peculiar chemical or even more special molecular composition, which passes over from one generation to another. John Roy Mearns, Soc., 1886, p. 712.

germ-pore (jér'm'pór), n. In cryptogamic bot., a pore or pit in the outer integument of a spore, through which the exit of the germ-tube takes place.

Many of these pores serve as places of exit for the tubular outgrowths from the spore at the time of germination, and may therefore be termed germ-pores; others perform no such function, and are therefore only simple pores or pits. De Bary, Fungi (trans.), p. 100.

germ-shield (jér'm'shíld), n. Same as notaspis. The germ shield is merely the earliest rudiment of that dorsal part which first becomes defined. Haeckel, Evol. of Man (trans.), I, 208.

germ-stock (jér'm'stok), n. Same as stolo prolifer (which see, under stolo).

germ-tube (jér'm'túb), n. In cryptogamic bot., a tubular or thread-like growth first formed by a spore in germination, which by continued development and cell-division in one or more directions becomes the thallus. In fungi the germ-tube may develop into either the ordinary mycelium or a promycelium.

germule (jér'mul), n. [< germ + dim. -ule.] A germ; especially, a small or incipient germ. The majestic tree of human thought can never be comprehended unless regard is had to the formless germule of the psychical life of the zoophyte, and ascending evolution is followed up in the animal series. Tr. for Alien and Scared, VI, 68.

germ-vesicle (jér'm'ves'i-kl), n. In embryol., a germ in a vesicular state. It is either (a) a true germ vesicle or blastula, preceding gastrulation, as in most animals, or (b) an intestinal germ vesicle or gastrula, peculiar to mammals; in the latter case it follows gastrulation and is generally confounded with a blastula; it is what is called in human anatomy the blastodermic vesicle. See blastophylla, metazoeytis, and cut under gastrulation.

germ, v. and n. See germ.

germet, v. and a. See germ.

gerocomia (jér-ô-kô'mi-â), n. [NL: see gerocoma.] Same as gerocomy.

gerocomial (jér-ô-kom'i-kál), a. [< gerocomy + -ial.] Pertaining to gerocomy. [Rare.]

gerocomy (jér-ô-kô'mi), n. [= F. gerocomie, < NL. gerocomia, short for gerontocomia (cf. L. gerontocomicum, < IGr. γερωνοκομειν, a hospital for old men, < Gr. γέρων (geron), an old man, + κομειν, take care of.) Medical discussion of the proper regimen for old people. [Rare.]

gerontes (ge-ron'tes), n. pl. [Gr. γέρωντες, pl. of γέρων (geron), an old man.] In Græcæ, in Dorian states, members of an aristocratic assembly of elders called the gerontes. The gerontes als of sports consisted of the two kings, as its presidents, and thirty members. Candidates for membership were not eligible under sixty years of age, nor unless of distinguished character and station. The gerontes held office for life; their functions were partly deliberative, in that they prepared measures to be laid before the popular assembly, partly executive, and partly judicial. With the ephors and kings, they constituted the supreme authority of the state.

gerontikon (ge-ron'ti-kon), n.; pl. gerontika (-ika). [Gr. γερωνίκιον, neut. of Gr. γερωνικός, of an old man, < γέρων (γερων-), an old man.] In the Gr. Ch., a book containing a collection of anecdotes and apothegms or sayings of ancient anchorites and monastic fathers.

This is one of the collections of Apophthegmata or Gerontika so common in monastic MSS., of which probably no two are alike. Amer. Jour. Philol., VII, 230.

gerontocracy (jer-on-tok'ra-si), n. [Gr. γερωντοκρατία, an old man, + κράτος, power.] Government by old men.

I agree with Mr. Lowe that we are in danger of engendering both a gerontocracy and a plutocracy. Gladstone, quoted in W. H. Gregg's Allice. Essays, 1st ser., p. 172.

gerontogeous (je-ron-tō-jō'us), a. [Gr. γερωντογενής, an old man, + γῆ, the earth.] Belonging to the old world: said of plants, etc.

gerontoxon (jer-on-tok'son), n. [Gr. γερωντοξών, an old man, + τόξον, a bow.] In med., same as arcus senilis (which see, under arcus).

geropigia, jerupigia (jer-ō-, jer-ō-pi-jī'ā), n. [Pg. geropigia, Sp. gerapigia, ME. gerapigra, terapigra (cf. mod. pop. E. heckery-pickery), all corruptions of hiera-piera, q. v.] A fictitious liquor exported from Portugal for adulterating port and other wines, and also other beverages. Its composition is various, but it generally contains about one-third of strong brandy and two-thirds of unfarmated grape-juice, strongly sweetened, and colored by ratany-root, logwood, etc. Very delicious ingredients are sometimes found in it on analysis.

-gerous. [L. -ger, -gera, -gerum: see -ger and -ous.] A terminal element in words of Latin origin, the common adjective form of -ger, '-bearing,' as in cornigerous, etc.

gerrard, n. [ME., also gerard: with suffix -ard, equiv. to OF. guerrier, garrour, a warrior, enemy, < querre, war: see warrior.] An enemy; specifically, the enemy—that is, the devil; fiend.

The gerrard thus can hit battle,
And me also, alias that while!
Holy Host (E. E. T. S.), p. 64.

Gerres (jer'ez), n. [L. gerres, an inferior salted sea-fish.] A Cuvierian (1829) genus of acanthopterygian fishes.

Gerrhonotidae (jer-ō-not'i-dā), n. pl. [NL., < Gerrhonotus + -idae.] A family of lacertilians, typified by the genus Gerrhonotus; scarcely distinguished from Anguillae.

Gerrhonotus (jer-ō-nō'tus), n. [NL., < Gr. γέρων, anything made of wickerwork, as a shield, screen, etc., + νότος, back.] A genus of lizards, of the family Anguillae, or giving name to the Gerrhonotidae. There are several species in the western United States, as G. nobilis, G. princeps, and G. multicarinatus.

Gerrhosauridae (jer-ō-sā'ri-dā), n. pl. [NL., < Gerrhosaurus + -idae.] A family of true lacertilians, typified by the genus Gerrhosaurus. They are characterized by having the clavicles dilated proximally, and frequently loop-shaped; arches present; the suprascapular bones fused over; the premaxillary single; and the body with osteodermal plates with regular tubules, formed by a transverse plate anastomosing with perpendicular plates. It is a family of Africa and Madagascar, containing a number of species capable of running with great celerity and of burrowing to some extent in the sand.

Gerrhosaurus (jer-ō-sā'rus), n. [NL., < Gr. γέρων, anything made of wickerwork, as a shield, screen, etc., + σαῦρος, a lizard.] The typical genus of the family Gerrhosauridae; the basket-lizards. G. flavularis is a South African species.

Gerrhosaurus flavularis els, about 12 inches long, of a yellowish brown color with lighter and darker markings.

gerrick (ger'ik), n. [E. dial. (Cornish); origin obscure. Cf. gierack (D.).] A local English (Cornish) name of the garfish, Belone vulgaris.

Gerris (jer'is), n. pl. [NL., < Gerrus or Gerris + -idae.] 1. A family of water bugs, or aquatic heteropterous insects, typified by the genus Gerris. See Hydrobatidae. Also written Gerrida, Gerridae.—2. A family of acanthopterygian fishes, typified by the genus Gerris. They have a compressed body, protruding jaws, lower pharyngeal bones generally coalesced in the adult, a long dorsal fin with the anterior portion spinigerous, and fin moderate or short and with two to four spines, and four complete sets of gills and pseudobranchia. The species are numerous, and representatives occur in all tropical and subtropical seas. Most of them are of small size, rarely exceeding 3 or 4 inches.

Gerris (jer'is), n. [NL.; cf. Gr. γέρων, a shield or other thing made of wickerwork.] The name-giving genus of bugs of the family Gerridae. Fabricius, 1794.

The old name, Gerris, by which many of these insects (Hydrobatidae) were formerly known has become obsolete by reason of its having been used for various insects not generally connected with them. Our most common species, G. remigis, has been taken from G. erris and is now placed in the genus Hydrotrichus. Stand. Nat. Hist., II, 267.

gerrock (ger'ok), n. [Sc., also spelled gerrack and gieracks. Cf. gerrak, q. v., a samlet, perhaps < Gael. gearr, short.] A local Scotch name of the coalfish.

gerrymander (jer'i-man-dēr), n. [In humorous imitation of salamander, from a fancied resemblance to this animal of a map of one of the districts formed in the redistricting of Massachusetts by the legislature in 1811, when Elbridge Gerry was governor. The redistricting was intended (it was believed) the instigation of Gerry) to secure unfairly the election of a majority of Democratic senators. It is now known, however, that he was opposed to the measure.] In U. S. politics, an arbitrary arrangement of the political divisions of a State, in disregard of the natural or proper boundaries as indicated by geography or position, made so as to give one party an unfair advantage in elections. The effect of such a proceeding has sometimes been to secure to a party a majority in the legislature of a State, or in the senate of Congress, at an election in which the opposite party received a majority of the total number of seats.

gerrymander (jer'i-man-dēr), v. t. [gerry-mander, n.] 1. To district, as a State, by the unfair arrangement called a gerrymander; arrange arbitrarily and unfairly, as the boundaries of political divisions, for the sake of partisan advantage in elections.—2. To shift and manipulate, as facts, so as to force an agreement with a preconceived notion. [Rare.]

Gerrymander and districting cannot but form a domain of political controversy. A material with which to operate. Rev. & Amer. Philol. Soc., XVIII, 12.

gersdorffite (jer'sdorf-it), n. [Named after Hofrath von Gersdorff, proprietor of a nickel mine where the mineral was first found.] A mineral consisting of nickel sulphide and nickel arsenide, having a silver-white to steel-gray color and metallic luster.

Gershonite (jer'shon-it), n. [Gr. γέρσην + -ite.] Among the ancient Hebrews, a descendant of Gershon, son of Levi, and a member of the second in rank of the three great families of the Levites. It was the duty of the Gershonites, when the tabernacle was moved, to carry the coverings and hangings.

gersomet, gersamet, s. [Also gersom, gersum, gressum, gressome, gressume, gressuin, etc.; < MF. gersum, < AS. gersum, gersum, gressum, gressum, riches, < Teut. gersami, gersami, a costly thing, a jewel.] 1. Riches; wealth; treasure.—2. Bonus; extra payment, such as a fine exacted from a tenant on the transfer of his holding, or a sum by way of commutation in advance in compensation for a reduction of the rate of rent under the lease.

Norwich . . . paid unto the king twenty pounds; . . . but now it payeth seventy pounds by weight to the king, and an hundred shillings for a gersome to the queen. Holland, tr. of Camden's Britannia, p. 474.

gerund (jer'und), n. [L. gerundium, also called gerundius modus (see gerundive), < gerundus, another form of gerendus, neut. gerendum, gerendum, only in oblique cases, the gerundive and gerund, respectively, of gerere, carry, carry on, perform: so called because, according to the old grammarians, the gerund prop. expressed the doing or the necessity of doing something.] The name given originally by grammarians to a Latin verbal noun, used in oblique cases with an infinitival value; as, amando, amando, amando, 'loving'; hence applied also in other languages to somewhat kindred formations; e. g., in Sanskrit to forms in tra, ya, etc., having the value of indeclinable adjectives; as, gata, -gata, 'going'; in Anglo-Saxon to a dat. e infinitive after es; as, god to eatan, 'good to eat' (that is, 'good for eating'). Abbreviated ger.

gerund-grinder (jer'und-grin'dér), n. A pedant; a pedagogue. [Humorous.]

The world is governed by names, and with the word pedagogue has been indelibly associated the idea of a pedant, a mere plodder, a petty tyrant, a gerund-grinder, and a humbugger. F. Kuer, Water Evening, II.

Here is the glass for pedagogues, preceptors, tutors, governors, gerund-grinders, and bear leaders to view themselves in. Stern, Tristram Shandy, IV, 112.

gerund-grinding (jer'und-grin'ding), n. Plodding or pedantic grammatical or other study or teaching. [Humorous.]

Gerund-grinding and padding are usually prepared for at the last moment. Horn's Every-day Book, II, 20.

Other departments of schooling had been infinitely more productive for our young friend than the gerund-grinding one. Carlyle, Sterling, I, 4.

gerundial (jē-run'di-āl), a. and n. [L. gerundialis, gerundialis, < gerundus, < gerundus.] I. a. Same as gerundive.

II. n. Same as gerundive.

Not to mention exceptional cases, the Latin regularly employed the gerundial both actively and passively. G. F. March, Lectures on Eng. Lang., xix.

gerundially (je-run'di-āl-i), adv. In the manner of a gerund.

The Icelandic active participle is used gerundially as a passive. G. F. March, Lectures on Eng. Lang., xix.

gerundival (jē-run'di-vāl or jer-un'di-vāl), a. [Gr. gerundivē + -al.] Pertaining to or of the nature of a gerundive. Also gerundial.

The line between the gerundial and the more ordinary adjective use is in other cases not always easy to draw. Whitman, Trans. Amer. Philol. Ass., XV, 110.

gerundive (je-run'div), n. [Gr. γέρουνδive = Pr. gerundus = Sp. gerundus = Pr. gerundus = G. gerundus; see gerund.] A name given originally by Latin grammarians to the future participle passive, as amandus, 'to be loved,' requiring to be loved; but also used in the grammar of other languages, as Sanskrit, to indicate verbal adjectives having a like office. Also gerundial.

gerundively (je-run'div-i), adv. In the manner of a gerund or gerundive; as or in place of a gerund or gerundive.

gersia (jer'si-ā), n. [L. gersia, < Gr. γέρσην, < Gr. γέρσην, an old man. Cf. senate, of similar origin.] A senate or council of elders in many ancient Roman states, particularly that of Sparta. It was the highest authority in the Spartan polity corresponding to the senate of democratic states, in most form. See gersia.

gervao (jer-vā-ō), n. [Ital.] The Stachytarpheta jamaicensis, a verbaceous herb of the West Indies and South America, reputed to possess valuable medicinal properties. The leaves have been used to adulterate tea.

gerver (jer'ver), n. [Origin obscure.] A name of the spotted rock deer. Also called gorer.

geryt, a. [ME. (equiv. to mod. E. gyry), < ger, ger, ger (also in comp. gerful, q. v.), < OE. gir = Pr. gir = Sp. gir, gyr, turn (see gyre, n.), + -yt.] Changeable; fickle.

Right so gan gery Venus overcaste
The hertes of hie folk.

Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 678.

His second hawk waxed gery,
And was with living wry.

Skelton, Ware the Hawke.

Geryonia (jer-i-on-i-ä), n. [NL. (Péron and Lacépède, 1809), < Gr. Geryon, Geryon, a three-bodied giant, lit. 'the shouter'; < geryn, cry, shout.] The typical genus of the family Geryoniidae. It is characterized by 6 radial canals with out a lingual canal, and by having the process of the auditory organ enclosed in a vesicle lying in the gelatinous substance of the disk, near the edge of the latter. G. umbellata is an example.

Geryoniidae (jer-i-on-i-ä), n. pl. [NL. < Geryonia + -idae.] A family of Trachymedusae. It is characterized by an umbrella with cartilaginous ridges, 8 to 12 marginal peduncles and as many acoustical vesicles, 1 to 6 tubular marginal tentacles with osseous canals leading into the radial canal, foliaceous gonads, and a long cylindrical manubrium or gastric pedicle with a proboscis-like oral portion. Also written Geryoniidae. Eschscholtz, 1829.

gesettes-landt, n. Same as gafol-landt.

gesith (AS. pron. ge-sep'h), n. [AS. gesith, a companion, comrade, in particular, as in def. (= OS. gasth = OHG. gastino, MHG. gast = Gothic gasthja, a companion), < ge-, implying 'together' (see g), < sith, a journey; see sith 1 and sund.] In Anglo-Saxon England, one of the comitatus or personal following of a noble, and especially of the king. The king's gesiths stood in close relation to his person, depended upon his favor, and formed the basis of the order of thanes or noble nobility.

The most eminent of the persons who, in the relation of gesith or comitatus to the king, held portions of folkland or of royal demesne, and were bound to him by the oath of fealty. Stubbs, Const. Hist. 352.

The "comrade," on the other hand, the gesith or then as he was called, bound himself to follow and fight for his lord. J. B. Green, Making of Eng. p. 108.

geslingt, n. An obsolete variant of goshing.

Gesneria (jes-ne-ri-ä), n. [NL. named after Conrad von Gesner; see Gesneria.] A genus of plants, the type of the order Gesneraceae, including about 50 species of tropical America, mostly Brazilian. They have tubous roots, herbaceous stems with opposite leaves, and usually red or orange flowers. Most of the species are ornamental, and several are frequent in greenhouse.

Gesneraceae (jes-ne-ri-ä), n. pl. [NL. fem. pl. of gesneraceus; see gesneraceus.] An order of gamopetalous exogens, with irregular corollas, didynamous stamens, and a one-celled ovary with two parietal many-seeded placentae. It is nearly allied to the Scrophulariaceae. It includes about 70 genera and 700 species, natives of tropical or sub-tropical regions, especially of America. They are herbs or shrubs, with usually opposite leaves and with large, showy, and often very handsome flowers. Among the larger genera are Gesneria, Gloriosa, Cyrtandra, Eschscholtzia, and Achimenes, many species of which are found in cultivation. The succulent fruits of some species are edible.

gesneraceous (jes-ne-ri-ä), a. [NL. gesneraceus; < Gesneria, q. v.] Belonging or pertaining to the Gesneraceae.

Gesneria (jes-ne-ri-ä), n. [NL. named after Conrad von Gesner; see Gesneria.] In zool.: (a) A genus of pyralid moths: same as Scoparia. Hübner, 1816. (b) A genus of dipterous insects of the family Muscidae. Robinson Desimpdy, 1830.

Gesnerian (jes-ne-ri-ä), a. [Fr. Gesner + -ian.] Pertaining to Conrad von Gesner (otherwise written Gesner), a naturalist and scholar of Zürich (1516-65), author of important works on zoology, botany, medicine, philology, etc.

St. P. Solon, Arcadia, II.

[The following specimen of the capabilities of get, transitive and intransitive, is given by Dr. Withers.]

I got on horseback within ten minutes after I got your letter. When I got to Cambridge, I got a chase for town, but I got wet through before I got to Cambridge, and I have got such a cold as I shall not be able to get rid of in a hurry. I got to the Treasury about noon, but first of all I got shaved and dressed. I soon got into the secret of getting a memorial before the board, but I could not get an answer then; however, I got out of the messenger that I should likely get one the next morning. As soon as I got back to my inn, I got supper and got to bed. It was not long before I got to sleep. When I got up in the morning, I got my breakfast, and then I got myself dressed that I might get out in time to get an answer to my memorial. As soon as I got it, I got into the chair, and got to Canterbury by three, and about the time I got home, I have got nothing for you, and so adieu.

Holy-Ghost plant. Same as dore-plant.—Mass of the Holy Ghost. See mass.—Order of the Holy Ghost.

(a) Often called by the French name Saint Esprit. The leading order of the later French monarchy, founded by King Henry III. of France in 1578, replacing the Order of St. Michael. The king was the grand master, and there were 100 members, not including foreigners. The members were required to adhere to the Roman Catholic Church and to be of a high grade of nobility. The decoration was a gold cross attached to a blue ribbon, and the emblems were a dove and an image of St. Michael. The order has been in abeyance since the revolution of 1830. (b) An order founded at Montpellier, France, about the end of the twelfth century, and united to the Order of St. Lazarus by Pope Clement XIII. (c) A Neapolitan order. See Order of the Knot, under knot.—The ghost walks, the salary is paid. (Actors' slang.) To give or yield up the ghost, to yield up the breath or spirit; die; expire.

Often did I strive To yield the ghost—but still the evilous fiend Slept in my soul, and would not let it forth. Shak., Rich. III., I. 4.

Syn. Ghost, Shade, Apparition, Specter, Phantom, Phantasm. Ghost is the old word for the disembodied spirit, especially as appearing to man; as, the ghost of Hamlet's father, the ghost of Banquo. Shade is a soft and poetic word for ghost; as, the shade of Croesus appeared to Evens. An apparition is a ghost as appearing to sight, perhaps suddenly or unexpectedly; it may also be a fancied appearance, while a ghost is supposed to be real; as, Jupiter made a cloud into an apparition of Juno, Macbeth saw an apparition of a dagger; the witches showed him an apparition of a crowned child. A specter is an alarming or horrifying preternatural personal appearance, having less individuality, perhaps, than a ghost or shade, but more than an apparition necessarily has. A phantom has an apparent, not a real, existence; it differs from a phantasm in emphasizing the materiality simply and in representing a single object, while phantasm emphasizes the deception put upon the mind, and may include more than one object.

Infernal ghosts and hellish furies round, . . . And grisly spectres, which the fiend had raised To tempt the son of God with terrors dire. Milton, P. R., iv. 422.

Not ever was to the bowers of bliss conveyed A fainter spirit or more welcome shade. Tuckell, Death of Addison, l. 65.

When Godfrey was lifting his eyes . . . they encountered an object as startling to him at that moment as if it had been an apparition from the dead. George Eliot, Silas Marner, xii.

These faces in the mirrors Are but the shadows and phantasms of myself. Longfellow, Masque of Pandora, vii.

Between the acting of a dreadful thing And the first motion, all the interim is like a phantasma, or a hideous dream. Shak., J. C., II. 1.

ghost (göst), v. [ghost, n.] I. trans. To appear to in the form of a ghost; haunt as a spirit or specter.

Julius Caesar, Who at Philippi the good Brutus ghosted. Shak., A. and C., II. 6.

What mad ghosts this old man but what mad ghosts as all? Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader, p. 37.

II. intrans. To give up the ghost; die; expire.

Furyus, taking leave of Lucretia, precipitated her into such a love-fit that within a few hours she ghosted. Sir P. Sidney.

ghostess (gös'tes), n. [ghost + -ess.] A female ghost. [Humorous.]

In the mean time that she, The said ghostess, or ghost, as the matter may be, From impediment, hindrance, and let shall be free To sleep in her grave. Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, II. 223.

ghost-fish (göst'fish), n. A whitish variety of Cryptacanthodes maculatus. See cryptanth.

ghostland (göst'land), n. The region of spirits or of the supernatural.

Get out of ghostland. Academy, April 7, 1888, p. 228.

ghostless (göst'lee), a. [*< ME. gostles, < AS. gästlede (= D. gästelos = G. gästlos), lifeless.] Without spirit, soul, or life.

Works are the breath of faith, the proofs by which we may judge whether it live. If you feel them not, the faith is ghostless. Dr. R. Clarke, Sermons, p. 473.

ghostlike (göst'lik), a. [< ghost + like².] Like a ghost or specter; deathlike.

Thy thine cheeks, hollow eye,
And ghostlike colour, speaks the mystery Thou wouldst, but canst not live by.
Nabbes, Hannibal and Scipio.

ghostliness (göst'li-nos), n. The state or quality of being ghostly.

ghostly (göst'li), a. [With inserted h, as in ghost; < ME. gostly, gostlich, earlier gastly, gästlich, < AS. gästlic, gästlic, of a spirit, spiritual (= OS. gästlik = OFries. gästlik, gästelik, testlik = D. gästelijk = OHG. gästlich, MHG. gästlich, gästlich, (G. gästlich, spiritual, = Dan. gästlig, clerical), < gäst, spirit, a spirit, + -lic, -ly¹.] 1. Having to do with the soul or spirit; spiritual; not of the flesh; not carnal or secular. He that came night to lute this blessed name Ihesu ne fynd no fele in it gastly joye and dellitabilite, with wondrous sweetness in this lyfe here. Hamptre, Prose Treatise (E. E. T. S.), p. 43. The life of man upon earth is nothing else than a warfare and continual afflict with his ghostly enemies. Bacon, Works (Parker Soc.), II. 542. The writer of this legend then records its ghostly application in these words. Longfellow, Mortuaria Salutamus.

2. Pertaining or relating to apparitions; of ghostlike character; spectral; supernatural; as, ghostly sounds; a ghostly visitant.

I have no sorcerer's mallow on me,
No ghostly hauntings like his Highness.
Tennyson, Princess, II.

ghostly (göst'li), adv. [< ME. gostly, gostlich, < AS. gästlic, spiritually, < gästlic, spiritual; < see ghostly, a.] Spiritually; mystically; mentally; with reference to the mind as contrasted with the sight.

The morwe com, and gostly for to speke,
This thomede is come unto Cryseide.
Chaucer, Troilus, v. 1082.

Loue is gostli delitouse as wijn
That makith men bothe big & holde.
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 25.

Now maketh he a triall how much his disciples have profited ghostly.
The prince and the whole state may be suffered to perish bodily and ghostly. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1830), II. 108.

ghost-moth (göst'môth), n. A nocturnal lepidopterous insect, Epidolus humilis. The male is white, and has a habit of hovering with a pendulum-like motion in the twilight over one spot (often in churchyards), where the female, which has gray posterior wings and red-spotted anterior wings, is concealed. The term is extended to all the Epidolus.

ghostology (göst'ol-ô-jî), n. [Irreg. < ghost + Gr. -logia, < logos, speak; see -ology.] The science of the supernatural. [Humorous.]

It seemed more unaccountable than if it had been a thing of ghostology and witchcraft.
Hawthorne, Septimus Felton, p. 204.

ghost-plant (göst'plant), n. The tumbleweed, Amaranthus albus.

In Newberry has told us that it [Amaranthus albus] is also known as the ghost-plant, in allusion to the same habit, bunches flitting along by night producing a peculiar weird appearance. Science, IX. 32.

ghost-seer (göst'sê'er), n. One who sees ghosts or apparitions.

M. Binet treats all ghost-seers as so paralysed with terror that they do not move their eyes from the figure.
Proc. Soc. Psych. Research, III. 172, note.

ghost-show (göst'shō), n. A spiritualistic exhibition. [Colloq.]

ghost-soul (göst'sōl), n. A supposed apparitional soul, or phantom likeness of the body, capable of leaving the body for a time or altogether and appearing to other persons asleep or awake.

At the lowest levels of culture of which we have clear knowledge, the notion of a ghost-soul animating man while in the body, and appearing in dreams and vision out of the body, is found deeply ingrained.
E. H. Tylor, Prim. Culture, I. 451.

ghost-story (göst'stō'ri), n. A story about ghosts or in which ghosts are introduced; hence, by extension, any story or statement to which no credence should be given.

It is still safe and easy to treat anything which can possibly be called a ghost-story as on a par with such figments as these.
Proc. Soc. Psych. Research, II. 112.

ghost-word (göst'wôrd), n. An apparent word or false form found in manuscript or print, due to some blunder of the scribe, editor, or printer. Such ghost-words, mostly miswritings or misprints not obvious to subsequent readers or editors, abound in dictionaries and glossaries of the older stages of the English as well as of other languages.

As "ghost-words" Mr. Skene, in his "Presidential Address" (Trans. Philol. Soc., 1880), designates "words which had never any real existence, being mere coinages due to the blunders of printers or scribes, or to the perverted imaginations of ignorant or blundering editors."

The word meant in "estures," bad spelling of "estres"; and "estures" is a ghost-word.
N. and Q., 7th ser., V. 504.

ghoul (göl), n. [Formerly also written ghole, goulr, gowl, etc.; < Ar. ghul, Pers. ghul, ghul, also ghucal, a demon of the mountains and the woods, supposed to devour men and other animals.] An imaginary evil being supposed among Eastern nations to prey upon human bodies; an ogre.

Go - and with Gouls and Afits have.
Till these in horror shrink away
From spectre more accursed than they!
Byron, The Giaour.

You know there are people in India - a kind of beastly race, the ghouls - who violate graves.
The Century, XXXVI. 127.

ghouliah (göl'lish), a. [< ghoul + -ish¹.] Natural to or resembling a ghoul; as, ghouliah delight.

ghurial (gur'i-äl), n. [Hind. ghariäl; see gaurial.] Same as gaurial.

The ghurial is of a finer breed.
P. Robinson, Under the Sun, p. 70.

ghurry, ghurrie (gur'i), n.; pl. ghurries (-iz). [< Skt. ghriti (cerebral f.).] In India—(a) A clepsydra, or water-instrument for measuring time. (b) The gong on which the time so indicated is struck. Hence—(c) A clock or other timepiece. (d) In old Hindu custom, the 60th part of a day or night (24 minutes). (e) In Anglo-Indian usage, an hour. Yule and Burnell.

We have fixed the clock at 6,000 Gurr, which must be translated by the postman in a Ghurrie and a half.
Tippoo's Letters, p. 216. (Yule and Burnell.)

ghyll (gil), n. A false spelling of giff.

giallo antico (jäl'lo an-tō'ko) [It. giallo, yellow (see yellow); antico, ancient (see antic).] A marble of a rich golden-yellow color, deepening in tint to orange and pink, found among Roman ruins and used anew in buildings of the Renaissance and later times. It is identified by J. H. Middleton ("Ancient Rome in 1885") with the marmor Numidicum of the ancients.

Diets and strips of serpentine, porphyry and giallo antico.
C. C. Perkins, Italian sculpture, Int. p. 131.

giant (ji'ant), n. and a. [< ME. giant, gyant, gyant, earlier grant, geant, geant, geant, geant, sometimes geant, geant, < OF. grant, geant, F. géant = Pr. jaian, gigant = Sp. G. gigante *= AS. gyant = OHG. G. Dan. Sw. gyant, < L. gigas (gigant-), < Gr. γίγας (gigas-), mostly in p. γίγας, the Giants, a savage race of men destroyed by the gods (Homer), called sons of Gaia, the Earth (Hesiod), etc., and hence the epithet γίγας, earth-born (< γη, gē, the earth, + γίγας, -born, < γίγν, bear, produce); but γίγας and γίγας cannot be etymologically identical, nor can γίγας (gigas-), contain the γίγν unless in the shorter form ga, which appears in Epic perf. inf. γίγν-μεν, part. γίγας, etc. Cf. gigantic, etc.] 1. In classical myth., one of a divine but monstrous race, children of Uranus (Heaven) and Gaia (Earth), and personifying destructive physical phenomena, as those of volcanic origin. They were subdued by the Olympian gods after a war which forms a favorite subject in ancient art (see gigantomachy), and typify the inherent opposition between darkness and light.*

Hence—2. Some other imaginary being of human form but superhuman size; as, Giant Despair, in Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress."

He was besieged with little with some great giants,
That with Anticrist helden hardy as was Colchester.
Piers Plowman (B.), 1131, 216.

Giants of mighty bone, and bold enterprise.
Milton, P. L., XI. 642.

3. Figuratively, a person of unusual size or of extraordinary powers, physical or mental.

Then we went to pay a visit at a hotel in Jersey street. . . . A powdered giant, looking in the hall his buttons embellished with prodigious ornaments, took our cards up to the Prince.
Thackeray, Newcomes, II. 11.

Giant's Causeway. See causeway.

gibbon (gib'on), n. [F. gibbon, in Buffon; origin not ascertained.] The common name of the long-armed apes of the genus Hylobates, subfamily Hylobatinae, and family Simiidae. These apes have a remarkably slender body, with very long slim limbs, especially the fore limbs or arms, which of most touch the ground when the animal stands erect, the tail is rudimentary, and there are no bud callosities. In some respects the gibbons approach man very closely.

Gibbon, Hylobates (Linn.)

They inhabit the East Indian archipelago and the peninsula mainland, and are extremely agile, swinging themselves in the trees like the spider-monkeys of the new world. There are several species, one of the best known of which is Hylobates lar, inhabiting Tomasserm and a wide extent of adjoining country, of a blackish color marked with white on the face and hands. The hooded (H. lar) is another found in Assam and neighboring regions. The crowned gibbon is H. pileatus of Siam. Sumatra has a gibbon (H. ardens) noted for uttering musical sounds, and variously called lora lora, sumba, ungaputi, unkaputi, etc. The most notable gibbon is the Sumatran stamang (H. s. sumang or Sumatran undactyla), which has two of its toes webbed. An onion will do well for such a shift.

Shak., T. of the 8., Ind., I.

You have a gift, sir (thank your education),

Will never let you want, while there are men,

And malice, to breed canes.

B. Jonson, Volpone, v. 1.

5. pl. White specks on finger-nails, which have been superstitiously supposed to portend gifts.

Dunglison. [Colloq.] Gift of bastardy. See bastardy.—Gift of gab. See gab.—Gift of tongues, a special power, conferred upon the apostles and others in the early church, of speaking in a dialect other than their own. It has been claimed in later times by various sects in the Christian Church, as the Montanists (second century), the Prophets of Cumana (eighteenth century), the Irvingites, etc. See Travels.—Syn. 3. Grant, Gratuity, etc. (see present, n.); benefaction, boon, bounty, offering, contribution, donation, allowance. 4. Abilities, Talents, Parts, etc. (see genius), endowment, capability, turn, forte.

gift (gift), v. t. [= MHG. giften = OHG. gifan, MHG. giften, give, = leel. gifan = Sw. gifa = Dan. gylte, give away in marriage; from the noun: see gift, n.] 1. To confer or transfer as a gift; make a gift of; donate formally. [Archaic or colloq.]

The King has gifted my lands lang syne

It cannot be nae worse w' me

Sang of the Outlaw Murray (Child's Ballads, VI. 31).

The gear that is gifted, it never

Will last like the gear that is won.

J. Baulie, Wood and Married and A'.

The Regent Murray gifted all the Church property to Lord Semphill. J. C. Lock, Abbey of Paisley (1868), p. 201.

2. To endow with a gift or with any power or faculty: chiefly in the past participle.

Am I better gifted than another? Thou art an ill judge of either, who enviest the gifts of both.

Rp. Hall, Satan's Flery Darts, § 9

For the world must love and fear him

Whom I gift with heart and hand

Mrs. Browning, Swan's Song.

gifted (gift'ed), p. a. Endowed by nature with any power or faculty; furnished with any particular talent; specifically, largely endowed with intellect.

Two of their gifted brotherhood, Hacket and Coppinger, got up into a pease cart and harangued the people to dispose them to an insurrection.

Dryden.

Together they explored the page
Of glowing bard or gifted sage.

Scott, Rokeby, IV. 13.

I know that the humblest man and the feeblest has the same civil rights, according to the theory of our institutions, as the most gifted. W. Phillips, Speeches, p. 19.

giftedness (gift'ed-ness), n. The state of being gifted.

May not a conformist, though of an ordinary invention, and not endowed with the sublimest giftedness of our separatists, say, Seek, seek, seek, or Good, good, good?
J. Richard, Grounds of the Contempt of the Clergy, p. 120.

gift-enterprise (gift'en'ter-priz), n. A business, as the selling of books or works of art, the publication of a newspaper, etc., in which presents are given to purchasers as an inducement.

gift-horse (gift'hors), n. A horse that is given as a present.—To look a gift-horse in the mouth, to criticize or examine critically a present of favor received (an act proverbially ungracious and unwise): in allusion to the customary method of ascertaining the age of horses.

He ne'er consider'd it, as loth

To look a gift horse in the mouth,

And very wisely would lay forth

No more upon it than 'twas worth.

S. Butler, Hudibras, I. 1. 490.

giftle (gift'li), n. [See, dim. of gift, n.] A gift or faculty.

Oh had some power the giftle gle us

To see ourself as others see us!

Burns, To a Louse.

giftling (gift'ling), n. [< gift, n., + -ling!.] A little or trifling gift.

The kindly Christmas tree . . . may you have plucked pretty giftlings from it.

Thackeray, Roundabout Papers, x.

gift-rope (gift'röp), n. Naut., a rope attached to a boat for towing it at the stern of a ship.

gig (gig), n. [The words spelled gig are of various senses involving the idea of rapid or whirling motion, of which 'fiddle' appears to be the oldest; < leel. gigga, a fiddle, = Sw. giga, a Jew's harp, = Dan. gige, a fiddle, = MD. ghyge =
MHG. gige*, gigel = MHG. gyge, f. geige, a fiddle (whence in Rom.: Sp. fg. It. giga = Pr. guiga, gigua = OF. gigue, gyge, a fiddle, > F. gigue, a lively dance, > E. gig: see fig.) 1. A fiddle. F. Junius. [It is doubtful whether this sense actually occurs in literature.]—2. A whirling or rustling sound, as that made by the blowing of wind through the branches of trees.

For the swough and for the twygges,

This hous was also ful of gygges.

Chaucer, House of Fame, I. 1942.

3. Something that is whirled or moves or acts with rapidity and ease. Specifically (a) A top; a whirligig.

Thou disputest like an infant, ge, whip thy gig.

Shak., I. L. L., v. 1.

A great help to the cymbal net, for bringing in of larks about your net, is a gig of feathers standing a distance off, which twirleth swiftly round on the least breath of wind.

W. Buntell, Croxley Records, p. 272.

(b) A light carriage with one pair of wheels and drawn by one horse; a one-horse chaise.

Let the former riders in gins and whisks and one-housed carriages continue to ride in them, and not aspire to be rolling about in post-chaises or barouches.

Wandham, Speech, May 25, 1809.

(c) Naut., a long narrow rowing-boat, very lightly built, adapted for racing; also, a ship's boat suited for fast rowing, and generally furnished with sails; in the United States navy, a single-banked boat, usually pulling six oars, devoted to the use of the commanding officer. (d) A machine consisting of rotatory cylinders covered with wire teeth for teasing woolen cloth. See gigging machine.

4. Sport; fun; lively time. [Prov. Eng.]

A laughter-loving lass of eighteen, who dearly loved a bit of gig.—Do you know, gentle reader, what is a bit of gig? This young lady laughs at everything, and cries, "What a bit of gig!" . . . Now, if the twopenny postman of the rockets were to mistake one of the directions and deliver it among the crowd so as to set fire to six or seven muslin dresses, what a bit of gig it would be!

W. Beaudin, Fifty Years Ago, p. 134.

gig (gig), v. i.; pret. and pp. giggled, ppr. gigging. [See gig, n. Same as fig, v. i.] I. in-trans. 1. To move up and down or spin round; wriggle. Dryden

No wonder they'll confound no loose of men;

For Rupert knocks 'em, till they gig agen.

Cleland, Poems (1651).

2. To fasten the leather strap to the shield.

Aqueroes

Nayting the speere, and helmes buckelynge, gygging of scheeldes, with laynes lanyng.

Chaucer, Knight's Tale, I. 1646.

3. In mach., to use a gig or gigging-machine.
See gig, n., 3 (d).

A man who can take charge of dyeing, scouring, falling, and gigging in a small country mill.

Fibre and Fabric, V. 20.

II. trans. To move lightly or rapidly; impart a free, easy motion to.

A rope, usually of wire, being attached to each end of the mill carriage, and passing over pulleys in the floor to a drum beneath, so arranged as to be under control of the sawyer in its feeding movement or in reversal to gig the carriage back to its first position. Encyc. Brit., XXI. 245.

gig (gig), n. [Perhaps an additional sense of gig, q. v.] 1. A fishing-spear; a fishgig.

I did not see that they had any other weapon but darts and gigs, intended only for striking of fish.

Cook, Voyages, IV. III. 7.

2. A device for taking fish, a kind of pull-devil designed to be dragged through the water.
For mackerel, four large barbed fish-hooks are tied back to back, or secured in that position to a piece of wood on which the fishing-line is bent. When mackerel are schooling alongside a vessel but refuse to bite, the gig is thrown out beyond them, allowed to sink a little, and then jerked quickly through the school. Sometimes several fish are caught at once by this method, which is called gigging.

gig (gig), v. i.; pret. and pp. giggled, ppr. gigging. [< gig, n.] I. trans. To spear with a gig, as a fish.

II. intrans. To fish with a gig or fishgig.

gig (gig), n. [Properly pronounced jig, but ap-par. accom. to gig!; < ME. gigge, < OF. gigue, a gay, lively girl. Cf. leel. gykkr, a pert person, Dan. gyak = Sw. gack, a fool, jester, wag (see geck). Hence giglet, q. v.] A wanton, silly girl; a flighty person. See giglet.

Fare not as a gigge, for nought that may bidele, Lauge thou not to londe, ne gane thou not to wide.

Habees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 22.

Charlotte L. called, and the little gig told all the quarrels and all the misbehaviors of the domestic life she led in her family, and made them all ridiculous without mentioning to make herself so.

Mme. P'Arday, Diary, I. 300.

gig (gig), v. t. [Irreg. < L. gignere, beget:
see genus, gender.] To engender.

I hope my goblet has giggd another golden goblet; and then they may carry double upon all four.

Dryden, Amphitryon, III. 1.

giga (jü'gü), n. [It., a jig.] A jig. Imp. Dict.
gigant (ji-gan'tal), a. [< L. gigas (gigant-), giant, + -al.] Gigantic. [Rare.]

Gigantal Frames held Wonders rarely strange.

Drummond, Urania, I.

gigantean (ji-gan-tö'an), a. [< L. gigantēus, <
Gr. γίγαντιος, < γίγας (γίγαντ-), > gigas (gigant-),

The strong Fates with Gigantean force

Bear thee in iron arms

Dr. H. More, Philos. Poema, p. 312.

gigantesque (ji-gan-tesk'), a. [< F. gigantesque, < It. gigantesco, gigante, < gigante, a giant: see giant and -esque.] Gigantic in character or quality; befitting a giant.

In the neighbourhood of a river-system so awful, of a mountain-system so unheard of in Europe, there would probably, by blind, unconscious sympathy, grow up a tendency to lawless and gigantesque ideals of adventurous life.

De Quincey, Spanish Nun, Postscript.

Genius, and . . . humor gigantesque as that of Rabelais.

Lowell, Study Windows, p. 128.

gigantic (ji-gan'tik), a. [< L. as if giganticus*, < gigas (gigant-), a giant: see giant.] 1. Resembling a giant; of extraordinary size or proportions; very large; huge; enormous.

A score of gigantic feathered things, as big as camels, had the islands all to themselves.

P. Robinson, Under the Sun, p. 178.

2. Pertaining to or suitable for a giant; characteristic of giants; immense in scale or degree.

I dread him not, nor all his giant brood,

Though Fame divulge him father of five sons,

All of gigantick size, Goliath chief.

Milton, S. A., I. 1249.

On each hand slaughter, and gigantic deeds.

Milton, P. L., XI. 659.

Now I the strength of Hercules behold,

A towering spectre of gigantic mould.

Pope, Odyssey, XI.

ous, herculean, cyclopean.

gigantical (ji-gan'ti-kal), a. [< gigantic + -al.]
Same as gigantic. [Rare.]

Ever and anon turning about to the chimney, where she saw a pair of corpulent, gigantical androns, that stood, like two burgomasters, at both corners.

Middleton, The Black Book.

gigantically (ji-gan'ti-kal-i), adv. In a gigantic manner.

Not doubting but it will be made to appear that though this monster, big-sworn with a puff of steam of wisdom, strut and stalk so gigantically, . . . yet it is indeed but like the giant Orgoglio in our English poet, a mere empty bladder, blown up with vain conceit.

Cudworth, Intellectual System, p. 62.

giganticide (ji-gan'ti-sid), n. [L. gigas (gi-gant), a giant, + -cida, a killer, < caedere, kill.] A giant-killer. Darwin.

The exoteric person mingles, as usual, in society, while the esoteric is like John the Giganticide in his coat of darkness. Southey, The Doctor, Interchapter xii.

giganticide (ji-gan'ti-sid), n. [L. gigas (gi-gant), a giant, + -idium, a killing, < caedere, kill.] The act of slaying or murdering a giant. Hallam.

gigantology (ji-gan'tol'ō-jī), n. [Gr. γίγας (gi-gant), a giant, + -λογία, < λέγω, speak; see -ology.] An account or description of giants.

gigantomachia (ji-gan'tō-mā'ki-ā), n. [L. gigas (gigant) + -māchē.] Same as gigantomachy.

Of these giants, which Moses calleth mighty men, Goliath, Hahor, an Antwerpian, . . . hath written a large discourse, intitled Gigantomachia, and strained his brains to prove that there were never any such men. Raleigh, Hist. World, I. vi. § 8.

gigantomachy (ji-gan'tom'a-ki), n. [L. gigas (gigant) (the name of a poem by Claudian), < Gr. γίγας (gi-gant), a giant, + μάχη, battle, fight.] The mythological war of the giants against Zeus, symbolizing the antagonism between terrestrial and oceanic and celestial forces: a favorite subject in all departments of ancient classical art. Its most noteworthy examples are among the sculptures, now at Berlin, discovered in 1875 and later at Pergamon by the Germans. The legs of the giants were generally represented as serpents, the heads of which occupied the place of feet. See cut under Pergamene.

They looked more like that Gigantomachy, the Giants assailing Heaven and the Gods, than that Good fight of faith. Dr. Gauden, Fears of the Church, p. 544.

Gigantostrea (ji-gan'tōw'trē-kā), n. pl. [N.L. < Gr. γίγας (gi-gant), giant, + στρεπτα, a shell.] A prime division of Crustacea, including the trilobites, eurypterines, xiphures, etc., all of which excepting the last are extinct. The group corresponds to Merostomata or Palaeocorida.

Naturalists are now pretty well agreed in the union of the trilobites, horseshoe-crabs, etc., in a group to which Professor Haeckel and others have applied the name Gigantostrea and Dr. Packard the name Palaeocorida. Stand. Nat. Hist., II. 81.

gigantostrean (ji-gan'tōw'trē-kan), a. and n. I. a. Pertaining to or having the characters of the Gigantostrea.

giggering-machine (gi-g'ing-mā-shēn'), n. A machine for napping or finishing cloth; a machine employing teazels to draw the loose ends of wool in a woven fabric to the surface to form a nap. The teazels are arranged on the face of revolving cylinders, before which the fabric is made to pass. All these teazels of wire are sometimes used. After the napping, the fabric is finished by shearing. Also called gig machine, gig mill, and travelling machine.

giggerish, a. [gig + -ish.] Trifling; pretentious.

Hard to make ought of that is naked thought
This fustian maistres and this giggerish guise.
Skelton, Garland of Laurel.

giggit (gi-g'it), v. [gig + -it, equiv. to -et, used as freq. suffix.] I. trans. To convey rapidly. [New Eng.]

He nearly like to have got her out up by sharks, by giggit her off in the boat out to sea, when she warn't more'n three years old.

H. B. Stowe, The Independent, Feb. 27, 1862.

II. intrans. To move rapidly. [New Eng.]

He had . . . a wagon which rattled and clattered in every part, . . . and then there would be a most unedifying giggle and titter . . . while the wagon and Uncle Harkin were heard giggit away.

H. B. Stowe, Oldtown Folks, v.

giggle (gi-g'l), v. i.; pret. and pp. giggled, ppr. giggling. [An imitative variation of giggle, q. v. Cf. cackle, equiv. to giggle, and sometimes to giggle; < kechern, OD. gichchen, giggle. Cf. also L. cachinnare, laugh; see cachinnation.] To laugh with short catches of the breath or voice; laugh in a silly or affected manner; titter.

Fool, giggle on, and waste thy wanton breath;
Thy morning laughter breeds an evening death.
Quarles, Emblems, I. 8, Epig.

The Khan felt himself to be the hero of the moment, and sawed away unceasingly with his comical grinning and giggling with exultation. O. Doonson, Merv, xxi.

giggle (gi-g'l), n. [giggle, v.] A low, spasmodic, affected laugh, in a series of short gasps or catches of the breath.

The cook and Mary retired into the back kitchen to titter for ten minutes; then returning, all giggles and blushes, they sat down to dinner. Dickens, Pickwick, xiv.

gigger (gi-g'ēr), n. One who giggles or titters.

Fanny was found to steer between those happy extremes of a thoughtless gigger and a formal titterer. Edmonds, Miss Stanton.

giggling (gi-g'ling), n. [Verbal n. of giggle, v.] Silly or affected laughter; tittering.

Their visit was not so still as Miss Ingram's had been, we heard hysterical giggling and little shrieks proceeding from the library. Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xviii.

giggot, n. See gigot, 2.

gig-lamp (gi-g'lamp), n. 1. A lamp attached to a gig for use at night.—2. A firefly. [Local.]

It reflects as large as cockchafers flitting round us among the leaves of the creepers, with two long and thin, at the point of each of which hangs out a blazing lantern. The unimaginative colonists called them gig-lamps. Quoted in Edinburgh Rev., CXLV. 346.

3. pl. Spectacles or eye-glasses. [Slang.]

giglet, giglot (gi-g'let, -lot), n. [Also giggle; < ME. giglet, giglot, giglot, < gigge, a wanton girl, a gig (see gig), + dim. -let, -let.] A light, giddy girl; a lascivious girl; a wanton.

Go not to the wastellings, in to schotynge at cok,
As it were a trumpet of a wanton.
Roberts, Book (L. E. T. 8), p. 40.

And go among the Greeks only and late
So *giglot*like, taking thy fond pleasure.
Heaven, a Testament of Cressida.

The fam'd Cassibian, who was once at point (O, giglot fortune!) to master Cressid's word.
Shakespeare, Cymbeline, III. 1.

The recompense of striving to preserve
A wanton giglet honest.
Meredith, Fatal Dowry, III. 1.

Some young giglot on the green,
With dimpled cheek and two bright blue eyes.
Lansing, Gentle Shepherd.

The giglet is useful, and is common upon the coast. Scott.
giglio (ji-g'lyō), n. [It. p. giglio, lily, flower-de-luce, = Sp. fig. hermo, etc.; = L. lily; see lily.] The form of fleur-de-lis constituting the badge of the city of Florence, and the chief bearing on the city's escutcheon. See obverse of coin in cut under florin. Also called Florentine lily.

gig-machine (gi-g'mā-shēn'), n. Same as giggering-machine.

gigman (gi-g'man), n.; pl. gigmen (-men). [The second sense alludes to the story of Thurtell's trial, in which a witness, having said, "I always thought him a respectable man," and being asked, "What do you mean by respectable?"

answered, "He kept a gig." 1. One who keeps or drives a gig.—2. A person of narrow ideas, deficient in liberal culture, but possessed of accidental advantages, who assumes superiority; a philistine: a term much affected by Thomas Carlyle.

The godlike privilege of alleviating wretchedness, of feeling that you are a true man, let the whole host of gigmen say to it what they will, no power on earth, or what is under it, can take from you. . . . On the whole, I know little of the Scottish gentleman, and more than enough of the Scottish gigman. Carlyle, in Froude.

gigman (gi-g'man), n.; pl. gigmen (-men). One who captures fish by means of the gig; a gigger.

gigmaness (gi-g'mā-nēs), n. [gigman + -ess.] A woman imbued with the ideas of giganimity. [Rare.]

Yes, Jeanie, though I have brought you into rough, rugged conditions, I feel that I have saved you; as gigmaness you could not have lived. Carlyle, in Froude.

gigmania (gi-g'mā-ni-ā), n. [gigman, alluding to mania.] The cult for commonplace things. [Rare.]

The gig and gigmania must rot, or start into thousand shivers and bury itself in the ditch, that Man may have clean roadway towards the goal whither through all ages he is tending. Carlyle, in Froude.

gigmanic (gi-g'man'ik), a. [gigman + -ic.] Commonplace; imbued with the principles of giganimity. [Rare.] gigmanically (gi-g'man'ik-ā-lī), adv. In a gigmanic manner. [Rare.]

A . . . person of considerable faculty, which, however, had shaped itself gigmanically only. Carlyle, in Froude.

gigmanity (gi-g'man'it-ē), n. [gigman + -ity.] A narrow-minded, commonplace respectability, based on the possession of small exterior advantages. See gigman. [Rare.]

I have a deep, irrevocable, all-comprehending Erasmian curse to read upon gigmanity, that is the Basil-worship of our time. Carlyle, in Froude.

The word international, introduced by the immortal Bentham, and Mr. Carlyle gigmanity to coin which, by the way, it was necessary to invent facts, are significantly characteristic of the utilitarian philanthropist and of the utilitarian misanthropist respectively. F. Hall, Mod. Eng., p. 16.

If he is rich enough to keep his own carriage . . . and perhaps have a mean sense of satisfaction at finding himself in the charmed circle of exclusive gigmanity. The Atlantic, LX. 216.

gig-mill (gi-g'mil), n. Same as giggering-machine.

gignitive (ji-g'nī-tiv), a. [OF. gignitif; < L. gignere, beget. Cf. gignitor.] Productive of something else. Darwin. [Rare.]

There are at the commencement of the third volume four Interchapters in succession, and relating to each other, the first gignitive but not generated, the second and third both generated and gignitive, the fourth generated but not gignitive.

Southey, The Doctor, Interchapter xiv.

gigot (ji-g'ot), n. [= It. pigotto, < OF. pigot, F. gigot, a leg of mutton, dim. of OF. pigus, a fiddle, hence also the thigh (in mod. pop. speech the leg); see gig and jig. Cf. gibbet.] 1. A leg of mutton. [This, the primary, is still the common meaning.]—2. A small piece of flesh; a small piece of anything. Also gigot, giglet.

The inward all.

They broild on coales and ate; the rest, in giglets out, they split. Chapman, Illad, II.

This is like the vanity of your Roman gallants, that cannot wear good suits, but they must have them cut and slashed in giglets, that the very crimson taffetas sit blushing at their follies.

Middleton (and another), Mayor of Queenborough, II. 3.

Cut the slaves to giglets!

Fletcher, Double Marriage, III. 2.

gilbacker (gil'bak-er), n. A siluriform fish of the northern coast of South America, the Tachysaurus or Arcton parkeri.

gilbert (gil'bért), n. [Named for William Gilbert (1540-1603).] A proposed unit of magnetomotive force having the value $10^9 = 7958$ ampere-turn.

Gilbertine (gil'bér-tin), n. and n. [< M.L. Gilbertinus, < Gilbertus, G. and E. Gilbert, a name of Old Fr. origin; see gub2.] 1. a. Pertaining to St. Gilbert or to the order founded by him. See II. 2. n. One of a religious order founded in England in the first half of the twelfth century by St. Gilbert, lord of Sempringham in Lincolnshire, the monks of which observed the rule of St. Augustine, and the nuns that of St. Benedict. The Gilbertines were confined to England, and their houses were suppressed by Henry VIII.

gilbertite (gil'bér-tit), n. [Named after Davies Gilbert, whose original name was Giddy (born in Cornwall, 1767; died 1839), at one time president of the Royal Society.] A kind of potash mica often found associated with tin ores, as in Cornwall and Saxony. It usually has a massive or indistinctly crystalline structure.

gild (gild), v. t.; pret. and pp. gilded or gilt, ppr. gilding. [< ME. gilden, rarely gulden, < AS. gyltan (late and rare) (= D. ver-gulden = G. ver-golden = Lecl. gylla = Dan. for-gylde = Sw. för-gylla), overlay with gold, with reg. uninf., < gold (= Lecl. gull, etc.), gold; see gold. (cf. gilt, n.)] 1. To overlay with gold, either in leaf or powder or in amalgam with quicksilver; overspread with a thin covering of gold.

Of gold ther is a borde, & trefels ther bi,
Of silver othre vesselles gylte fulle richell.
Rob. of Brunne, p. 162.

His hornes were gilden all with golden stins.
Spenser, F. Q., VII. vii. 33.

2. To give the appearance of gold to, whether by means of actual gold-leaf or in some other way, as by lacquering polished brass, bronzing with gold-colored bronze-powder, or the like. To distinguish real gilding with gold from the above, such terms as fine gilding, leaf gilding, etc., are in common use. See gilding.

3. In old chem., to impregnate or saturate with gold.

The science how ge schule gylde more myghtly by bronnyng water or whyll that I taughte you before, whereby the water or the wyll shal take to it myghtly the influence and the vertues of fyne gold.
Books of Quinte Essence (E. E. T. S.), p. 7.

Figuratively—4. To give a golden appearance or color to; illuminate; brighten; render bright; make glowing.

Their armours, that march'd hence so silver bright, Higher return all gilt with Frenchmen's blood.
Shak., K. John, II. 2.

The ensuing scene revolves a Martial Age,
And ardent Colours gild the glowing Page.
Compton, Ruth of the Muse.

5. To give a fair and agreeable external appearance to; recommend to favor and reception by superficial decoration: as, to gild flattery or falsehood.

For my part, if a lie may do thee grace, I'll gild it with the happiest terms I have.
Shak., I. Hen. IV., v. 1.

6. To make drunk: in allusion to the effect of liquor in causing the face to glow.

And Trinculo is reeling ripe; where should they Find this grand liquor that hath gilded them?
Shak., Tempest, v. 1.

Duke. Is she not drunk too?
W. A. A little gilded o'er, sir. Old sack, old sack boys.

gild², guild (gild), n. [The n in this second form is a mod. and unnecessary insertion; < ME. gilde, gylde, gulde, < AS. gegild, geygild, also gild-scepe and geyld-scepe (not gild* in this sense) (= *OD. gulde, gylde, D. guld = M.H.G. (cf. gild²)] 1. An association or corporation established for the promotion of common objects, or mutual aid and protection in common pursuits, and supported (originally) by the contributions of its members. In medieval times all European mechanics and traders were organized into gilds, which possessed impor-* tant legal powers and often exercised great political influence. Many of these still exist in Great Britain, especially in London, as the Stationers' or the Ironmongers' Gild. There were also gilds of professional men; and associations for pious and charitable objects bearing the name of gilds are common in some churches. See frater-nity, 4.

Gild signified among the Saxons a fraternity, derived from the verb gildan, to pay, because every man paid his share towards the expenses of the community. And hence their place of meeting is frequently called the gild or gildhall.
Blackstone, Com. I. 473.

The organization of the free craftsmen into Gilds, we thus see, was called forth by their want of protection against the abuse of power on the part of the lords.
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. cxviii.

A third custom placed the right to vote in the freemen of the borough, or of the gild, which was coextensive with the borough.
Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 422.

2. A gildhall.

The rowme was large and wyde,
As it some Gylde or solemne Temple weare.
Spenser, F. Q., II. vii. 43.

gild-ale (gil'dál), n. 1. The provision of ale made for a gild-feast held at the time of election of officers of a gild. Hence—2. The feast itself, or its prolongation on succeeding nights, perhaps till the ale brewed for the occasion was consumed. Buckerdyke.—3. A drinking-bout in which each person pays an equal share. E. D.

gildate (gil'dát), v. t. [< gild² + -ate²] To form into a gild or gilds.

Peradventure, from these Secular Gilds, or in imitation of them, sprang the method or practice of gildating and embodying whole towns.

Madox, quoted in English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. xciv.

gild-bell (gil'd-bel), n. A town-bell.

The Chronicle at least speaks of the citizens in general, who mustered at the call of the gild bell (the town bell).
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. cxvii.

gild-brother (gil'd-brúth-er), n. [ME. gylt-brother = D. gildebroeder = M.H.G. gildebroder = G. gildebruder = Dan. gildebroder = Sw. gilles-broder.] A fellow-member of a gild.

And ye Alderman and ye gilde broder shullen prouen (strive) vp on here myght, for to accorden hem.
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 101.

The way in which this statute was drawn up shows clearly that "citizen" and gild brother were considered identical.
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. xciv.

gilden (gil'dn), a. [*< ME. giben, gulden, < AS. gylten, golden, with reg. uninf., < gold, gold, + -en²; see golden, of which gilden is the earlier form.*] Golden. [Obsolete or archaic.]

There beside is the gildene Zate, that may not ben opened.

The Heraulte was highly feasted, and had a cuppe and a hundred golden gyliden to hym Johnered for a reward.
Hall, Henry VI., an. 14.

gilder (gil'dér), n. [< gild¹ + -er¹] One who gilds; specifically, one who practises gilding as a trade or art.

Gilders will not work but inclosed. They must not discover (reveal) how little service, with the help of art, to adorne a great deal.
B. Jonson, Epitaph, l. 1.

gilder², n. See guilder.

gildhall, guildhall (gil'd-hál), n. [< ME. gilda-halle, gulde, gylde, guld-, gilda-halle (> OF. gildhulle, quib. le, gihalle), < AS. geygildheall, < geygild, a gild, + heall, hall; see gild² and hall.] The hall where a gild or corporation usually assembles: a town or corporation hall; specifically (with a capital), the corporation hall and seat of several of the courts of the city of London, England.

To be preysed lawfully in the Yeldesthall of the said city.
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 332.

The mayor towards Guildhall hies him in all post.
Shak., Rich. III., III. 4.

In many cities and towns in England (including the City of London), the "Gild Hall" and the "Town Hall" are still one and the same thing.

English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 220.

It is provided that no one who is not of the gildhall shall exercise any merchandise in the town or suburbs, except as was customary in the reign of Henry I.

Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 482.

gildic, guildic (gil'dik), a. [< gild², guild, + -ic.] Of or pertaining to a gild. [Rare.]

It [the Passion Play] is eminently national, although it is animated by the old gildic local spirit.

G. S. Hall, German Culture, p. 36.

gilding (gil'ding), n. [< ME. gildinge; verbal n. of gild¹, v.] 1. The art of overlaying or decorating with gold. A great number of processes are employed, which may be divided into two chief classes, mechanical and chemical. The first includes all the common methods of gilding by laying gold-leaf or gold-powder upon an adhesive surface, as in signpainting, house-decorating, etc. The soldering of gold to a cheaper metal and rolling both down to a thin sheet is properly gold-plating. The chemical processes in gilding include electroplating with gold, by applying gold in an amalgam and afterward driving off the mercury by heat, applying gold to metals by dipping them in a bath of some solution of gold, and enameling with gold on porcelain or glass, the gold being put on the ware as a paint and afterward vitrified in a furnace.

2. The art or practice of producing the appearance of gilding by the use of other materials than gold. Compare gild¹, v.—3. That which is laid on in overlaying with gold; hence, any superficial coating used to give a better appearance to a thing than is natural to it.

Could laureate Dryden plimp and friar engage, . . .
And I not strip the gilding off a knave?
Pope, Imit. of Horace, II. l. 115.

4. A rich golden color imparted to harrings by the use of hard wood only in smoking them.

Amalgam gilding. See amalgam.—Gold gilding. gilding on silver performed by means of a solution of gold in aqua regia, applied by dipping a linen rag into the solution, burning it, and rubbing the heavy black ashes on the surface of the silver with the finger or a piece of leather or cork.

Immersion gilding. gilding by plunging into any solution of gold.

Japaners' gilding. gilding by means of powdered gold dust, which is applied to the surface by being dabbed or dusted upon size before it is dry.

Leaf gilding. See leaf-gilding.—Mercurial gilding. Same as wash-gilding.

gilding-press (gil'ding-pres), n. In bookbinding, a press used to gild the covers and edges of books.

gilding-tool (gil'ding-töl), n. In bookbinding, a brass hand-stamp fitted to a handle, with which the finisher stamps a design on the book-cover. When the design is of a long continuous pattern, the tool used is a small rotating wheel.

gilding-wax (gil'ding-waks), n. A compound of beeswax with red ochre, verdigris, copper-scales, alum, vitriol, or borax, a coating of which is applied to the surface of an article which has been gilded by wash-gilding, and then burned off by heat, in order to improve the color of the gilding.

gild-rent (gil'd-rent), n. Rent payable to the crown by a gild or fraternity in Great Britain.

gildry, guildry (gil'dri), n. [< gild², guild, + -ry.] In Scotland, a gild; the members of a gild.

gildship (gil'dship), n. [*ME. gildships, < AS. gildscep, gildscep, a gild, < gild, a payment, gild, a gild, + -scep, E. -ship; see gild² and -ship.] A gild; any association for mutual aid.

The famous "Judicia Civitatis Londonie" of Athelstan's time (A. D. 924-940) contains ordinances for the keeping up of social duties in the Gilds, or Gild-ships as they are there called, of London.

English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. xvii.

We have seen in the capitulary of Louis le Debonnaire, of the year 821 that gildships among the serfs are not only denominated, but the lords are commanded under a threat of penalties to suppress them.

W. K. Sullivan, Introd. to O'Curry's Anc. Irish, p. ccxiv.

gildwite, n. [ME., also gildwite; < gild² + wite.] A fine payable to a gild.

If it is found by his brethren that he had no guest, but stayed at home through idleness, he shall be in the Gild-wite of half a bushel of barley.

English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 105.

gilet, n. A Middle English form of guile.

gilery, n. [*ME. also gilery, gilerie, gily; < OF. guilerie, gillerie, guile, < guiler, guile; see guile¹.] Guile; fraud.

Also here as forbidden gilery of weight or of tale or of met or of measure, or thorow okrye, or violence or drede.
Hampole, Prose Treatises (E. E. T. S.), p. 11.

gilet (zhé-lá'), n. [F., a waistcoat.] A waistcoat or vest; in English, particularly in dress-making, the front of a bodice or waist of a woman's dress, so made as somewhat to resemble a man's waistcoat.

gill-guy (gil'gi), n. [gil (uncertain) + guy, n., a rope.] Naut., a temporary contrivance of rope about the rigging of a ship, and more or less inefficient.

gill-hooter, n. See gill-hooter.

Gilia (jil'i-l), n. [NL., named after Philip Gil, a Spanish botanist.] A large genus of gamopetalous plants, closely allied to Phlox and Polemonium, of about 100 annual or biennial species, mostly of the western United States, a few species occurring in South America. The flowers are often showy, and several of the annual species are common in cultivation, frequently under the botanical name of Ipomopsis or Leptophaea.

gill (gil), n. [ME. gile, gylle, < Dan. gylle = Sw. gäl, a gill, = leel, gylmar, pl., gills (commonly tälkn); cf. dial. ginner, also ginnle, gill, appar. connected with leel, gin, the mouth of a beast, which, with gil, a ravine (E. gill), and perhaps gylmar, gills, may be referred to the root (√ gin, gi*) of gin, begin, gawn, chasm, chaos, etc.; see gin, begin, gawn, etc. Cf. Quel. gial, giall, a jaw, cheek, gill of a fish.] 1. The breathing-organ of any animal that lives in the water.

There Leviathan, Hugest of living creatures, . . . sleeps or swims,
And seems a moving land, and at his gills Draws in, and at his trunk spouts out, a sea.

Milton, P. L., vii. 415

2. Specifically, an organ in aquatic animals for the aëriation of the blood through the medium of water; the respiratory apparatus of any animal that breathes the air which is mixed with water; by extension, a branch, as of any invertebrate and of the ichthyopsidan vertebrates. See branchia. The gills or branchia of a fish are a series of vascular arches by which the venous blood is brought in close relation with the water, and thus aerIALIZED. They are situated on each side of the neck, and consist generally of rows of compressed filaments arising from the outer sides of the gill arches, between which are the gill slits through which water is poured in respiration to bathe the gills, the set of gills being usually contained in cavities shut in by the gill covers and communicating with the mouth. There are usually four rows of gills in true fishes, but there may be fewer. In selachians there are generally five pairs, the details of the arrangement are very various. In Amphibia the gills are similar to those of fishes in their situation and general character, but they usually present externally as tufted organs on each side of the neck, and in many cases are caducous, being replaced by lungs. In Mollusca the character of the gills is very different, and their disposition is so variable that they are made a means of establishing many of the orders and subordinate groups of that division of the animal kingdom. In an oyster, for example, the gills are the folds or plates which lie in layers and a considerable part of the circumference of the animal. (See cuts under Dendrodonatus, Doris, Lamellibranchiata, and Polyplacophora.) In Crustacea the gills are commonly appendages of some of the legs, very variable in number and situation, as podobranchia, pleurobranchia, etc. (See epipodite, and cut under Dendrobranchia.) Among Insecta gills are filamentous or foliose some external appendages of the tracheae of aquatic insects which breathe in the water. In Arachnida the gills are the external parts of the breathing-organ, each gill consisting of a minute slit covered with a scale; there are two or four of these on the lower side of the abdomen, near the base. In Vermes gills are the respiratory organs, of whatever character, commonly fringing the sides of the body or forming tufts on the head.

3. Some part like or likened to a gill. (a) The wattles or dewlap of a fowl. (b) The fish under or about the chin in man. [Humorous.]

Like the long bag of fish hanging down from the gills of the people of Piedmont. Swift.

(c) One of a number of radiating plates on the under side of the cap or pileus of a mushroom. — Aerial gills. See atrial. — False gills. (a) In Ichth., vascular appendages of the gill-covers of certain selachians. (b) In entom., the branchiae or external breathing-organs of certain insect-larvae. — Free gills, in hymenopterous fungi, gills not adnate to the stipe. — Opercular gills, in Ichth., branlike attached to the hyoid arch, as in elasmobranchiate and many ganoid fishes, as distinguished from gills of the branchial arches proper. — To look blue about the gills, to appear downcast or dejected. [Slang.] — Tracheal gills, dorsal respiratory appendages of insects into which trachea pass.

The wings [of insects] must be regarded as homologous with the lamellar tracheal gills. Greenough, Comp. Anat. (trans.), p. 247.

gill (gil), v. [gill, n.] I. trans. 1. To catch (fish) by the gills, as by means of a gill-net; as, gilled fish.

The fishes in the Lake of Venus being called by the Temple keepers, presented themselves, enduring to be scratched, gilled, and men's hands to be put in their mouths. Purchas Pilgrimage, p. 335.

2. [In allusion to the parallel rows of filaments in a fish's gills.] In making worsted yarn, to make the fibers level and parallel with each other by drawing them through a gilling-machine.

II. intrans. To display the gills in swimming with the head partly out of water; as, mackerel go along gilling. [Colloq.]

gill (gil), n. [Sometimes romantically spelled ghyll in place-names; < ME. gille, gylle, a glen, < leel, gil, a deep narrow glen, with a stream at the bottom; cf. gell, a ravine; see gill.] 1. A narrow valley; a ravine, especially one with a rapid stream running through it. The word is in common use in the lake district of England; as, Dunelm Gill, Gillm Grove. In northwestern York shire the valleys are called dalles and dalls.

As he glode through the dalle by a gate yde,
There met he the men that I mynt fynd.

Destruction of Troy (L. E. E. S.), l. 18320.

Pursuing the course of this brook upwards, you come to a narrow sequestered valley sheltered from all winds, thro' which it runs murmuring among great stones. . . you may continue along this ghill.

Gray, To Dr. Watson, Sept. 14, 1766.

Up the tumultuous brook of green head ghyll
Laugdale Pike and Witches Lair
And Dunelm ghyll so foully rent Coleridge, Christabel, l. 1. Conclusion.

2. A corrugation or fold; a hollow, as in a sheet of metal.

gill (gil), n. [E. dml., origin unknown.] 1. A frame with a pair of wheels used for conveying timber. — 2. Same as gill-frame.

gill (gil), n. [Also gill. < ME. gille, gylle, gylle, < OE. gille, a sort of measure for wine; cf. ML. gilla, a wine-vessel, gello, a wine-vessel, a wine-measure, etc.; perhaps from the same ult. source as gallon, q. v.] 1. A liquid measure, one fourth of a pint in the British and United States systems. The United States gill contains 7 2/7 cubic inches equal to 118.35 cubic centimeters. The British imperial gill contains just comes a drop of distilled water at 62° F., weighed in air under a pressure equal to that of 30 inches of mercury at London being equal to 142 cubic centimeters or 2 1/2 United States gills. Until about 1825, the gill was not considered as part of the regular system of English measures of capacity, and there was some want of uniformity in the use of the name. (See cut extracted from Carew.) In the north of England and parts of Scotland a half-pint was called a gill. The Scotch gill was 1/2 of a Scotch pint, and was therefore about equal to the English gill.

They measure their flock in by the gill, which containeth a pint. Carew.

To some peaceful lands chop them
Where in full gill his anson, though late he drawn,
And quails away the care that was on Crown.

To some, The Playhouse.

2. A pint of ale. [Prov. Eng.]

gill (gil), n. [Also gill. < ME. gille, gylle, gylle, Gylle, a familiar abstr. of Gillian, a familiar name for a girl; see gillian. The name Gill or Jill was so common as to become almost generic, equiv. to 'girl' or 'young woman,' as Jack, equiv. to 'boy' or 'young man,' both terms being often used in deprecation or contempt.]

1. A girl; a sweetheart, used in familiarity or contempt, as either a proper or a common noun.

I am for I will Here at Portico the Hill
Give you all with his bill
Each take with his bill.

In London (Caplan's Metamorphosis).

Pin. Is she so glorious beauty can't
Mar. You will not do it.
Our woman look like a girl, like gills to her;
Their clothe and face are so early and bankrupt, Bare, old, and weary. Fletcher, Wild-goose Chase, v. 1.

2. [Short for gill-crop by the ground, or gill-run-over-the-ground, hence names for the plant, in which gill is a familiar application of the feminine name.] The ground-ivy, Nepeta Glehna.

The lowly gill that never dares to climb Shedden, Schoolmistress.

3. Same as gill-bar.

gillach (gil'ak), n. A fish of repulsive appearance, having the head beset with spines and cutaneous tags or warts on the body. The name is specifically given to a scorpionfish of the genus Scorpenopsis, of which there are two Red Sea species, S. caudata and S. gibbosa; also to a fish of the family Synbranchiidae, Synbranchia caudata, which has at the base of the dorsal spines poison sacs discharging through these spines.

gill-arch (gil'arch), n. One of the arches which support the gills; one of the postoral visceral arches of a branchiate vertebrate, as a fish or an amphibian; a branchial arch. Ordinary fishes have four pairs of gill arches, connected below by a median chain of bones called the opercula. Also called gill-bar. See cut under gill.

gill-roo (gil-a-roo'), n. A local name of a variety of the common trout (Salmo fario stymphalicus) of certain parts of Ireland (Galway, etc.), in which the coats of the stomach become thick, like the gizzards of birds, from feeding on shell-fish. Also called gizzard-trout.

gillaroo-trout (gil-a-roo' trout), n. Same as gill-roo.

gill-bar (gil'bar), n. Same as gill-arch.

gill-beer (gil'ber), n. Malt liquor medicated with the leaves of the gill or ground-ivy.

gill-box (gil'box), n. Same as gilling-machine.

gill-breather (gil'bre-ther), n. That which breathes by means of gills; specifically, one of the Crustacea, as distinguished from any tracheate arthropod or tube-breather. See Crustacea.

gill-burnt-tail, gillian-burnt-tail (gil', jil'-an-burnt-tail'), n. A popular name for the Ignis fatuus. Nares.

Will with the wispe, or gill burnt tale, Clayton, Notes on Don Quixote (1684), p. 97.

An Ignis fatuus, an exhalation, and Gillian a burnt tale, or Will with the wispe gill-cleft (gil'kleft), n. A gill-slit; a branchial aperture.

gill-comb (gil'kôm), n. The ctenidium of a mollusk; a gill-plume.

gill-cover (gil'kav'er), n. The covering of the gills; the opercular apparatus. Also called gill-lid.

The gill cover, a fold of skin which projects back from the hyoid arch, and is strengthened by the opercular bones. Stand. Nat. Hist., III. 40.

Gilenia (ji-lé'ni-á), n. [NL. (Mönch), named after Dr. Arnold Gill (Latinized Gillenius), a German botanist.] A roseaceous genus of the eastern portion of the United States, allied to Spiraea, and including only two species. They are tall perennial herbs, with trifoliate leaves and white flowers loosely parted on the slender branches. The bark of the rhizome is bitter and possesses mild emetic properties, on which account the plants are known as American quack Indian physic, or barman's root. The more common species is G. trifoliata; the other is G. stipularis.

giller (gil'er), n. 1. One who fishes with a gill net. — 2. A horsehair fishing-line.

gillet (jil'et), n. [Also gillot, jillet, and contr. jilt, q. v.; a dim of gill, jill.] A sportive or wanton girl or woman. [Colloq.]

gill-flament (gil'fla-men-t), n. An ultimate ramification or filament of the gills.

Partitions bearing the gill flaments. Each gill bearing arch, except the first and last, bears two rows of gill flaments. Stand. Nat. Hist., III. 43.

gill-fishing (gil'fish'ing), n. The use of gill-nets in fishing; the act or art of taking fish by means of gill-nets.

gill-flap (gil'flap), n. 1. The membranous posterior extension of the gill-cover or opercular apparatus. — 2. The movable gill-cover, consisting of the opercle, subopercle, and interopercle.

gill-firt (jil'firt), n. [Also written jill-firt, and transposed firt-gill; see gill = jill, and firt.] A sportive or wanton girl. [Archais.]

"I care no more for such gill-firts," said the jester, "than I do for thy hauntings." Scott.

Gilenia trifoliata.

How much has she [Gill] not owed of late to the little-tattle of her gill-firt sister Thalia?

Lovel, Study Windows, p. 91.

gill-frame (gil'fram), n. 1. A hackling-machine.—2. A drilling-machine.

Also gill, gill-machine.

gill-hooter (gil'hū'tēr), n. [E. dial., < Gill, orig. a proper name (see gill), + hooter.] A local English name of the barn-owl, Bubo flammeus. Also written gill-hooter, gillhooter. See cut under barn-owl.

gill-house (gil'hous), n. [gill, 3, + house.] A drain-shop. Latham.

There shall each ale house, then, each gill house mourn,
And answering gill shops souther signs return.

Pope, Dunciad, III. 147.

Gillia (gil'i-ā), n. [NL., named after Theodore N. Gill (born 1837), an American naturalist.] 1. Same as Gillichthys. A. Günther, 1865.—2. A genus of rimoid mollusks. G. atilis is a freshwater species common in many streams of eastern North America.

gillian (gil'ian), n. [ME. Gillian, Gyllian (see gill), a form of Julian, i. e., Juliana, a form, personal name, L. Julianus, < L. Julia, i., Julius, m., a proper name: see Julian, July.] Same as gill.

Thou tookst me up at every word I spoke,

As I had been a mawkin, a flit gillian Fletcher, The Chances.

If ye bring your Gilliana hither? Nay, she's punished,
Your conceal'd love's can't up

Fletcher and Shirley, Night-Walker, II. 3.

Gillichthys (ji-lik'this), n. [NL., named after T. N. Gill: see Gillia.] A genus of gobioid

Gillichthys mirabilis fishes. G. mirabilis is a Californian species remarkable for the great extent of its jaws and for its singular habits, living in holes which it digs in the mud. Also Gilia.

gille (gil'i), n. [Sc., < Gael. gillie, golla = Ir. golla, a boy, lad, man-servant.] In the Highlands of Scotland, a man-servant; a lad or young man employed as an attendant; an outdoor male servant, more especially one who is connected with or attends a person while hunting.

In the Celtic language, we have, with other words, "Gill," a servant, a word familiar to sportsmen and travellers in the Highlands, and to readers of Scott in its Anglied shape, Gillie. Maine, Early Hist. of Institutions, p. 217.

Gillie white-foot, or gillie wet-foot, formerly, in Scotland, a running footman who had to carry his master over bridges and watery places in travelling.

gillflower, n. See gillyflower.

gillhooter (gil'hū'tēr), n. Same as gill-hooter. [Scotch.] gilling (gil'ing), n. [Verbal n. of gill, v.] The act or process of catching fish with gill-nets.

gilling (gil'ing), n. [Origin obscure.] A salmon of the second year. See the extract.

In the Severn district the name "gilling" is applied to a second-year fish, and the belief prevails that these fish can be distinguished not only from gills, but from fish of greater age. Quarterly Rev., CXXVI. 336.

gilling-machine (gil'ing-ma-shēn'), n. In the manufacture of woollen yarn or worsted, a machine for making all the fibers level and parallel with each other. It consists of a pair of rollers which catch the wool, and of a second pair of rollers which draw it forward over heavy steel bars, called taliers, which are covered with projecting spikes. These machines are generally used in sets, each successive machine having the pins of the taliers finer and more closely set than that preceding. Also called gill bar.

gilliver (gil'i-vēr), n. An obsolete or dialectal (and more original) form of gillyflower.

gill-lid (gil'lid), n. Same as gill-cover.

gill-machine (gil'mū-shēn'), n. Same as gill-frame.

gill-membrane (gil'mou-brān), n. The membranous covering of the foremost branchiostegal arch of the branchial skeleton of ordinary fishes.

gill-net (gil'net), n. A net which catches fish by the gills. A gill-net is set in the form of a curtain, suspended vertically from floats on the surface of the water by means of metallic weights or bullets. The meshes of the net are of such size as to catch by its gills a fish which tries to force its way through. The fish being prevented from advancing by the narrowness of the meshes, and from backing out by the impossibility of working the protecting plates of the gills over the twine of the meshes.

gill-netter (gil'net'tēr), n. One who owns or uses gill-nets.

gill-netting (gil'net'ing), n. The use of a gill-net; fishing or taking fish with a gill-net.

gilloferti, n. An obsolete form of gillyflower.

gill-opening (gil'ōp'ning), n. The external opening by which water passes to or from the gills; the branchial aperture.

gilloret, adv. An obsolete form of galore.

gillott, n. See gillet.

gill-over-ground, gill-over-the-ground (gil'ō'vēr-ground', -the-ground'), n. The ground-ivy, Nepeta Glechoma.

gill-plate (gil'plāt), n. One of the branchial lamellae of a mollusk.

Yet it is very probable that the labial tentacles and gill-plates are modifications of a double horseshoe-shaped area of dilated filamentous processes which existed in ancestral Mollusca much as in Phoronis and the Polyzoa. Encyc. Brit., XVI. 688.

gill-plume (gil'plūm), n. A ctenidium.

gill-raker (gil'rā'kēr), n. One of a series of cartilaginous or osseous processes which generally arm the inner edge or surface of a gill-arch of ordinary fishes, and are arranged in a single row on each such arch. See cut under gill.

This Labrador form has a larger number of gill-rakers than the common fontinalis, and there seem to be fewer tubes in the lateral line; so that we may be obliged to consider it as a species distinct from fontinalis. Science, V. 424.

gillravage, gillravager. See gylravage, gylravager.

gill-sac (gil'sak), n. 1. A cavity or chamber containing the gills, as of a crustacean or fish.—2. A saecular or pouch-like gill; a kind of rudimentary gill of some fishes, as the myzonts, which have consequently been called marsipobranchiates.

gill-slit (gil'slit), n. A visceral cleft between any two visceral arches of the neck; a passage-way through gill-arches from the mouth or pharynx to the exterior; a branchial cleft. It is most commonly used of such slits of an animal actually bearing gills, but by extension, in embryology, of the certain homologous visceral clefts of all vertebrates.

gillyflower (gil'i-flou'ēr), n. [Early mod. E. gylloflower, gylloflower, etc., also gerafflower, gerafflower, a corruption, simulating flower, of early mod. E. gilliver, gillygoor, gillori, gyllofer, gyllofer, etc.; < ME. gyllofer, gyllofer, gyllofer, gyllofer, short for clove gyllofer (mod. E. clove-gillyflower), earliest form as OF. clou degilofre (Ancien Riwle); OF. clou, nail, clove (see clou); < de, of; gyllofer, also gyllofer, gyllofer, gyllofer, gyllofer (tree), gyllofer, gyllofer, = Pr. gyllofer, gyllofer = Sp. gyllofer, gyllofer = Pg. gyllofer, clove (gyllofer, clove-tree), = It. garofano, clove (viola garofanata, clove-gillyflower), = Turk. qaranfil, karemsil = Ar. Par. qaranfil, clove, carnation; corrupted from ML. caryophyllum, < Gr. καρυόφυλλον, the clove-tree, lit. 'nut-leaf,' < καρυον, a nut, + φυλλον, a leaf. See clove-gillyflower.]

1. The clove-pink or carnation. Dianthus Caryophyllus, especially one of the smaller varieties. The name was thus applied by Chaucer, Spenser, Shakspere, and old writers generally. Also distinguished as the clove gillyflower. See Dianthus, and cut under carnation. Bring hether the Pincke and purple Cullambine,

E. or dial. also gimmer, gimmow, < ME. gymow, gymme, gymwe (cf. pl. gemels, gemewe, (twins); dial. also gimmon, q. v.); < OE. gemel*, gemelan, m., gemelle, f., twin, < L. gemellus, double, twin: see gemel.] 1. A contrivance, as a ring moving on horizontal pivots, for securing free motion in suspension, or for suspending anything, as a chronometer, so that it may keep a constant position or remain in equilibrium. The name is most commonly used in the plural, applied to two movable hoops or rings, the one within the other, the outer capable of rotation about a fixed horizontal axis lying in its plane, and the inner capable of rotation about an axis lying in the plane of both rings and perpendicular to the fixed axis. The marine compass is suspended by such a contrivance, and, having a free motion in two directions at right angles to each other, it maintains the card in a horizontal position, notwithstanding the rolling of the ship.

Truly this argument hangeth together by verie strange gimbals. Holmshead, Description of Ireland, VI, 11.

2t. Joined or interlocked work whose parts move within each other, as a bridle-bit or interlocked rings; a gemel-ring.

A. M. H. G. ginnen), an early abbr., by aphoresis, of beginnen, begin; see begin. The simple form does not occur in the earliest records.] To begin (which see).

The flowers gynnen for to sprynge.

Chaucer, Good Women, l. 58.

But when his force gan fallo, his poe gan waxe arreare.

Spenser, F. Q., III, vii, l. 24.

As whence the sun gins his reflection.

Shak., Macbeth, l. 1.

Around gan Marmion wildly stare.

Scott, Marmion.

[In Middle English the preterit of this verb (gan, gan, can, con, etc.) was much used with a following infinitive, with or without to, as having, besides its regular inceptive meaning 'began to,' a merely preterit force, being equivalent to the simple preterit of the second verb: as, he gan go, equivalent to he did go or he went. This use of gan was supplanted in the fifteenth century by did, though its use, as an archaism, continued much later.

He closed both his eyes,

And . . . in this manner gan droye [i. e., died].

Robert of Gloucester, p. 368.

The wynd gan change and blew right as hein leste.

gin² (jin), n. [Abbr. of genera, or rather of the older form generer, gynper*, < ME. gynper, juniper; see genera, juniper.] An aromatic spirit prepared from rye or other grain and flavored with juniper berries. The two important varieties of gin are Dutch gin, also called Holland gin and Schiedam, and English gin, known often by the name Old Tom. Holland gin is almost free from sweetness, and is generally purer than English. Pure gin is an important medicine in many diseases, especially in those of the urinary organs.

This calls the church to deprecate our sin,

And hurls the thunder of the law on gin.

Pope, Epit. to Satires, l. 130.

Cordial gin, gin sweetened and flavored with aromatic substances so as to form a sort of cordial. Gin Act, an English statute of 1739 (9 Geo. II. c. 23) imposing a heavy duty on spirituous liquors and prohibiting the trade by retail. It was superseded in 1741 (16 Geo. II. c. 8) by more moderate duties. The title is also sometimes given to a similar English statute of 1739 (3 Geo. II. c. 17). Also called Jekyll's Act. — Unflavored gin, pure distilled gin.

ginger¹ (jin'jer), n. and a. [ME. gonger, gonger, gungere, contr. of gingever, gingiver, gingiver, < OE. gengibre, gingembre, gingerber, F. gingembre = Pr. gengibre, gingebre = Sp. gengibre = Pg. gengibre, gengibre = It. zenzere, zenzere, zencera, gengere, gengera = AS. gengiber = D. gember (< F.) = M.G. gengiber, engiber, L. engiber = M.G. gengiber, also ingever, G. ingeer = Dan. ingier = Sw. ingefära, < L. zingiber, ML. zingiber, < Gr. ζιγγiberis, ginger; of Eastern origin: cf. Ar. Pers. zanjabul (> Turk. zenjefil) = Skt. grīṅgarīra, ginger.] 1. n. The rhizome, and also the light-yellow substance of the rhizome, of Zingiber officinale, a reed-like perennial plant with annual leafy stems 3 or 4 feet high, and flowers in conical spikes borne on distinct leafless stems. The species is a native of the warmer parts of Asia, though not known in a wild state; it is extensively cultivated throughout tropical Asia, and has been introduced into most other tropical countries. The rhizome has a peculiar agreeable, aromatic odor, and a pungent taste, and its substance has been in use as a spice from the remotest times. It is distinguished as black or white, according as it retains its dark integument or has had it removed by scraping. The kind now most esteemed is known as Jamaica ginger, and comes mainly from the island of Jamaica. In medicine ginger is used as a carminative stimulant, and externally as a rubefacient and anodyne, but it is employed much more largely as a condiment than as a drug.

Be alle that Contree growe the gode ginger, and therefore thidre gon the Marchauntes for sperye.

Mandeville, Travels, p. 170.

Ginger shall be hot to the mouth too.

Shak., T. N., ii, 3.

II. a. Made of or flavored with ginger.— Ginger cordial, a cordial made of various ingredients and flavored with ginger.

ginger² (jin'jer), a. [In use only in adv. and adj. gingerly, q. v.; see also gingerness.] The adv. is used exclusively with reference to manner of walking, or, less frequently, of handling, thus giving some color to Skene's derivation, namely, < Sw. dial. gungla, gungla, go gently, totter, freq. verb from gung, a going; see gung, n., and cf. gungling; cf. also gung, from the same ult. source. In this view, the adv. with its sense of 'brittle, tender, delicate,' would be a development from the more lit. adverb. The Scand. gungla would reg. give an E. verb gungle*, variable to gunger* (with hard g in both syllables, subject, however, to assimilation in conformation to the more common word gungler, n.); but no such verb is found.] Brittle; tender; delicate. Hollnath. [Prov. Eng.]

The Ar. name is Karam (villain), Pers. Kardchi (swarthy), etc.; the Gipsy name is Rom (lit. man), whence Romani, Romany, the name of their language.] I. n.; pl. Gipsies, Gypsies (-siz). 1. One of a peculiar vagabond race which appeared in England for the first time about the beginning of the sixteenth century, and in eastern Europe at least two centuries earlier, and is now found in every country of Europe, as well as in parts of Asia, Africa, and America. The Gipsies are distinguishable from the peoples among whom they live by their bodily appearance and by their language. Their forms are generally large, lithe, and agile, skin of a tawny color, eyes large, black, and brilliant, hair long, coal black, and of ten ringleted, mouth well shaped, and teeth of dazzling whiteness. Ethnologists generally concur in regarding the Gipsies as descendants of some obscure Hindu tribe. They pursue various nomadic occupations, being tinkers, basket makers, fortune tellers, dealers in horses, etc., are often expert musicians, and are credited with thievish propensities. They appear to be a distinct variety of mankind, but traces of various forms of paganism are found in their language and customs. The name Gipsy is also sometimes applied to or assumed by other vagabonds of like habits.

O this false soul of Egypt! this grave charm,
Like a right gipsy, hath, at last and loose,
Bequilted me to the very heart of loss.

Shak. A. and C., iv. 10.

The Egyptian and Chaldean strangers Known by the name of Gipsies shall henceforth Be banished from the realm.

Longfellow, Spanish Student, iii. 2.

2. The language of the Gipsies. This language, which the Gipsies call Romany chel or chib is a Hindu dialect derived from Sanskrit, but much corrupted by admixture with the tongues of the peoples among whom they have sojourned. Thus in the vocabulary of the Anglo-Scottish Gipsies there are Greek, Slavic, Hungarian, Magyar, German, and French ingredients, evidencing that they had sojourned in the countries where these languages are spoken.

3. [I. c.] A person exhibiting any of the qualities attributed to Gipsies, as darkness of complexion, trickery in trade, arts of cajolery, and especially, as applied to a young woman, playful freedom or innocent roguishness of action or manner.

Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen wench.

girdle (gôr'dl), n. [Early mod. E. also gyrdell; < ME. girdel, gerdel, gurdell; < AS. gyrdel, also gyrdels (= OE. girdel = D. girdel = M.G. girdel = OHG. girdel, gurdila, M.G. girdel = G. girdel = Sw. girdel), a girdle, < gyrdan, gird; see gird.] 1. A band, belt, or zone; something drawn round the waist of a person and fastened, as, a girdle of fine linen; a leathern girdle. The primary use of the girdle is to confine to the person the long flowing garments anciently, and still in some countries, worn by both men and women, and it is now frequently used in women's dress (commonly called a belt) and in military costume (a belt of sash). (See ceinture.) The girdle has also served for the support of weapons, usually, bags or pockets, etc. In the middle ages books were sometimes bound with a strip of flexible stuff hanging from one end of the volume, which could be drawn through the girdle and secured. Among many peoples, the girdle being large and loose, the scabbard of a sword or long dagger is passed through the girdle instead of being hung from it, a hook or projecting button serving to hold it in place. In ecclesiastical use the girdle is a cord with which the priest or other cleric binds the altar about the waist. Formerly it was flat and broad, and sometimes adorned with jewels, in the Roman Catholic Church it has been changed to a long cord with dependent extremities and tassels. It is regarded as a symbol of continence and self-restraint. It is usually of linen, though sometimes of wool, and is generally white, but sometimes colored to adapt it to the color of the other vestments.

4. In gem-cutting, the line or edge that separates the upper from the lower part of a brilliant or other cut stone. It is parallel to the table and culet, and is the part held by the setting. See cut under brilliant.—5. In arch, a small band or fillet round the shaft of a column.—6. In coal-mining, a thin bed of sandstone. [North. Eng.]—7. In anat., the osseous arch or bony belt by which either limb or diverging appendage is attached to the axial skeleton; the proximal segment of the appendicular skeleton.—8. In bot., a (usually) longitudinal belt formed by the overlapping edges of two valves of a diatom frustule.—9. A seaweed, Laminaria digitata, the divisions of whose fronds are strap-like.—Girdle of Orion. See Orion, and Orion, 2. Pectoral girdle, the girdle of the fore limb, consisting essentially of the scapula and coracoid bones, to which another bone, the clavicle, may be added, as well as, in the lower vertebrates, certain other coracoid or clavicular elements, as a pectoral arch, post-oracoid, interclavicle, etc. This girdle is usually attached ventrally (not in mammals above monotremes) to the sternum, but is only indirectly connected with the vertebral column. Also called pectoral arch and shoulder girdle. Pelvic girdle, the girdle of the hind limb, consisting of the ilium, ischium, and pubis, in the higher vertebrates constituting the os innominatum or haunch bone, articulated or ankylosed with the sacrum; in the lower vertebrates it may have additional public elements. Also called pelvic arch and hip girdle.—To have or hold under one's girdle, to have in subjection. Darwin.

And this is girdled with a round fair wall
Made of red stone.
Swinburne, St. Dorothy.

3. To draw a line round, as by marking or cutting; specifically, to cut a complete circle round, as a tree or a limb. In new countries, as North America, in clearing land of trees they are often girdled by cutting through the bark and into the sap wood, so that they may die and ultimately fall by their own decay. Men often girdle young trees by gnawing.

A grove of chestnut trees, which, not being killed, but killed by girdling, had become entirely devoted of bark even to the tips of the limbs.
S. Judd, Margaret, l. 3.

In forming settlements in the wilds of America, the great trees are stripped of their bark, and then girdled, as they call it, which consists of cutting a circle of bark round the trunk, whereby it is made gradually to decay.

For good length a cheerful giver

Bible of A. V., 2 Cor. IX. 7.

That which Moses spoke unto givers, we must now incubate into taking away from the Church.

Hooker, Eccles. Polity, vii. 24.

It is the give and not the gift that engenders the heart of the Christian.

pl. gigeria, the cooked entrails of poultry.] 1. The second stomach of a bird, not counting the crop or gizzard as the first; the bulbous or muscular stomach (ventriculus bulbosus), succeeding the proventriculus and succeeded by the duodenum; the gizzardium. In most birds, especially those which feed upon grain or hard seeds, it is very thick and muscular, and lined with tough leathery (or even bony) epithelium, the organ thus forming a powerful grinding-mill in which the food is triturated after being mixed with the gastric juice of the preceding glandular stomach. 2. The proventriculus or first true stomach of insects, generally armed inside with horny teeth. See cut under Blattula. — 3. The stomach of some mollusks, as Bullula, when rounded and hardened. — 4. Figuratively, temper; now only in the phrase to fret one's gizzard.

But that which does them greatest harm,
Their spiritual gizzards are too warm.

S. Butler, Hudibras, III. II. 698.

To fret one's gizzard, to harass one's self, vex one's self, or be vexed. [Vulgar.] To stick in one's gizzard, to prove hard of digestion, be distasteful or offensive, vex one. [Vulgar.]

gizzard-fallen (giz'fird-fā'n), a. Affected, as a bird, with falling of the anus (prolapsed ani); a term used by pigeon-fanciers.

gizzard-shad (giz'gril-shād), n. A popular name of the isospondylous fishes of the family Thoracimidae, related to the anchovies, herrings, etc. There are a dozen species, chiefly of the genus Dorosoma (or Chatesoma), inhabiting fresh and brackish waters of the Atlantic coast of America and the eastern coasts of Asia and Australia. They are sluggish glabella¹ (glā-bel'ā), n.; pl. glabellæ (-ā). [NL., fem.; see glabellum.] In anat. and zool., same as glabellum.

Gl. A chemical symbol of glucinum.

glabella², n. Plural of glabellum.

glabellar (glā-bel'ār), a. [< glabellum + -ar³.] In anat. and zool., of or pertaining to the glabellum.

The glabellar region is flat and smooth

H. O. Forbes, Eastern Archipelago, p. 262.

glabellous (glā-bel'ūs), a. [< L. glabellus, without hair, smooth, dim. of L. glaber, smooth; see glabrous.] Same as glabellar.

glabellum (glā-bel'um), n.; pl. glabellæ (-ā). [NL., dim.; < L. glaber, smooth; see glabrous.]

1. In human anat., a small space on the forehead immediately above and between the eyebrows. — 2. In trilobites, the median convex portion of the cephalic shield, being the cephalic continuation of the thoracic axis or tergum. See cut under Trilobites.

The glabellum, or central raised ridge of the cephalic shield, is a continuation of the thoracic axis.

Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 226.

The lateral region of the head [of trilobites] the median part of which specially projects as the glabellum.

Clare, Zoology (trans.), I. 484.

Also glabella.

glabrate (glā-brāt'), a. [< L. glabratus, pp. of glaber, deprived of hair and bristles, lit. make smooth, < glaber, smooth; see glabrous.] 1. In zool., smooth; bald; glabrous; having no hair or other appendages. — 2. In bot., becoming glabrous from age; somewhat glabrous.

glabrester, glabrier (glā-brē-āt', -brī-āt'), v. t. [Improp. for glabrate, v. t.; see glabrate, a.] To make smooth. Cockerham.

glabrirostral (glā-bri-ros'tral), a. [< NL. glabrirostris, < L. glaber, smooth, + rostrum, a beak.] In ornith., smooth-billed; having few and slight, if any, bristles along the gape; wanting rictal vibrissae; opposed to setirostral, and said of certain birds of the family Caprimulgidae, most members of this family being setirostral. P. L. Scoter.

Glabrirostris (glā-bri-ros'trēz), n. pl. [NL., pl. of glabrirostris, smooth-billed; see glabrirostral.] A group of caprimulgid birds without rictal vibrissae, as the night-hawks. P. L. Scoter.

glabrity (glāb'ri-ti), n. [< L. glabritas, smoothness, baldness, < glaber, smooth; see glabrous.] Smoothness; baldness. Bailey.

glabrous (glā'brius), a. [< L. glaber (glabr-), smooth, without hair, = OHG. MHG. glat, G. glatt = D. glad, smooth, sleek, = E. glad; see glad.] Smooth; having a surface devoid of hair or pubescence; used chiefly in zoology and botany.

glacé (glā-sā'), a. [F., iced, glazed, pp. of glacer, freeze, < glace, ice, < L. glacies, ice.] Iced; glossed; glossy; lustrous; as, glacé fruit; glacé silk.

A large quantity of thread is now polished, and is known in the trade as glacé.

French Dict., VI. 302.

Glacé silk, a thin and plain silk material with a great deal of luster or gloss. — Mohair glacé. See mohair.

glaciable (glā'shi-ā-ble), a. [< L. glaciare, turn into ice (see glaciate), + E. ble.] Capable of being converted into ice. [Rare.]

From more aqueous and glaucous substances condensing them (precious stones) by frosts into solidities.

Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., II. 1.

glacial (glā'shi-āl), a. [= F. glaciel = Sp. Pg. glacial = It. glaciale, < L. glacialis, icy, frozen, full of ice, < glacies, ice.] 1. Icy; consisting of ice; frozen; hence, resembling ice; figuratively, having a cold, glassy look or manner.

I thought it not amiss to call our consistent self-shining substance the icy or glacial mollusca (and for variety phosphorosa).

Boyle, Works, IV. 457.

His manner more glacial and a putrid heat than ever.

Motley, United Netherlands, II. 302.

It stands at the front of all experiments in a field remote as the northern heavens and almost as glacial and clear.

Stedman, Viet. Poets, p. 24.

2. In geol., referring to ice; associated with the geological agency of ice. Glacial acetic acid. See acetic acid, under acetic. — Glacial drift, in geol. See drift, & — Glacial phosphoric acid, monobasic or metaphosphoric acid, H₂PO₄. It is a white, brittle, deliquescent solid. The glacial epoch, a period of the earth's history when, as maintained by many geologists, an ice sheet extended from the Scandinavian range in all directions, encroaching on Finland, northern Germany, and even a part of Great Britain, the glaciers of the Alps, Caucasus, and Pyrenees being also at that time considerably larger than they are now. Traces of former glaciation are observed in abundance over wide areas in north-eastern North America, and are ascribed by most geologists to the former presence of an ice sheet covering that region. The difficulty of accounting for the presence and movement of such a sheet on the American side of the Atlantic is much greater than is the case on the European side. Since in New England and the region of the great lakes much of the superficial detritus has been moved southward from the place of its origin for a greater or less distance, and since this fact was frequently observed and much commented on before ice became a recognized factor in geology, the phenomena now usually designated as glacial in Europe have been in America associated with the word drift, the loose material on the surface being called by that name, and the epoch of its accumulation, the drift epoch.

glacialist (glā'shi-āl-ist), n. [< glacial + -ist.] 1. One who explains geological phenomena by reference to the former presence of ice. The word is little used in this sense except with some other word limiting or qualifying it; as, an advanced glacialist; an ultra-glacialist (one who is prone to magnify the importance of ice as a geological agent).

By a cursory glance the glacialist is led to believe that the markings must be referred to the streams of inland ice.

Nature, XXX. 283.

We have certainly no evidence that, during even the severest part of the glacial epoch, an low-peak, like that advocated by Agassiz and other extreme glacialists, ever existed at the North Pole.

J. Croft, Climate and Cosmology, p. 78.

2. One who makes a specialty of glacial geology.

Nor is it only the effects of land-ice which the glacialist sees marked upon the rocks of Britain.

Huxley, Physiography, p. 163.

Also glaciologist.

glacially (glā'shi-āl-ī), adv. By means of glaciers or of glaciation; as, glacially formed hollows.

glaciarium (glā'shi-ā-ri-um), n.; pl. glaciaria (-ā). [NL., < L. glacies, ice. Cf. glacier.] A place, as a building, provided with a smooth level flooring of artificial ice or of cement, for skating, especially in summer; a skating-rink.

Summer skating has been occasionally provided in "glaciariums" by means of artificially produced ice.

Shays, Brit., XIII. 108.

glaciate (glā'shi-āt), v. t.; pret. and pp. glaciated, ppr. glaciating. [< L. glaciatus, pp. of glaciare, turn into ice, freeze, < glacies, ice.] 1. To convert into ice.

To measure by the differing weight and density of the same portion of water what change was produced in it between the hottest time of summer, and first a glaciating degree of cold, and then the highest we could produce by art.

Boyle, Works, II. 622.

2. To cover with ice.

The formerly glaciated hemisphere has . . . become the warm one, and the warm hemisphere the glaciated.

Quoted in J. Croft's Climate and Time, p. 77.

3. To give an ice-like or frosted appearance to. [A trade use.]

[Iron] chimneys, ovens, etc., and melted, not enamelled, glaciated, or tinned. U. S. Cons. Rep., No. 73 (1887), p. 215.

II. intrans. To be converted into ice. Johnson.

glaciated (glā'shi-āt-ed), p. a. Covered with ice; also, acted upon by ice; showing the effects of glacial action.

Rocky substances which have once been glaciated, if I may thus express the peculiar action of ice upon rocks, viz. the planing, polishing, scratching, grooving, and furrowing of their surfaces, can never be mistaken for anything else.

C. F. Hall, Polar Expedition, p. 661.

On almost every glaciated surface in Maine may be found isolated drift scratches aberrant both in direction and outline.

Amer. Jour. Sci., 3d ser., XXX. 144.

glaciation (glā'shi-ā'shūn), n. [< glaciare + -ion.] 1. The act of freezing.

The water or other liquor usually beginning to freeze at the top, and it being the nature of glaciation to distend the water and aqueous liquors it hardens, it is usually and naturally consequent, that when the upper crust of ice is grown thick, and by reason of the expansion of the frozen liquor bears hard with its edges against the sides of the glass contiguous to it, the included liquor (that is by degrees successively turned into ice), requiring more room than before, and forcibly endeavoring to expand itself every way, finds it less difficult to burst the glass than lift up the ice.

Boyle, Heat Cold, v.

2. The result of freezing; ice. [Rare.]

It [ice] is plain upon the surface of the water, but round in bayl, which is also a glaciation.

Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., II. 1.

3. In geol., the present or former existence of a mass of ice, glacier, or ice-sheet, covering a certain region; subjection to the action of ice. Thus, it is said that the surface of the country in Sweden exhibits the effects of a former glaciation; that is, that the surfaces of the rocks in many places are smoothed or striated, as they are under or near actual glaciers in the Alps or elsewhere. Such surfaces are said to be glaciated.

4. A consequence of or phenomenon caused by such a process or covering, as the striation and smoothing of rock-surfaces.

glacier (glā'shi-ēr or glā'si-ēr), n. [< F. glacier (orig. Swiss, > G. gletscher).] < glace, ice, < L. glacies, ice.] The form in which the snow, falling on the higher parts of those mountain-ranges which are above the snow-line, finds its way down into the valleys. Under suitable climatic conditions, the snow which thus falls does not all disappear by evaporation, or melt at once and run off in the form of water, but becomes gradually converted into ice, and moves slowly down the mountain-slope in the depressions or valleys until it reaches a point where the mean temperature has so far risen that evaporation and melting counterbalance the supply from above. Here the glacier ends, and a stream of water begins, which is often the head of some large river (as the Gangotri glacier of the Ganges, or the Rhone glacier of the river of that name). The snow of the glacier is not transformed into ice at once, but passes through the intermediate stages of névé (German firn). (See firn.) Several subordinate glaciers often combine to form one large one, a result dependent on the topography of that part of the mountain-range in which the glacier takes its rise. The great glaciers, those of the first order, as the Gornier and the Aletsch glaciers in Switzerland, begin in large amphitheaters (cirques), where a considerable number of affluents are forced by the topographical conditions to unite in forming one great glacier. The ice stream of the longest glacier in the Swiss Alps, the Gross Aletsch, was in 1880 10½ miles in length; some in the Himalayas are four times as long. From the cliffs which overhang the glacier is always being detached, by frost and aerial erosion, more or less detritus, which is carried downward on the ice as it moves, and finally dumped at the terminus of the ice-mass. Such accumulations of debris are called moraines, and are very conspicuous on many glaciers. (See moraine.) The former greater extension of glaciers over certain regions has been, and still is, a subject of much discussion among geologists. See the glacial epoch (under glacial) and ice. — Glacier tables, large stones found on glaciers supported by pedestals of ice. The stones attain this peculiar position by the melting away of the ice around them, and the depression of its general surface by the action of the sun and rain. The block, like an umbrella, protects the ice below it from both; and accordingly its elevation measures the level of the glacier at a former period. After a time the stone table becomes too heavy for the column of ice on which it rests, or its equilibrium becomes unstable, whereupon it topples over, and, falling on the surface of the glacier, defends a new space of ice, and begins to mount afresh. J. D. Forbes.

glacière (glas-i-ér'), n. [F., < glace, ice; cf. glacier.] A cave, fissure, or depression of some kind in which ice remains permanently, although in quantity varying with the year and the season: sometimes called, in New England, an ice-cave or ice-glen.

Certain exceptional cases occur where, owing to the subsidence of the cold winter air into caverns (glacières), ice is formed which is not wholly melted, even though the summer temperature of the caves may be above freezing-point.

glacieret (glä'shi-er-et or glas-i-ér-et), n. [glacier + -et.] A small sheet of ice or névé, lying under the snow-fields at the summits of the highest points in the Cordilleras, and exposed to view when after a series of exceptionally dry years the snow has nearly or quite melted away: a name given by J. Le Conte. The glacierets are considered by some to be properly designated glaciers, and by others to be something quite different from true glaciers.

glacier-snow (glä'shi-er-nö), n. Same as glacieret.
glacio-aqueous (glä'shi-ö-ä-kwä-us), a. [L. glacies, ice, + aqua, water.] Pertaining to the combined action of ice and water.

glaciological (glä'shi-ö-loj'i-kal), a. [glaciology + -ical.] Pertaining to glaciology.

glaciologist (glä'shi-ö-lö-jist), n. [glaciology + -ist.] Same as glacialist.

It will, I hope, meet with the approval of your veteran glaciologist. Dutton, in Pop. Sci. Mon., XXX, 194.

glaciology (glä'shi-ö-lö-jí), n. [L. glacies, ice (with rel. to glacier), + logos, < logos, speak: see -ology.] The science of the formation and action of glaciers.

glaciorant (glä'shi-ö-ränt), a. [L. glacies, ice, + natant (-ns), swimming: see natant.] Belonging to or affected by floating ice, as distinguished from ice moving on land.

The latter (attenuated) edges, border of the drift are thought to represent, one a glacial and the other a glaciocurrent action. Science, VIII, 157.

glaciour (glä'shi-ü), a. [OF. glacieur, < L. glacies, ice.] Like ice; icy.

When (mineral) solutions will crystallize . . . into white and glaciour bodies. See T. Brown, Am. J. Sci., II, 1.

glacia (glä'shi-ä, or, as F., glä-sä'), n. [= D. G. Dan., etc., glacia, < F. glacies, formerly also glacis, a slippery place, a sloping bank or causeway, a strong pent-house upon the walls or the rampart of a fortress, < OF. glacis, icy, slippery, glacier, formerly also glacser, < L. glaciare, freeze, harden: see glaciate.] A gentle slope or sloping bank. (a) In fort., a sloping bank so raised as to bring the enemy advancing over it into the most direct line of fire from the fort, that mass of earth which serves as a parapet to the covered way having an easy slope or declivity toward the campaign or field.

"Stand firm, and be ready, my gallant cohorts!" and, loudly exclaimed a voice above them, "wait to see the enemy; fire low, and sweep the glacia!" J. F. Cooper, Last of Mohicans, xiv.

Then there is a fine broad glacia with a deep ditch, revetted on scarp and counterscarp—drawbridge, portcullis, all the material apparatus of a great fortress are here. W. H. Russell, Diary in India, I, 150.

(b) An easy slope, like that of the shingle piled on the shore by the action of the tides and waves less steep than a talus. Imp. Dict.

glacure (F. pron. glä-sür'), n. [F., < glacer, freeze, glaze: see glaciate.] A thin coating of glass used for glazing fine earthenware, such as artistic terra-cottas. Compare glaze.

glad (gläd), a. compar. gladder, superl. gladdest. [ME. glad, glad, < AS. glad, shining, bright, cheerful, glad, = OS. glad (in comp.), glad, = OFrien. glad, smooth, = OD. glad, glowing, D. glad, bright, smooth, sleek, = OHG. MHG. glat, bright, smooth, G. glatt, smooth, even, polished, plain, bare, slippery, = Ice. gladhr, bright, glad, = Sw. Dan. glad, glad (cf. Sw. glatt, Dan. glat, smooth, < G.); akin to L. glaber, smooth, without hair (L. b = E. d, as in L. barba = E. beard), = Bulg. gladik, = Russ. gladik, smooth, even, polished (OBulg. gladiti = Serv. gladiti = Russ. gladiti, etc., make smooth), = Lith. gladus, smooth. gladfulness (gläd-fül-ness), n. The state or quality of being glad or joyful; joy; gladness.

In the warm sunne he doth himselfe enjoy,

And there he sits in rapturous sufficiency

Of all his gladfulness, and kingly joyance.

Spenser, Moopetoea, I, 200.

gladiat (gläd-i-ät), a. [NL. gladiator, sword-shaped, < L. gladius, a sword: see glave.] Sword-shaped; having the form of a sword, either straight or curved, as the legume of a plant; conform.

gladiator (gläd-i-ät-ör), n. [= F. gladiator = Sp. gladiator = Fr. gladiateur = It. gladiatore = D. G. Dan. gladiator, < L. gladiator, < gladius, a sword (there is no verb gladiare*); see glave.] 1. In Rom. antiq., one who fought in public for the entertainment of the people, either with other gladiators or with wild animals.

Gladiators were at first prisoners, slaves, or condemned criminals; but afterward freemen fought in the arena, either for hire or from choice. Under the empire, knights, senators, and even women exhibited themselves in this way. Gladiators were first exhibited only on the occasion of public funerals, but afterward at entertainments of various kinds, and especially at public festivals given by the emperors and other magnates. They usually fought in the amphitheater, sometimes in the forum, sometimes at the funeral pyre. They were kept and trained in special establishments or schools, sometimes by persons who let them out for hire, sometimes by citizens who wished to exhibit them themselves. Gladiators were divided into different classes, according to their arms or mode of fighting. Thus, secutores were such as carried a kind of trident and a net, in which they endeavored to entangle their opponents, usually secutores (rovers) who were lightly armed. Thraex was those armed with the round shield on back of the Thracians and a short sword or dagger. The murmillion had an oblong shield curved to suit the shape of the body and fought with either the Thracian or the net. There were also those who fought double-edged, then being such as without eye-bolts (audacitas, intraque, interiorum) for barbs (capitula), on horseback (equitatus), etc. In use the vanquished was not killed in the combat, the people were usually allowed to decide his fate. If they decreed his death, they extended the thumbs with the thumb bent and concealed (premo) by the clenched fingers. If they voted to spare him, they held out their hands with the thumb extended outward (verte). These precise gestures are still a subject of controversy, but the texts appear to support the version here given. According to a common interpretation, the downward gesture of the arm with fingers closed and thumb extended was the death-sentence, as shown in Gérôme's well-known painting "Pollice Verso". Gladiatorial shows were maintained for nearly seven hundred years, till the fifth century A. D.

They drew into the sand freemen, knights, senators, - yes, historians affirm that Commodus the Emperor did himself play the gladiator in person.

Hakewell, Apology, iv. § 8.

The combatants were either professional gladiators, slaves, criminals, or military captives.

Lecky, Europ. Morals, I. 301.

2. A combatant in general; a boxer or prize-fighter; a wrestler; also, a disputant.

Plays, masks, jesters, gladiators, tumblers, and jugglers are to be winked at, lest the people should do worse than attend them.

Horton, quoted in Strutt's Sports and Pastimes, p. 20.

Then whilst his foe each gladiator foils.

The atheist, looking on, enjoys the spoils.

Sir J. Denham.

gladiatorial (glad'i-à-to'ri-àl), a. [< gladiatory + -al.] 1. Of or pertaining to gladiators or to their combats for the entertainment of the Roman people; performed by gladiators.

It is uncertain whether gladiatorial fights or combats of wild beasts formed any part of the amusements of the arena in those days [of the ancient Egyptians], though boxing, wrestling, and combats of that description certainly did.

J. Ferguson, Hist. Arch., I. 320.

Hence—2. Pertaining to combatants in general, as prize-fighters, disputants, etc.

gladiatorian (glad'i-à-to'ri-àn), a. [< gladiatory + -an.] Same as gladiatorial. [Rare.]

The gladiatorian and other sanguinary sports which we allow our people discover sufficiently our national taste.

gladiatorism (glad'i-à-to'ri-izm), n. [< gladiator + -ism.] The act or practice of gladiators; specifically, prize-fighting. Imp. Dict.

gladiators (glad'i-à-to'ri-ship), n. [< gladiator + -ship.] The conduct, state, or occupation of a gladiator. Imp. Dict.

gladiatory (glad'i-à-to'ri), a. [= F. gladiatoire = Sp. Pg. It. gladiatorio, < L. gladiatorius, < gladiator, a gladiator; see gladiator.] Of or relating to gladiators. [Rare.]

Their [the Romans'] gladiatory fights and bloody spectacles.

Rp. Reynolds, The Passions, xxvii.

At Rome there were usually these gladiatory sports, bloody, sword-killing sports: they killed men in sport.

Wesley, Sermons (1640), p. 77.

gladiature (glad'i-à-tur), n. [= It. gladiatura, < L. gladiatura, < gladius, a sword; see gladius.] Sword-play; fencing.

In their amphitheatrical gladiatures the lives of captives lay at the mercy of the vulgar.

Bayly, Notes on Don Quixote, p. 271.

gladify (glad'i-fī), v. t.; prof. and pp. gladified, ppr. gladifying. [Irreg. < glad + -fy.] To be glad; rejoice. [Rare.]

Have you Mr. Twining still? oh that he would come and mortify upon our bread and cheese, while he would gladify upon our pleasure in his sight.

Wode D. Arblay, Diary, VI. 193.

gladii, n. Plural of gladius.

gladiole (glad'i-ol), n. [< L. gladiolus, sword-lily; see gladius.] A gladiolus. Water-gladiolus, the flowering rush, Belamcanda undulata.

gladiolus (glad'i-ol-us), n. [L., a small sword, a sword-lily (so called from the shape of the leaves), dim. of gladius, a sword; see gladius. Cf. gladden.] 1. Pl. gladiolus (-li). A plant of the genus Gladiolus, a sword-lily.—2. [cap.] A genus of very beautiful iridescent plants, with stems or bulb like rhizomes, and erect leafy stems bearing a spike of large and very variously colored flowers. There are about 20 species, a few of which are natives of the Mediterranean region but most are found in South Africa. Of the European species G. communis and G. Byzantinus are occasionally seen in gardens, but the African species are far more handsome and more generally cultivated. The many favorite garden varieties and hybrids have originated mainly from the Cape species, G. dorbignianus, G. cardinalis, G. altissimus and G. blanda.

3. In anat., the intermediate segments of the sternum, between the manubrium and the xiphoid or ensiform appendage. In the human subject there are four such segments or sternbraes, common to the adult in one piece, the gladiolus.

The second piece of the sternum, or gladiolus.

H. Gray, Anat.

gladius (glad'i-us), n.; pl. gladii (-i). [L., a sword; see gladiolus.] The pen, enlarmery, scpiost, or cuttlebone of the squid; the horny endoskeleton of a cuttlefish. See cuttlebone and cuttlefish.

gladly (glad'li), adv. [< ME. gladly, -liche (cf. Teut. glædhtig = Oldan. glædlig, Dan. glædelig, a., joyful). < AS. glædlice, gladly (cf. glædlic, bright), < glæd, glad; see glad.] 1. With gladness or pleasure; joyfully; cheerfully.

The drynken gladiest nannes blood, the whiche thei clepen Dicu.

Mandeville, Travels, p. 196.

For I haue syn hym in sylke and somme tyme in russet, Bothe in grey and in grye and in quite herneye, And as gladdly he it gaf to gones that it neded.

Piers Plowman (B), xv. 216.

The common people heard him gladly.

Mark xii. 37.

2. By preference; by choice.

All this was gladly in the evetyde.

Chaucer, Good Women, l. 770.

gladness (glad'nes), n. [< ME. gladnesse, glædnesse, < AS. glædnes, gladness, < glæd, glad; see glad.] The state of being glad; a pleased or joyful condition of mind; cheerfulness; a feeling of joy and exhilaration, usually of a strong yet quiet and temperate character.

And he ghat roynes for hemene and tymes herynge fruyt, And ful fulfildis ghoure heria with me to gladnesse.

Wyclif, Acts xiv. 17 (1517).

When the lord berde this he be gan to make soche joys and gladnesse that ther myght be seyn noon gretter.

Wyclif, E. T. S., li. 643.

They . . . did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart.

Acts ii. 46.

I grew in gladness till I found

My spirits in the golden age.

Tennyson, To E. L., on his Travels in Greece.

Syn. Gladness, Joy, Pleasure, Delight, Triumph. Gladness is less often used of a weak or clinging than glad; it generally stands for a feeling that is strong but tranquil, and showing itself chiefly in the face. Hence it is often used poetically of certain aspects of nature. Joy is more vivid and demonstrative. This distinction between gladness and joy is abundantly illustrated in the Bible. Pleasure is the most general of these words, representing all degrees of feeling, and vicious or harmful indulgence as well as harmless enjoyment. In its primary sense it indicates a feeling less distinctively cheerful than gladness and less profound or demonstrative than joy, but with much of glow. Delight is a high degree of pleasure, formerly the word was much used for low pleasure (see quotation from Milton under delight), but it has been reduced so that it is now rarely used for anything but an ecstatic pleasure or joy. Triumph is often used for joy over an enemy, especially in victory. All these words may express malign feelings, as joy in the adversity of a rival, except gladness, which generally expresses a pure and worthy feeling. See animation, mirth, hilarity, happiness.

With

A sober gladness the old year takes up

Gower, Conf. Amant, II.

gladsome (glad'sum), a. [< ME. glædsum, glæd-som (= Oldan. glædsom); < glæd + -some.] 1. Open; clear.

[And] in gladsome ayre

And comyn sowe hem now that is the here.

Pollardus, Basbædrie (E. T. S.) p. 114.

2. Glad; joyful; cheerful.

The gladsome ghosts in circling troops attend,

And with unweary eyes behold their friend.

Dr. L.

It [charity] beholdeth him to prosper and flourish, to stow in wealth and repute, not only without envious reproving, but with ostentatious content.

Barrow, Works, I. xvi.

3. Making glad; causing joy, pleasure, or cheerfulness; pleasing.

Of opening heaven they sung, and gladsome day

Prose, Solomon, p.

gladsomely (glad'sum-li), adv. [< ME. glædsumli; < glædsum + -li.] In a gladsome manner; with joy; with pleasure.

Wyclif.

gladsomeness (glad'sum-ness), n. [< ME. glædsumnesse; < glædsum + -ness.] The state of being gladsome; joy; pleasure.

My pasture past, my youthlike years are gone

My months of mirth, my glistening days of gladsomeness.

My times of triumph turned into none.

Frederick Auctors, The Lower Complaineth, etc.

Gladstone (glad'stōn), n. 1. A roomy four-wheeled pleasure-carriage with two inside seats, calash-top, and seats for driver and footman.—2. Same as Gladstone bag.—Gladstone bag, an English traveling-bag or portmanteau of leather stretched on a light iron frame. It is from 22 to 24 inches long, in two or more compartments, so as to contain a dress-suit without crushing or creasing the garments; so named in compliment to William E. Gladstone.

Gladstonian (glad'stō-ni-an), a. and n. [< Gladstone (see def.) + -an.] 1. a. Pertaining to the English statesman William E. Gladstone (born 1809), or to the wing of the Liberal party in Great Britain following his lead.

II. n. A follower or an admirer of Gladstone; specifically, in British politics, a member of that wing of the Liberal party which in 1886 and succeeding years supported Gladstone's efforts in behalf of home rule for Ireland.

gladwint, gladwynt (glad'win), n. Same as gladden.

Glagol (glag'ol), n. [OBulg. Russ. glagolā, a word, = Bohem. hlakol, a sound, speech; cf. OBulg. glagolati, speak; regarded as ult. a redupl. of the root seen in Skt. √ gar, swallow.] An ancient Slavic alphabet, principally used in several Roman Catholic dioceses of Istria and Dalmatia in the psalms, liturgies, and offices of the church. The alphabet bears traces of having existed prior to the introduction of Christianity, and seems to have been originally cut on sticks in the rustic fashion. The earliest Slavic manuscripts are written in Glagol.

Glagolitic (glag-o-lit'ik), a. [< Glagol + -itic.] Of or pertaining to Glagol: as, the Glagolitic alphabet.

The Glagolitic was the liturgical alphabet of the Slovenians, Illyrians, Croats, and the other western Slaves who acknowledged the Roman obedience, just as the Cyrillic became the script of the northern races . . . who adhered to the Orthodox communion.

Isaac Taylor, The Alphabet, II. 199.

glak (glāk), n. [Sce. = glæk, q. v.] 1. A deception; a delusion; a trick.—2. A transient gleam or glance.

I could see by a glak of light from a neighbour's window, that there was a man with a cocked hat at the door.

Galt, The Provost, p. 197.

To fling the glaks in folk's een, to throw dust in people's eyes.

It is indeed but a fashion of integrity that ye will find among them, . . . a fashion of wisdom and fashion of carnal learning, gazing glancing glances they are, fit only to show the glaks in folk's een, wi their pawky policy and earthly intrigue.

Scott, Heart of Mid Lothian, xii.

To give the glaks, to behold and then leave in the lurch.

glakit, glaket (glā'kit, -ket), a. [Sce. < glask + -it, -et = E. -ed2.] Unsteady; light; giddy; frolicsome; silly.

Hear me, ye ven table core,

As counsel for poor mortals

That frequent pass down Wisdom's door,

For glakit folly a portals

Burns, To the Unco Guid,

The haste is glakit wi' pride

J. Baillie.

glakitness (glā'kit-ness), n. The state of being glakit; vain or silly folly; levity. [Scotch.]

Bid her have done wi' her glakitness for a wee, and let a hear plain sense for aince.

J. L. Lockhart, Reginald Dalton, III. 171.

glaim (glām), n. [ME. gleym, glayme, lime, slime. Cf. englaim.] A viscous substance, as glue, birdlime, etc. [Obsolete or Scotch.] Gleyme of kuytynge or byndunge togedyr, thus, glaiten.

Prompt. Paree, p. 128.

glaim (glām), v. t. [ME. gleymen, smear with birdlime, clay; from the noun; see glaim, n.] To smear with glaim. [Obsolete or Scotch.] glaimous (glā'mus), a. [Formerly also glaymous; < ME. gleymous, viscous; < glaim + -ous.] Viscous; clammy.

It wall arise in the heed, and make the heed to swell, and the even all glaimous and dork.

Jul. Berners, On Hawking.

glain-neidr, n. [W., < glain, bead, gem, + neidr, snake.] An oval glass bead, such as are found in Wales and the west of England, and are supposed to have been of some sacred significance to the druids. See adder-stone.

glair (glār), n. [Also glare; early mod. E. also glere. < ME. glayre, gleire, glayre, the white of an egg; < OF. glaire, F. glaire, the white of an egg (= Pr. clara, glara, f., clar, m., = It. chiara = Sp. Pg. clara, the white of an egg), prop. claire, fem. of clair, < L. clara, fem. of clarus, clear; see clear, clarify.] 1. The white of an egg, used as varnish to preserve painting, and as a size to retain gold in bookbinding and in gilding.

considerable length of time. Also called gland-bags.

One of the chief difficulties encountered in the compression of ammonia is leakage at the pump gland.

Sci. Amer. Supp., p. 8780.

Absorbent gland, a lymphatic gland. Accessory gland, a small detached part of the parotid gland, which sometimes exists as a separate lobe, and whose duct joins the duct of Steno as the latter crosses the masseter. More fully called glandula accessoria parotidis. Acinose glands. See acinar, 2.

Aggregate glands, the Peyerian glands of Peyer's patches of the intestine. Aggregate glands of Bruch, clusters of lymph follicles in the conjunctiva, the lacrymal glands of Heide. Also called clusters of Bruch. Agminate glands, aggregated glands of the intestine. See Peyerian glands, below. Anal gland. See anal.

Arytenoid glands, the mucous crypts of the larynx in the vicinity of the arytenoid cartilages. Atrabiliary gland, an old name of the adrenal or suprarenal gland or capsule. Also called atrabilary capsule. Axillary glands, the lymphatic glands of the armpit. Blood-vascular gland, one of the several so-called "ductless glands," as the spleen, thyroid, thymus, and adrenal.

Bowman's glands, small acinar glands in the olfactory mucous membrane, most distinctly characterized in the lower air-breathing vertebrates. Bronchial glands, the lymphatic glands in the course of the bronchial tubes.

Brunner's glands (so called from J. K. Brunner (1838-1877)), the small compound glands of the duodenum and upper part of the jejunum, embedded in the submucous tissue, opening by minute orifices into the lumen of the intestine. Buccal glands, the mucous follicles of the mouth, similar in structure to salivary glands. Calciferous gland, one of several pairs of lateral esophageal glandular diverticula of the earthworm which secrete a calcareous substance. Also called calcareous sacs.

The pharynx leads into the esophagus, on each side of which in the lower part there are three pairs of large glands, which secrete a surprising amount of carbonate of lime. These calciferous glands are highly remarkable, for nothing like them is known in any other animal.

Darwin, Vegetable Mould, p. 17.

Cardiac glands, carotid gland, choroid gland. See the adjectives. Ceruminous glands, ceruminiparous glands, the follicles of the ear which secrete ear wax. They are modified sweat glands. Coccygeal gland. (a) In ornith, same as croppeal gland. (b) In human anat., a small conglomerate body about as large as a pea, lying near the tip of the coccyx, the exact structure and function of which is uncertain. It is intimately connected with the arteries and nerves, and is probably not of glandular character. It is also called Luschka's gland, after its first describer, and by Arnold glomerulus arterio-venosus coccygeus. Colateral gland. Same as colleterans. Conglobate gland, a lymphatic or absorbent gland. See def. 1 (a).

Conglomerate gland, a compound gland, generally of large size and of various structure, as the hepatic, pancreatic, parotid, mammary, etc. The name is an old one, derived from Sylvius, who divided glands as then understood into conglomerate and conglobate, the latter being the lymphatics. Congregate glands, Peyer's glands. See Peyerian glands. Coniferous glands, a name formerly given to the oleoid markings in the wood cells of gymnosperms. Cowper's glands. See Cowperian glands, under Cowperian. Ductless gland, a so-called gland, such as the spleen, thymus, thyroid, or adrenal, having no excretory duct or secretory function. The pineal and pituitary bodies are sometimes brought under this category. Also called vascular gland. Duodenal glands, the glands of Brunner. Epiglottic gland, esophageal glands, fundus glands, etc. See the qualifying words.

Feather oil-gland. See feather. Follicular gland, a simple gland of small size; a follicle. Gastric glands, the secretory follicles of the stomach; gastric follicles, commonly divided into two sets, the cardiac and pyloric. Genital gland, the primitive undifferentiated gland of the embryo which is destined to become the testis of the male or the ovary of the female; a germ gland. Glands of Bartholin, glandular Bartholin, odoriferous glands, half an inch long, situated one on each side of the opening of the vagina and discharging on the inner surfaces of the labia minora. Green-gland, a special excretory gland of the crayfish and other crustaceans, which functions as a renal organ; so called from the color of its secretion. It was formerly regarded as an auditory organ, now supposed to be probably of the same nature as the shell-gland of the Eutomostrea or lower crustaceans.

This organ persists in the Thoracostrea and is known as the green gland in the crayfish. . . . The green gland alone is distinctly similar to a renal excretory organ. (Gegenbaur, Comp. Anat. (trans.), p. 287.

Harderian gland, the lubricating gland of the nictitating membrane or third eyelid, situated at the inner corner of the orbit in reptiles, birds, and many mammals. It is wanting in the highest mammals. Havers's glands, the structures described by Clopton Havers as small glandular glands and as the source of the secretion of the synovial fluid which lubricates joints. Hepatic gland, the liver. Hermaphrodite gland, a germ gland or essential organ of generation which secretes both ova and spermatozoa, as is usual in the Mollusca. Inguinal glands, the lymphatic glands of the groin. Intestinal glands, any of the various secretory or ductless glands of the intestine, as the solitary, agminate, Brunner's, Lieberkühn's, etc. Labial glands, certain follicles beneath the mucous membrane of the lips, opening by small orifices, and resembling other buccal glands. Lacrimal gland, the gland which secretes the tears, situated in the anterior upper and outer part of the orbit. Lenticular glands, a disused name for what are now known as lentils. Lieberkühn's glands, the follicles of Lieberkühn, the small simple or solitary glands of the intestine. Littre's glands, the crypts along the spongy portion of the urethra. Luschka's gland. Same as croppeal gland, above. Lymphatic glands. See def. 1 (a). Mammary gland, the milk gland; the gland which secretes milk, known as the breast, test, udder, etc. These glands are named in zoölogy, from their position, as axillary, pectoral, ventral or abdominal, and inguinal. They are paired, and normally have functional activity only in the female, though present in a rudimentary state in the male. See mammal. Melchiorian glands (named for H. Melchiorius, who wrote at the end of the seventeenth century), the sebaceous follicles of the eyelids, secreting the greasy substance which lubricates the lids, and when excessive may gather at the corner of the eye, and there harden into the little bodies called styes. Also called Melchiorian follicles. Mesenteric glands, the lymphatic glands of the mesentery. Miliary glands. (a) In anat., the sebaceous glands of the skin. (b) In bot., the stomates or breathing-pores of a leaf. Molar glands, two or three large glands situated in the sides of the mouth, whose excretory ducts open into the mouth opposite the last molar tooth. Morrenian gland. See Morrenian. Mucilaginous glands, certain plaited and fringed processes of synovial membranes; so named by Havers as the supposed source of the synovia. Mucous glands, any of the glands, in connection with mucous surfaces, which secrete mucus or some similar substance, as the buccal glands of the mouth and various follicles of portions of the alimentary canal. Also called mucus-glands. Mushroom-shaped gland of certain insects, a remarkable accessory genital organ of the male, the so-called testis, but of the nature of a seminal vesicle.

As the duct of the mushroom-shaped gland in the adult male (bilata) always contains spermatozoa, and no other organ containing spermatozoa is to be found, this gland has naturally been taken for the testis. Rajewsky, however, has recently pointed out that the true testes are situated in the tergal region of the abdomen. . . . He traces the efferent duct of the testes to the glands just mentioned. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 350.

Nidamental glands, those glands which secrete the viscid substance by which the ova of some animals, as cephalopoda, are invested and aggregated into various shapes.

A pair of so-called nidamental glands are the accessory organs of the female apparatus of generation in cephalopoda; they consist of elongated lamellar tubes, which are placed in the anterior region of the animal; their short efferent ducts open beside the generative orifice. Their secretion appears to cement the ova together. (Gegenbaur, Comp. Anat. (trans.), p. 280.

Odoriferous glands, scent-glands, sebaceous follicles which secrete odoriferous substances, the chief physiological function of which is to bring the sexes together. They are enormous in some animals, and usually associated with the anus or genitals. They are the source of the fetor of the Mustelids, as skunks and polecats, and of such perfumes as musk, civet, and castoreum. They are comparatively small in the human subject, in which they are preputial and known as Tyson's glands. Pachionian glands, small villous patches, not glandular in character, found in clusters on the membranes enveloping the brain, especially along the superior longitudinal sinus. Pancreatic gland, the pancreas. Parotid gland, the principal salivary gland. See parotid, a. Parotoid gland, in herpet.. See parotid, n. Peptic glands, a name formerly given to the cardiac variety of gastric glands; the gastric follicles secreting gastric juice. See gastric glands. Peyerian glands (named after J. K. Peyer, a Swiss anatomist (1653-1712)), aggregations of lymphoid follicles of the intestine, forming a number of circular or oval patches from half an inch to several inches in diameter, largest and most numerous in the ileum. They are commonly called Peyer's patches, and the lesion of them is one of the most constant signs of typhoid fever. Pineal gland. See corpus nervosum and epiphysis. Pituitary gland. See pituitary and hypophysis. Prostate gland. See prostate, n. Pyloric glands, those gastric follicles which are most numerous near the pyloric end of the stomach, as distinguished from the cardiac glands. Rectal glands, in certain insects, projecting ridges of the interior of the walls of the rectum, well supplied with tracheae. Salivary glands, those glands which secrete saliva. The chief are the parotid, submaxillary, and sublingual. They are enormously developed in some birds, as swifths and woodpeckers, and in the beaver and the saw-eel. Sebaceous glands, sebaceous follicles which secrete a greasy substance serving to lubricate the skin. Melchiorian and odoriferous follicles are of a similar character. Simple gland, a small single gland, a follicular gland or follicle. Solitary glands, the numerous small lymphoid nodules found scattered throughout the mucous membrane of the small intestine, especially of the ileum. They are now regarded as lymph-follicles. Split gland, a form of gland used to compress the packing in a stuffing box. It is split to permit of its ready removal. Sublingual gland, a salivary gland situated under the sole of the tongue; in man the smallest of the three pairs of such glands. See sublingual. Submaxillary gland, a salivary gland situated under the side of the lower jaw-bone; in man intermediate in size between the parotid and the sublingual gland. See submaxillary. Sudoriferous or sudoriparous glands, sweat-glands; the minute crypts whence perspiration escapes from the skin. See sudor and sweat-gland. Suprarenal gland, a non-glandular body of unknown function which caps each kidney. Also called suprarenal, suprarenal capsule, atrabilary gland or capsule, and adrenal. See under kidney. Thymus gland, a so-called ductless gland situated at the root of the throat, characteristic of fetal life and early infancy. The thymus gland of the calf is the throat-sweetbread of butchers. See thymus. Thyroid gland. See thyroid, n. Tracheal glands, the numerous follicles which open upon the mucous membrane of the windpipe. Trachoma glands, a name applied by Heide to certain lymphoid follicles of the conjunctiva of the eye, resembling Peyer's patches in their intimate structure. Tyson's glands. See odoriferous glands, above. Uropygial gland, the gland on the ramp of a bird which secretes oil; the elmodochon. Also called croppeal gland. Vascular glands. Same as ductless or blood-vascular glands; so called from their vascularity. (See also perme-gland, shell-gland, pale-gland.)

glandage (glan-dá'), n. [OF. glandage, mast, acorn, the season of turning hogs into the woods to feed on mast, < glans, an acorn, mast; see gland.] The season of turning hogs into the woods; the feeding of hogs with mast. Bailey.

glandarous (glan-dá'ri-us), a. [L. glandarius, pertaining to an acorn, < glans (gland-), an acorn; see gland.] Acorn-like in shape; glandiform.

gland-box (glan'd'boks), n. Same as gland, 4. gland-cock (glan'd'kok), n. A faucet kept in place by a gland which can be removed when it becomes necessary to get at the plug. E. H. Knight.

glander (glan'dér), v. t. [< glanders.] To affect with glanders.

Being drunk in plenty, it [tar-water] hath recovered even a glandered horse that was thought incurable. Bp. Berkeley, Tar-Water.

glanderous (glan'dér-us), a. [< glanders + -ous.] Of the nature of, caused by, or affected with glanders.

Our laws provide for the destruction of animals affected with glanderous ulcers.

Hartford (Conn.) Globe, Sept. 2, 1886.

glanders (glan'dérz), n. [< gland, q. v., prob. through a form (*OF. *glandra, glandis) of glandula, L. glandula, a gland. Cf. chapter, ult. < L. capitulum.] A form of equinia characterized by a severe affection of the mucous membrane of the nose and by a profuse discharge from it. See equinia.

glandes, n. Plural of glans.

glandiferous (glan-dif'ér-us), a. [= F. glandifère = Sp. glandifero = It. glandifero, < L. glandifer, acorn-bearing, < glans (gland-), an acorn, + ferre = E. bear.] Bearing acorns or other nuts; producing nuts or mast; as, the beech and the oak are glandiferous trees.

glandiform (glan'di-fór-m), a. [= F. glandiforme = It. glandiforme, < L. glans (gland-), an acorn, + forma, shape.] 1. Acorn-like in shape; glandarous. — 2. Having the character or structure of a gland; resembling a gland; glandular.

Glandina (glan-dí-ná), n. [NL. (Schumacher, 1817), < L. glans (gland-), an acorn, + -ina.] A genus of pulmonate mollusks or snails, typical of the family Glandinidae, having an oblong or elongated shell with a truncated columella and a thin outer lip, and containing upward of a hundred species.

G. tranchesi is a well known species of the southern United States, of an ashy fawn-color tinged with pink; G. rosea is a Central American form.

Glandinids (glan-dín'i-dé), n. pl. [NL. < Glandina + -ids.] A family of geophilous pulmonate gastropods, typified by the genus Glandina.

They have no jaw; the teeth are mostly alike, elongated, narrow, and acute; and the mantle is submedian or postmedian and entirely included in the shell, which is elongated or turreted. Also called thacnids.

glandula (glan'dú-lá), n.; pl. glandulae (-lô). [L., a gland; see glandula.] In zool. and anat., a gland of any kind. The term is now less frequent in use than formerly, but it is still regularly employed in a number of terms, chiefly anatomical.

glandular (glan'dú-lár), a. [< glandula + -ar.] 1. Pertaining to or resembling a gland; having the character or function of a gland; affecting a gland, as, glandular texture; glandular organs; a glandular disease. — 2. Containing or supporting glands; consisting of a gland or glands; glanduliferous. Glandular hairs, in bot., hairs which arise from or are tipped with glands, as in the nettle and sundew. — Glandular woody fiber or tissue, a term that has been sometimes applied to the pitted woody tissue of gymnosperms.

glandularly (glan'dú-lár-lí), adv. In a glandular manner.

glandulation (glan'dú-lá'shon), n. [< glandula + -ation.] In bot., the situation and structure of the secretory vessels in plants.

Glandulation respects the secretory vessels, which are either glandules, follicles, or utricles. Lea.

glandule (glan'dú-lí), n. [= F. glandule = Pr. glandula = Sp. glandula = Pg. glandula = It. ghiandola, < L. glandula, a gland, dim. of glans (gland-), an acorn; see gland.] A small gland; any gland. See glandula.

It hath eye-lids commodiously placed, to cleanse the ball from dust, (and) to shed necessary moisture upon it through numerous glandules. Bentley, Sermone, v.

glanduliferous (glan'dú-lif'ér-us), a. [< L. glandula, a gland, + ferre = E. bear.] Bearing glandules.

glandulose (glan'dú-lô-s), a. Same as glandulous.

glandulosity (glan'dú-lô-s'i-ti), n. [< glandulose + -ity.] 1. The state or quality of being glandulous. — 2. A glandular body; a swelling resembling a gland. [Rare.]

In the upper part of worms there are . . . found certain white and oval glandulosity.

Sir P. Brown, Vulg. Err., II, 37.

glandulous (glan'dū-lus), a. [Also glandulose; = P. glandulosus = Sp. Fg. II. glanduloso, < L. glandulosus, glandulosus, < glandula, a gland; see glandula.] Same as glandular.

All glands and glandulous parts do likewise consist of fibers, but of the softer kind.

N. Grew, Cosmologia Sacra, I, v. § 18.

Glanencheli (gla-neng'ke-li), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. γλάνη, prob. the sheat-fish (cf. γλάνη, the hyena), + ἐχέλας, eel.] In Cope's classification, an order of physostomous fishes, containing only the electric eels or Electrophoridae. They have no preopercular arch, the scapular arch is suspended to the cranium; a symplectic bone is present; the parietals are united; and the anterior vertebrae are modified. By others the group is referred to the order Pleurocentridae.

glanenchelian (glan-eng'ke-li-an), a. [As Glanencheli + -ian.] Pertaining to the Glanencheli.

glanenchelous (gla-neng'ko-lus), a. Same as glanenchelian.

glanidian (gla-nid'i-an), n. [NL., < glanis (glanid-) + -ian.] A fish of the family Siluridae; a silurid, as a catfish or sheat-fish. Sir J. Richardson.

Glanistomi (glan-i-on'tō-mi), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. γλάνη, prob. the sheat-fish, + στόμα, mouth.] An order of chondrosteous ganoid fishes, containing only the Acanthopterygia or true sturgeons, thus separated from the Selachostomi: so called from having the mouth furnished with barbels like those of catfishes; synonymous with Chondrostei, 2, in a strict sense. See Ganoides, 2. Also written Glanostomi, Glanistomi. E. D. Cope.

glanistomous (glan-i-on'tō-mus), a. [As Glanistomi + -ous.] Catfish-mouthed; having barbels like those of the horned pouts or Siluridae; specifically applied to the Glanistomi.

glanis (glā'nīs), n. [NL., < Gr. γλάνη, prob. the sheat-fish; cf. γλάνη, the hyena.] 1. The specific name of the common silurid fish of Europe, Silurus glanis, the sheat-fish. — 2. [cap.] A genus of silurians, of which the sheat fish is the type.

glans (glanz), n.; pl. glanides (glan'dēz). [L., an acorn; see glans.] 1. In bot., the acorn, or a similar fruit. — 2. In med.: (a) A strumous swelling or enlargement of the thyroid gland; bronchovascular; goiter. (b) A pessary; a suppository. — 3. In anat., the head of the penis or of the clitoris. More fully called glans penis and glans clitoridis. — 4. [cap.] In conch., a genus of mollusks. Megale.

glar, n. See glare, glaur. Carlyle.

glare (glār), v.; pret. and pp. glared, ppr. glaring. [ME. glaren, shine brightly, also look fiercely, = MLG. glaren, lit. glaren, shine brightly, glow, burn, = MHG. glaren, shine brightly; allied to ME. glorn, shine brightly, look fiercely, glower (see glare, glower); prob. secondary forms of the verb-root from which are derived AS. glær, amber, and glæs, glass, etc.; see glans.] 1. intrans. 1. To shine with a strong, bright, dazzling light; be intensely or excessively bright.

To see a chimney-piece of Danere's doing, in distemper with egg to keep off the glaring of the light. Pope, Dial., IV, 23.

On a summer's day there (on the tide) the sun glares down upon the sand and flat gravatores. Hawells, Venetian Life, xii.

2. To look with a fierce and piercing stare. "One as melancholle as a cat," answered Mockso, "and glared upon me as if he would have looked through me." Man in the Moon (1830).

Look you, how pale he [the ghost] glares. Shak., Hamlet, III, 4.

Glared like angry lions as they passed, And wished that every look might be the last. Dryden, Pal. and Arc., I, 356.

3. To be intensely or excessively bright in color; be too brilliantly ornamented; be ostentatiously splendid.

Lo, thus it fareth, It is not all gold that glareth. Chaucer, House of Fame, I, 272.

She glares in halls, front bores, and the ring. Pope, Epistle to Miss Mount, I, 63.

upon him. Sparkle represents a hard light that seems to be emitted irregularly in ignited particles or visible parts: as, sparkling diamonds, eyes, wit. Cornucopy expresses a rapid throwing off of vivid or brilliant flashes of light, as in the aurora borealis or by a revolving piece of fireworks. Glimmer represents a faint and unsteady light: as, stars glimmering through the mist. Flicker goes further, and suggests, as glimmer does not, a probable extinction of the light: as, a flickering taper. See flame, n., and radiance.

[The sun] glared down in the woods, where the breathless houghs Hung heavy and faint in a languid drowse. Coleridge, Thunder Storm.

The clay walls glister like gold in the shining rays. O'Donovan, Met., IV.

Then in the dusk the glittering splendor scintillates as brilliantly as it did eight hundred years ago. Lathrop, Spanish Vistas, p. 26.

To be perk'd up in a glistering glee, And wear a golden sorrow. Shak., Ham., VIII, II, 3.

Violet, heavenly blue, Spring, glittering with the cheerful drops like dew. Byron, Paradise of Tears.

Hope, like the gleaming taper a light, A-lorus and cheers our way. Guthrie, Captivity, II, 1.

With one star sparkling through it like an eye. Byron, Don Juan, II, 183.

As flaming fire was more coruscant and enlightening than any other matter, they invented lamps to hang in the sepulchres of the rich, which would burn perpetually. Greenhall, Art of Embalming, p. 331.

Down sank the great red sun, and in golden, glimmering vapours Velled the light of his face. Longfellow, Evangeline, I, 4.

On us all flickers the firelight kind. Lowell, Darkened Mind.

II. trans. To shoot out or emit, as a dazzling light. [Rare.]

One spirit in them ruled; and every eye Glared lightning, and shot forth potent beams. Milton, P. L., VI, 849.

Among the accurat. Milton, P. L., VI, 849.

The frame of burnished steel that cast a glare. Dryden, Pal. and Arc., II, 540.

Without, the steady glare Shrank one sick willow weep and small. Tennyson, Mariana in the South.

2. A fierce, piercing look. About them round, A lion now he stalks with fiery glare. Milton, P. L., IV, 402.

I looked on haughty Endicott; with weapon half way drawn, Swept round the throng his lion glare of bitter hate and scorn. Whittier, Cassidora Southwick.

3. A stretch of ice; an icy condition. Seven months the Winter dures (in Russia) the glare it is no great. As it may before he turns his ground to sow his wheat. Hakluyt's Voyages, I, 320.

glare (glār), a. [From glare, n.] Smooth; slippery; transparent; glassy.

I have seen ponies which had to be knocked down and pulled at a rough glare on the ice slides (the roaring stream). T. Roosevelt, Hunting Trips, p. 87.

glare (glār), n. and v. Another spelling of glaur.

Glareola (glā-rō-lā), n. [NL., dim. of L. glareus, gravel.] A remarkable genus of birds, Common Glareola or Pratincole (Glareola pratincola).

typical of the family Glareolidae. The common glareola or pratincole is G. pratincola. There are several others, all of the old world. See pratincole.

glareole (glār-ō-lē), n. [From Glareola.] A bird of the genus Glareola; a pratincole.

Glareolidae (glār-ō-lā-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Glareola + -idae.] A family of limicoline birds, the glareoles or pratincoles, belonging among the plovers or Charadriomorpha, but presenting anomalous external characters, which have caused them to be classed with the swallows, the goatsuckers, and other birds. The eyes are very large; the beak is compressed, curved, and deeply cleft, somewhat like a cuckoo's; the tail is long and forked like a swallow's; the middle claw is pectinate like a goatsucker's or heron's; the hind toe is turned sideways, the wings are very long and pointed; and the legs are short for birds of this group, and feathered to the suffragu. The general form is lithe and graceful, like that of a swallow. There is but one genus, Glareola. See out under Glareola.

glareoline (glā-rō-lē-in), a. [From glareole + -ine.] Having the character of a glareole; pertaining to the genus Glareola.

glareous (glār-ō-s), a. [From L. glareosus, full of gravel, gravelly, < glarea, gravel.] In bot., growing in gravelly places. [Rare.]

glareous, a. See glareous.

glariness (glār-i-ness), n. The quality of being glary.

glaring (glār-ing), n. a. 1. Emitting a brilliant, dazzling light; shining with dazzling luster.

Life's changes vex, its discords stup, Its glaring sunshine blunder. H. Atter, Well of Lach Marce.

2. Staring. Swiche glaring eyes holds he, as an hare. Chaucer, Gen. Prolog. to C. T., I, 688.

3. Clear; plainly discernible; open and bold; unobscured; as, a glaring mistake or crime.

The absurdity of unqualified altruism becomes, indeed, glaring on remembering that it can be extensively practiced only if in the same society there coexist one moiety altruistic and one moiety egoistic. H. Spencer, Study of Sociol., p. 186.

glaringly (glār-ing-lē), adv. In a glaring manner; openly; clearly; notoriously.

The colours for the ground were . . . well chosen, neither sullenly dark nor glaringly light. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, III.

The satirist never falls upon persons who are not glaringly faulty, and the libeller on none but who are conspicuously commendable. Steele, Tatler, No. 92.

glaringness (glār-ing-ness), n. The state or quality of being glaring.

The glaringness of his prose, and the intricacy of his style, seemed to him so many pearls. Jarvis, tr. of Don Quixote, I, I, 1.

glart, n. [Appar. a var. of glart.] Mucous matter; phlegm.

For the party that is incumbered in the breast with any kind of fleame or glart. Take the powder of betons, drink it with warme water, it will doth and purgeth the fleame wondrously, and doth away the glart or fleame. Quoted in Narce.

glary (glār-lē), a. [From glare + -y.] 1. Of a brilliant, dazzling luster.

I know that bright crystal glass is glary, and to avoid that glariness, our artificers run into the other extreme. Boyle, Works, VI, 126.

2. Covered with a glare of ice; icy.

In the winter time, so glary is the ground, As neither grass, nor other graine, in pastures may be found. Hakluyt's Voyages, I, 390.

Glas, -glas. [Gael. glas, gray, pale, wan, = Ir. glas, green, verdant, pale, wan, poor. It is possible that in some local names this element is an accom. of Gael. glac, a hollow, a valley, a narrow valley, = Ir. glac, a narrow glen.] An element in some place-names of Celtic (mostly Gaelic) origin, signifying 'dark', 'gray' (or 'valley'; see etymology); as, Glasford; Douglas; Strathglass.

glaset, v. An obsolete form of glaze.

glasent, a. See glazn.

Glaserian (glā-zēr-i-an), a. Relating to the Swiss anatomist Glaser (1829-75). Also spelled Glaserian. — Glaserian fissure. See fissure.

glaserite (glā-zēr-īt), n. [From Christoph Glaser, a Swiss chemist (17th century), + -ite.] Potassium sulphate occurring in orthorhombic crystals.

glashan (glāsh'an), n. Same as glashan.

glass (glas), n. and a. [ME. glas, glæs, < AS. glæs, glass (only of the material), = D. glas, = Gllt. glas, glass (also amber), MHG. glaz, G. glas = Icel. glas = OSw. Sw. glas = Dan. glas (cloth, not recorded); glass; appar. the same as AS. glær, amber, = Icel. glær, = OSw. glær = Dan. glær (cloth), glass; the L. glacum, glacum, glacum, glacum, = perhaps from the GTest. form. The verb root is repr. by glare, q. v.]

I. n. 1. A substance resulting from the fusion of a combination of silica (rarely boracic acid) with various bases. See vitreous. It is usually hard brittle, has a conchoidal fracture, and is more or less transparent some kinds being entirely so, while other substances to which the name of glass is commonly given are, in consequence of the impurity of the material or imperfection in the manufacture, only slightly translucent. Glass is an inorganic substance, as would naturally be inferred from its being the result of fusion, but some organic substances are called vitreous. Some rocks have a vitreous structure, like that of artificial glass, as, for instance, obsidian, which is often called volcanic glass. (See obsidian and lava.) The slags produced in furnace operations are vitreous substances, but usually only translucent, and not transparent, because the vitrification is incomplete, and also because they are too deeply colored by metallic oxides. Glass, as the word is generally understood, is an artificial product, and one of the most important of manufactured articles. Its valuable qualities are: the ease with which it can be made to take any desired shape; cheapness, the result of the small cost of the materials of which it is made; durability, and especially resistance to decomposition by acids and corrosive substances generally; transparency, a quality of the utmost importance, as evidenced by its use for windows and in optical and chemical instruments; and the beautiful luster of those kinds which are used for ornamental purposes. Almost the only drawback to these good qualities of glass is its brittleness. The bases used in glass manufacture are chiefly soda, potash, lime, alumina, and oxid of lead, and the quality of the article produced depends on the nature and amount of the basic material united with the silica. The combinations of silica with a simple alkaline base, either potash or soda, are soluble in water, and are known as water-glass. (See soluble glass, below.) They are useful substances, but very different in their properties from what is ordinarily known as glass. In addition to the alkaline bases there must be an alkaline earth or a metallic oxid. The cheapest glass is that used for bottles; in this the basic material is chiefly lime, with some potash or soda, and alumina. (Glass for medicine bottles differs from ordinary bottle glass in containing more potash than the latter, and also in the greater purity of the material used. Window-glass usually contains both soda and lime; here absence of any tinge of color is important, except in the most inferior qualities. Potash and soda render the glass more fusible, alumina diminishes its fusibility; lime makes it harder; lead gives luster, fusibility, and high refractive power. Hence, in glass which is to be cut and polished, where beauty is of prime importance, the base is chiefly oxid of lead, which amounts in some cases to half the weight of the material used. Glass in which lead is the essential base is called crystal or flint glass. (See those words.) The finer kinds of glass without lead are called crown-glass. The tools employed by the glass blower are simple, but require dexterity for their use. The process of manufacture depends on the fact that, at a very high temperature, glass is a liquid which can be readily cast; at a full red heat it is soft, ductile, and easily worked; when cold, it is hard and brittle. Glass to be serviceable must be annealed after the desired form has been given to it. This is done by heating it nearly to the melting point, and then allowing it to cool very slowly in an annealing chamber. By the action of hydrofluoric acid, which combines readily with the silica in glass, etching can be done on a glass surface. When cold, glass can be ground or cut upon a wheel, scratched by a diamond point (by which means sheets of glass are readily divided or shaped, as they will break easily along the lines of such scratches), cut and polished, or "ground" by a sand blast, and brought to an exceedingly high polish. Specimens of Egyptian glass are in existence which can be dated back to about 2400 B. C.; in Egyptian sculptures of 4000 B. C. glass bottles are undoubtedly represented; and among the bas-reliefs of Rameses II., about 2000 B. C., various operations of glass blowing are portrayed. In historical Egyptian, the Median, and Roman antiquity, glass was in familiar use.

The great quantities of examples of an ancient glass vessels which have been excavated from tombs, etc., formerly clear and transparent, are now as a rule characterized by a brilliant iridescence like that of mother-of-pearl. This iridescence is due to the imperfect composition of the glass, which has thus become affected by moisture during its stay under ground. Though well known to the Greeks, glass was in less common use among them, owing to the perfection of their ceramic ware. In Europe the most artistic manufactures of glass have been, since the middle ages, those of Venice, characterized by great elegance of form and lightness and thinness of substance, and those of Bohemia, of later date than the Venetian, and especially notable not only for grace of form, but for enameling, cutting, and engraved decoration.

Specimens of Ancient Roman Glass. (From "L. Art pour Tous.")

They keep the wind out of their windows with glass for it is there much used. Sir T. More, Utopia, II. 11. 2. I must be married to my brother's daughter Or else my kingdom stands on brittle glass. Shak., Rich. III., IV. 3. Where nymph and god can ever round in gold Others of glass as costly. Tennyson, Lover's Tale, IV.

2. A plate, screen, vessel, instrument, etc., made of glass. (a) A plate or pane of glass inserted in the frame of a window, picture, clock, hotbed, etc., to admit the light or permit a view, while excluding wind, rain, dust, or other interference. (b) A looking glass, a mirror. It was formerly fashionable for ladies to carry a looking glass hanging from the girdle.

The glass of fashion, and the mould of form. Shak., Hamlet, III. 1. Let all sweet ladies break their flattering glasses. And dress themselves in her. Webster, Duchess of Malf., I. 2. We may see our future in the glass of our past history. W. Phillips, Speeches, p. 374.

(c) A glass vessel filled with running sand for measuring time, called specifically an hour-glass; hence, the time in which a glass is exhausted of its sand; specifically (naut.), the time in which a half hour glass is emptied of its sand.

If you should omit to note those things at the end of every four glasses, I would not have you to let it slip any longer time than to note it diligently at the end of every watch, or eight glasses at the farthest.

Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 430.

Pro. What is the time of the day? Fast the mid season.

Pro. At least two glasses. Shak., Tempest, I. 2.

She would not live

The running of one glass. Shak., W. T., I. 2.

(d) A vessel made of glass, as, a jelly glass; a finger-glass, especially. (e) A drinking vessel made of glass; hence, the quantity which such a vessel holds, and figuratively what one drinks, especially strong drink, as, fond of his glass.

The interview

That swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glass

Did break 't the rinsing. Shak., Ren. VIII., I. 1.

See that ye fill the glass well up

To the Laird o' Warlocktown.

Laird o' Warlocktown (Child's Ballads), III. 1111.

Being you have abandoned yourself to my conduct, we will only call and drink a glass on horseback at the Talbot, and away.

Cotton, in Walton's Angler, II. 257.

(f) An observing-instrument made of glass, or of which the main or most important part is of glass. (1) A lens, a telescope, a field glass. (2) A barometer. (3) A thermometer. (4) An eye glass, usually in the plural, eyeglasses or spectacles.

The moon, whose orb

Through optic glass the Turk an artist views.

Milton, P. L., I. 298.

With glass at eye, and catalogue in hand.

Comper, Task, VI. 288.

Got me my glasses, Annie: thank God that I keep my eyes.

Tennyson, The Grandmother.

Alabaster glass. See alabaster. — Anaclastic glass or vinyl. See anaclastic. — Argentine, black blue, broad, bronzed glass. See the adjective. — Blair glass, or ornamental glassware made in the province of Alicante, Spain, especially that made in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. — Bohemian glass. (a) Ornamental glassware made in Bohemia, famous since the sixteenth century for the richness of the colors employed in its enamelled decoration and especially for its intaid or engraved ornament in delicate patterns. (b) Glass having a lime base instead of a lead base in this sense including nearly all the ornamental glassware, vessels, etc., of the best periods and styles, Venetian, Spanish, and others. (c) A kind of glass which is quite colorless, hard, difficultly fusible, and has been readily acted upon by chemicals than any other kind of glass. Mirrors are often made of it, and it is largely used for the manufacture of chemical apparatus. It is made from ground quartz, purified potash, and lime.

In fact Bohemian Glass. — Museum of Fine Arts, Boston.

Cameo-glass, in Rom. antiq., a kind of artistic glassware formed from glass consisting of superimposed layers of different colors, the outermost of which was cut away so as to leave a design that appears in relief upon the layer underneath as a ground. Glassware of this kind, as originally produced by hand, is extremely costly from the difficulty of the cutting, but it is now imitated with comparative ease by machinery in the ware known as cased glass. The universally admired specimens of Greek Roman cameo-glass include the famous Portland vase of the British Museum, the Antioch vase in the same collection, and a beautiful amphora in the Museo Nazionale at Naples. In all these the design is in opaque white on a ground of dark transparent blue, itself lined with opaque white. The same method was applied by the ancients to tablets or slabs, the interior lining of opaque white being sometimes omitted, and the ground being sometimes in opaque blue, purple, or brown. In rare examples several colors are introduced. — Canary glass, a bright-yellow glass colored by uranium oxid, having striking fluorescent properties. — Cased glass. See cased, v. — Cast glass. Same as plate glass. — Claude glass. See Claude Lorraine mirror, under mirror.

Colored glass, glass which is colored in the pot, whereas enamelled glass is made by firing vitrifiable colors on a transparent or other ground. Compare flashed glass.

Compressed glass, glass which is tempered by being cast or pressed in chilled molds, a process perfected by Siemens of Dresden. It has a fibrous fracture, may be bowed and polished by the wheel, and is believed to be stronger than glass tempered in oil, as in the Reagle process. E. H. Knight. — Covered or coated glass, glass prepared for stained glass work, etc., by being coated with color on one side; flashed glass. Nearly all the ruby glass used in windows, etc., is of this character. — Cryolite glass. See cryolite. — Cut glass, flint glass shaped or ornamented by cutting or grinding with polishing-wheels. The surface is commonly cut into grooves, so arranged as to leave prismatic and crystal like projections between them. The work is done by rapidly revolving wheels of stone, iron, or wood, to the periphery of which sand, emery, and polishing-powder are applied. — Devitrified glass, glass which has been exposed to a great heat and in this way rendered opaque and hard, somewhat resembling porcelain. The process involves a partial crystallization of the previously amorphous mass. — Diamond-cut glass, thick glass which has been cut into V-shaped grooves or channels crossing one another at an angle, and leaving pyramid-shaped projections: a common form of ornament on cut glass. — Diamond-molded glass, molded or cast glass made to imitate the diamond cut glass. — Doubled glass, a glass made of two or more colors superposed; flashed glass. — Enamelled glass, glass which has been decorated with vitrifiable pigments, or painted according to the enamel method. See glass-painting. — Erecting glass. Same as erector, 1 (b). — Filigrane glass. See filigrane.

Flashed glass. See flashed. — Franklin glasses, spectacles the lenses of which are divided horizontally, each having different powers above and below. — Glass-melting pot, the vessel for melting the frit in glass-factories, made of refractory clay mixed with the ground substance of old pots. — Glass of antimony, a vitreous oxid of antimony mixed with sulphur. — Glass of borax, a vitreous transparent substance obtained by exposing to heat the crystals of borate of sodium. — Glass of cobalt. See cobalt. — Granulated glass, glass the surface of which is raised in slight projections like grains of sand, used for ornamental vessels. — Ground glass, any glass that has been polished by a sand blast, by grinding, or by etching with acids, so as to break up light transmitted through it, and destroy its transparency. — Half-minute glass, a sand-glass used on shipboard to mark the time in heaving the log. See log. — Hardened glass, tempered or toughened glass. — Heavy glass, a technical name formerly given to English flint glass. — Kelp glass, glass of which the alkaline ingredient soda is furnished by kelp. This process is now almost wholly abandoned. — Kinkled glass, glass the surface of which is raised in small rounded elevations produced by blowing the glass into a mold formed of a more or less fine netting of wire. — Ladled glass. Same as cullet. — Madrepore glass, a kind of glass in which star like opaque colored patterns are crowded together in a transparent mass of glass. It is a variety of millefiori glass. See mosaic glass. — Marbled glass, a glass which, while hot has been immersed in water, then reheated and expanded by blowing. The incipient fractures become reunited, but show in the finished object like veins in marble. E. H. Knight. — Matted glass, glass ornamented by means of certain white or colored mineral powders, applied to the entire surface of the object, and then, in some cases, removed from those parts which are to appear as a dull ground. The glass is then fired, and the composition, which is very fusible, becomes fixed, the result being a bright pattern on a ground resembling ground glass. — Metallic glass, an ornamental glass with flakes of gold, mica, platinum, etc., scattered through it. — Milk-glass. Same as crystal glass. — Millefiori glass (lit. mille, a thousand, a flower), ornamental glassware made by fusing together tubes or rods of glass enamel (which see, under enamel) of different colors, or pieces of flint-glass. The fused mass is cut into sections, which appear as ornamental figures of varied design, and are embedded in white transparent glass to form paper weights and objects of like character. — Mosaic glass, glass in which a number of pieces of different colors are fused together to form one mass. This is commonly done by means of glass rods, which are laid together side-wise, and after being united in one mass can then be cut across, producing a varied pattern at each section; these compound bars can be reheated and pulled out to any degree of tenuity, retaining the pattern at the cross section on a smaller scale. Such rods are cut into slices for making millefiori glass, etc. — Muller's glass. Same as hyaline. — Multiplying glass, a toy consisting of a convex glass or lens cut with numerous facets, the effect of which is to repeat the image of the object observed as many times as there are facets. — Murano glass, glass made at Murano, near Venice. The greater part of the glass called Venetian has always been produced there, and all the modern Venetian glass-works are there.

Musical glasses. (a) A musical instrument consisting of graduated strips of glass mounted on a resonance-box, so as to be played upon by hammers. (b) A musical instrument consisting either of glass tubes or glass bowls, graduated in size, which can be played by the friction of the moistened finger. Also called glass harmonica. — Ondoyant glass (V. ondoyant, pp. of ondoyer, wave, undulate), a modern glass with an uneven waved surface, made in all tints, used in colored windows to imitate the subtle play and variation of light and color forming one of the characteristic beauties of medieval artistic glass. — Opalescent glass, glass having a changeableness of color somewhat like that of the opal, showing cloudy-blue, orange-red, and intermediate colors, according to the light in which it is viewed. — Optical glass, a flint glass used in the manufacture of optical instruments. It contains a large proportion of lead, and hence is of great density. — Painted glass, glass ornamented by painting in vitrifiable pigments or enamels: often colloquially used to include colored or stained glass, and compositions in such glass. See def. 1.

Far more important than the introduction of the painted arch was the invention of painted glass, which is really the important formative principle of Gothic architecture: as much so, that there would be more meaning in the name, if it were called the "painted glass style," instead of the painted-arch style. J. Ferguson, Hist. Arch., I. 388.

Examples of Murano (Venetian) Glass, 16th century. (From "L. Art pour Tous.")

Platinized glass, plate glass to which a thin film of platinum has been applied, transparent when held against a strong light, but capable of giving a reflection when the light is on the same side as the spectator. E. H. Knight.

— Pot-metal glass, glass which has been tinted while in a state of fusion, and is therefore colored throughout its substance. — Pressed glass, glass brought to shape in a mold by a plunger. — Retculated glass, a variety of silvered glass in which two silvered cases or hollow cylinders are used, one within the other, for a glass vessel. The threads of opaque or colored glass, being set in opposite directions, produce the appearance of a reticulation. There is usually a small air-bubble in each mesh or space between the threads. — Rice-stone glass. Same as alabaster glass. — Roller glass, an inferior quality of plate glass for which the molten material is dipped from the pot with a ladle and rolled to the proper thickness on an iron table.

— Ruby glass, glass of deep-red color. A good color is obtained by the use of copper, but the most beautiful is got by the use of gold. Ruby window glass is generally flaked, else its color would be too dark, and it would appear hardly transparent. For the windows of photographic dark-rooms the copper ruby glass is used, as the photographic chemicals are sensitive to the light transmitted by gold glass. — Silvered glass. (a) A glass prepared for mirrors, having a metallic layer applied to one side of it. See looking-glass. (b) Glass made ornamental by the application of a white metallic film to the unexposed side, giving it a silvery luster. — Soluble glass, a silicate of potash or soda made by melting silicious sand with a large proportion of alkali. The silica generally predominates. It is soluble in hot water, but is not affected by ordinary atmospheric changes, and is thus used to form a protective coating on plastered walls, etc. When used as a cement it is called mineral lime. Also called water-glass. — Spun glass, thin glass wire drawn from glass partly fused.

When done on a small scale the glass is heated by the blowpipe, but other means are used where the material is produced in quantity. — Stained glass. (a) Properly colored glass used in windows; particularly, such glass when formed into decorative windows or mosaics of transparent light. Windows representing designs in colored and enameled glass came into use early in the eleventh century, and attained perfection as compositions in gorgeous and jeweled yet harmonious color at the close of the twelfth and throughout the thirteenth century. After the thirteenth century, while much admirable work was done, the tendency asserted itself to paint pictures on the glass, following more and more closely the manner and ideas of ordinary opaque pictures, until in the course of the sixteenth century the art, having become grotesque, died out, and colored windows gave place to those of plain glass. During the present century this beautiful art has been revived, following the inverse process of its fall, so that the harsh, glaring, and perfunctory attempts of the early years of the modern medieval revival have now given place to work of real merit, in which the pictures are made to fill their true purpose of arrangements of glowing and transparent light, instead of imitating the methods of painting on an opaque surface. (b) Less properly, same as enameled glass. See glass painting. — Stopping the glass. See the extract.

During the last two or three hours the fireman in the furnace to add fuel; all the openings are shut and the furnace is allowed to assume the requisite fluidity, an operation called stopping the glass, or performing the ceremony. Enc. Dict., II. 604.

Stove-glass, sheets of mica used in the fronts of stoves, etc. — Tempered, toughened, or hardened glass. (a) Glass hardened by being plunged at a high temperature into an oblonguous bath, according to a process invented by M. de la Bastie in 1875 and following years. Such glass cannot be cut by the diamond, and will endure heavy blows and great changes of temperature, but when fractured flies into minute fragments. (b) Glass that has been heated and then suddenly cooled, under the process of F. Siemens. When the articles to be made are such as are generally molded, the molten glass is run into suitable molds and squeezed while it is highly heated, the mold cooling it sufficiently without the fluid bath. To crush a glass. See to crush a cup, under crush. To draw the glass, to perform the operation of testing the glass, after the founding and refining are finished, to determine whether it is ready for casting. It is done by plunging the end of a rod into the pot. — To get a glass in one's head, to have one's drink go to one's head, become flustered with drink.

It is common for a number of them that have got a glass in their heads to get up into some belfry and ring the bells for hours together for the sake of exercise.

Strut, Sports and Pastimes, p. 40.

Toughened glass. See tempered glass. Venetian glass, ornamental glassware made at and near Venice. See del. I. Sometimes called Murano glass, Venetian glass.

No illustrations can do justice to the endless diversities of Venetian glasses; they rival in lightness those of Greece and Rome. . . . To examine them is to imagine that the inventive faculty can go no farther. A. M. Wallace-Dunlop, Mag. of Art, March, 1904.

Venice glass. Same as Venetian glass.

Though it be said that poison will break a Venetian glass, yet have we not met with any of that nature.

See T. Browne, Vulg. Err. vii. 17.

Volcanic glass, obsidian. — Water-glass, same as soluble glass. (See also plate glass.)

II. a. [Attrib. use of the noun. The older adj. is glazen, q. v.] Made of glass; vitreous: as, a glass bottle. — Glass enamel, tear, wool, etc. See the nouns. — Glass house, a house or structure largely composed of glass: sometimes written glass-house as a name for a greenhouse. — Glass mosaic, mosaic made of small tesserae of glass, the colors being produced by glass of different colors and by various enamels, and the gold by gold leaf protected by a thin coating of clear glass, usually over an opaque vermilion ground. See mosaic. — To live in a glass house, to be in a vulnerable state or condition morally; to be open to damaging retort. In allusion to the proverb, "They who live in glass houses should not throw stones."

glass (glās), v. t. [glāss, n. The older verb is glaze, q. v.] 1. To ease in glass; cover with or as if with glass; protect by a covering of glass.

Mothought all his senses were locked in his eye As jewels in crystal for some prince to buy. Who, tending their own worth, from whence they were glaz'd, Did point out to buy them, along as you pass'd. Shak. L. L. I. i. 1

No specialized hot house treatment as if a boy were an orchid or other frail exotic to be muzzed away from the rough air of manhood. The Century, XXVII. 802.

2. To make glassy; give a glazed surface to; glaze or polish.

I have observed little grains of silver to be hid in the small cavities, perhaps glaz'd over by a vitrifying heat, in crucibles wherein silver has been long kept in fusion. Boyle.

To obtain the finish, the index are blacked on the flesh side with a preparation of soap and lamp black. . . . and again glaz'd. Harper's Mag. LV. 278.

3. To reflect, as a mirror or other reflecting surface; show or observe a reflection of.

Then take a shield I have of diamonds bright, And hold the same before the warrior's face, That he may glaze therein his garments light. Paraisot, tr. of Tasso, xiv. 77.

* Thou glorious mirror, where the Almighty's form Glasses itself in tempests.

Shak. Child Harold, IV. 183.

Here and there on a jutting point a light blossomed (its duplicate glaz'd in the water, as if the fiery flower had dropped a petal. Aldrich, Ponkapog to Feth, p. 100.

glass-argonaut (glās'ar'go-nāt), n. A heteropod of the family Eubrider (or Carnarina); so called because the shell is thin and glass-like, and shaped like that of an argonaut.

glass-blower (glās'blō'er), n. One whose business is to blow and fashion glass.

glass-blowing (glās'blō'ing), n. The process of making glassware and window-glass by taking a mass of viscid glass from the melting-pot on the end of a blowing-tube and inflating it by blowing through the tube. For common window glass the hot blown mass is extended into a long cylinder by swinging a bulb of hot glass from a bridge on which the workman stands. It is then cut open and flattened out in the flattening furnace. For fine window glass the bulb of blown glass is cut open and whirled round in the flattening furnace till it flashes or opens into a flat disk with a bull's-eye in the center. A small quantity of glass is also put into molds, and then expanded by blowing till it fills the molds. Blown glass is also cut and shaped while hot, and decorated, twisted and mottled with other pieces of glass in many different ways. The term glass blowing is also applied, though incorrectly, to the making of spun glass and flint-glass by melting and molding rod-like tubular glass in the flame of a blowpipe. Toys and ware made in this way are not properly called blown glass, but flint-glass.

glass-cavity (glās'kav'itē), n. See inclusion.

glasschord (glās'kōrd), n. A musical instrument, having a keyboard like a pianoforte, in which the tone is produced by cloth-covered hammers and bars or bowls of glass.

glass-cloth (glās'klōth), n. 1. Linen cloth usually woven with a slight open pattern of colored threads, like gingham, used originally as a towel for drying lin, porcelain, glass, etc., and now employed as a background for embroidery.

Well scrupled with glass or steel a taper afterwards with finest glass cloth. Backshop Receipts, 1800, p. 46.

2. A woven fabric made of threads of glass, which are very pliable when extremely thin. The fibers are bunched without twisting, and the stuff is woven of these bunches or groups.

glass-coach (glās'kōch), n. A coach, superior to a hackney-coach, hired for the day or any short period as a private carriage; so called because originally only private carriages had glass windows. [E. 2.]

My Lady Peterborough being in her glass-coach, with the glass up, and seeing a lady pass by in a coach whom she would salute the glass was so clear, that she thought it had been open and so she put her head through the glass. Pepys, Diary, III. 24.

I have been to Holland House. I took a glass-coach, and arrived through the avenue of elms, at the great entrance toward seven o'clock.

Maryland, Life and Letters, I. 161.

glass-crab (glās'krab), n. A crab of the spurious genus Phyllonoma, or of the spurious order Phyllonoma—that is, any young shrimp of either of the families Palinuridae and Nejllardidae.

Glass-crab, larva of Phyllonoma.

These larvae are as thin as paper, flat and transparent, and have no resemblance to the adult.

glass-cutter (glās'kut'er), n. 1. One whose occupation is the cutting of glass, or the grinding of it into various ornamental forms. — 2. That which cuts or is used for cutting glass.

glass-cutting (glās'kut'ing), n. The art of ornamenting the surface of glass vessels or ware by grinding it. The first or rough grinding is done with an iron wheel with sand and water, fine grinding with fine stone wheels and finishing and polishing with wooden, cork, or brush wheels or wheels covered with leather, India rubber, or cloth, charged with emery powder, pumice stone powder, putty powder, rouge, or other polishing material. Only flat glass is used, and ware so treated is called cut glass. Glass is also said to be cut when treated by the sand blast, whenever the work is more than a simple depolishing of the surface. See sand-blast.

glass-dust (glās'dust), n. Glass more or less finely powdered, used in the arts for grinding and polishing, and especially for the manufacture of glass-paper (which see). It is imported into the United States from those countries where glass is made in quantity, as Bohemia, and where refuse pieces are utilized in this way.

glassent (glās'n), a. [glāss, n., + -ent]. The older form is glazen, q. v. Glassy; glaz'd.

Buy a loaf of wace;
Do shape it bairn and bairnly like,
And in it I can glazen can you it put.
Walter Ladsay Child's Ballads, I. 165.

He that no more for age, cramps, palfies, can Now use the bow, we see doth hire a man
To take the bow up for him, and palfies
The dice with glazen eyes to the glad view Of what he throws. B. Jonson, Epistle to a Friend.

glass-engraving (glās'on-grā'ving), n. The art of decorating glass by grinding and depolishing; glass cutting.

Glasserian, a. See Glossarian.

glass-eye (glās'ī), n. 1. A popular name of a Jamaican thrush, Turdus jamaicensis; so called from the whitish iris. — 2. A local name of the wall-eyed pike of the United States, Stizostedion vitreum, a pike-perch of the family Perca.

glass-eyed (glās'id), a. Having a white eye, or one which in some other respect, as texture or fixedness, is likened to glass or to a glass eye; wall-eyed; goggle-eyed.

glass-faced (glās'fāst), a. Having a face of glass, or like a glass or mirror.

From the glass-faced flatterer
To Apemantus that few things loves better Than to abuse himself. Shak., T. of A., I. 1.

glassful¹ (glās'fūl), a. [Irreg. glāss + -ful, l.] Glassy; shining like glass.

All the stings,
All the value fume, of all those snakes that ringes,
Minerva glassful shield can never faint.
Marston, The Fawn, Epit.

glassful² (glās'fūl), n. [glāss + -ful, 2.] As much as a glass holds.

"Ale, Squerer?" Inquired the lady. "Certainly," said Squerer. . . . "a glassful."
Dickens, Nicholas Nickleby, vii.

glass-furnace (glās'fēr-nās), n. In glass-making, a furnace in which the ingredients are fused together; in a process in which frit is used, the second or refining furnace, in which the frit is reheated and made ready for working. The regenerative system has been applied to such furnaces and gas-improvement. In the Siemens form the furnace itself forms a melting and refining tank, in which the glass is made continuously, without the aid of independent glass pots. See regenerative furnace.

glass-gall (glās'gāl), n. See madraff, 1.

glass-gazing (glās'gā'zing), a. Addicted to staring one's self in a glass or mirror.

A . . . whoremaster, glass-gazer, supererogator, critical rascal.
Shak., Lear, II. 2.

glass-glazed (glās'glāzd), a. Covered with or as if with glass. Glass-glazed ware. (a) A ceramic ware whose surface is covered with a glass of pure glass without lead. See glaze. (b) Ware whose glass has definite thickness and forms a vitreous envelop, as distinguished from those glazes which have no perceptible thickness and serve a mere polishing of the surface.

Example of Modern Venetian glass, with spray of flowers in color on a transparent body.

glass-grinder (glás'grín'dér), n. One whose occupation is the grinding and polishing of glass.
glass-grinding (glás'grín'ding), n. The process of grinding glass as a preparation for polishing it, or for the production of ground glass.
glass-hard (glás'hárd), a. Hard as glass.

Two similar rods of steel, 1.500 in. in diameter and 600 in. long, tempered glass hard, one inserted in each spiral.
Amer. Jour. Sci., 3d ser., XXXI, 257.

glass-house (glás'hóus), n. 1. A house where glass is made; a manufactory of glass.— 2. A greenhouse, as being glazed or covered in with glass. See glass house, under glass, a.— 3. A room with a glass roof, in which the best arrangements of light and shade can be produced for photographing purposes.

By looking at some point on the camera, which is situated in the darkest part of the glass house, the eyes will be able to remain quite at ease. Admiral Sunbeam, p. 43.

glassily (glás'í-lí), adv. In a glassy manner; in such a way as to resemble glass.

glassin, n. See glassian.

glassiness (glás'í-nés), n. [< glassy + -ness.] The quality of being glassy; a vitreous appearance.

The glassiness (if I may be allowed the expression) of the surface throws, in my opinion, a false light on some parts of the picture. Smollett, France and Italy, xxxi.

glassing (glás'ing), n. [Verbal n. of glass, v.] A method of finishing or dressing leather by rubbing it with a slicker or glassing jack.

glassing-jack (glás'ing-ják), n. A machine for polishing and smoothing leather by means of a slicker of plate-glass.

glassing-machine (glás'ing-má-shén'), n. Same as glassing-jack.

The glassing machine . . . was invented in 1871 and further improved in 1875 by John P. Friend, and is adapted for work on all kinds of upper leather, sheep, goat, and Morocco. C. P. Davis, Leather, p. 108.

Glassite (glás'ít), n. [< Glass (see def.) + -ite.] The Sec. name Glass is prob. < Gael. glas, gray; see glas.] A member of a religious sect in Scotland, founded by John Glass (1693-1773). See Sandemanian.

glass-maker (glás'má-kér), n. A maker of glass. Glass-makers' chair, a bench having two arms of iron projecting horizontally far in front of the workman when seated. On these arms he holds the pontil, while fashioning the vessel at the extremity of it by means of instruments held in his right hand. E. H. Knight. Glass-makers' soap. See glass-soap.

glass-making (glás'má-king), n. The making of glass or glassware. The process of making glass consists essentially of the fusing together in a glass furnace, usually in a fire clay melting pot or crucible, of the ingredients, after mixing them well, and the subsequent treatment of the molten mass or metal in accordance with the quality of the product or the use which it is to serve. After vitrification is complete and the mass of impurities or glass scale which rises to the surface has been removed, the temperature of the furnace, which may have reached from 10,000° to 12,000° F., is considerably reduced, so as to bring the fluid and limpid metal into a condition of viscosity, rendering it capable of being worked. The working, by which means the glass is made to assume its definitive form, is in general performed by blowing (see glass blowing), casting, or pressing in molds. See flat glass, glass cutting, glass furnace, plate glass.

glassman (glás'mán), n.; pl. glassmen (-mən). One who makes or sells glass; also, one who inserts window-glass in sashes; a glazier.

Where have you greater athletes than your cooks?
Or more profane, or choleric, than your glassmen?
B. Jonson, Alchemist, III, 1.

glass-metal (glás'met'al), n. The fused and refined material of which glass is made.

Let proof be made of the incorporating of copper or brass with glassmetal. Bacon, Physical Maxims.

glass-mounter (glás'móun'tér), n. One who embellishes glass articles with ornaments.

glassock (glás'ók), n. [< f. the equiv. glassan, glassan, glassan; prob. < Ir. Gael. glas, gray, pale, wan (see glas); cf. Gael. glasg, a water-wagtail, the female of the salmon, glas-tasg, gray fish, such as cod, ling, haddock.] The coalfish. [Local, Eng.] glass-oven (glás'uv'n), n. A hot chamber in which newly made glass in sheets or ware is gradually cooled; a glass-annealing furnace; a lehr.

glass-painter (glás'pán'tér), n. One who produces designs in color on or in glass.

glass-painting (glás'pán'ting), n. 1. The art or practice of producing designs in color on or in glass. In glass painting or glass-staining, as it is also called, two methods are chiefly employed: (a) the enamel method, consisting in painting on the glass in colors, which are then burned into it, (b) the mosaic method, consisting in forming a design of separate pieces of stained or colored glass set in causes of lead and brazed and supported by a framework of iron bars, the color being imparted to the glass in the making. By this latter method were made the splendid medieval windows of the thirteenth century, the beautiful color-effects of which have thus far defied imitation in spite of modern perfected methods. These admirable color-effects are now recognized to be due not only to perfection of the colors used, and to their judicious juxtaposition and skilful combination with white glass to relieve them and hinder where desirable the blending of contiguous tints, but to unevenness of tone and thickness of the glass primarily due to imperfect processes of manufacture. This last quality is now imitated with artistic success, such glass in general being made by hand, as ordinary machine made glass is necessarily of even thickness and shade. A combination of the enamel and mosaic methods, known as the mosaic-enamel method, in which part of the design is in mosaic and part in enamel, is now commonly used.

2. A painting upon glass; a surface of glass decorated in color by the use of stained glass or painting, or both.

glass-paper (glás'pá'pér), n. A fine kind of sandpaper made with powdered glass.

glass-paper (glás'pá'pér), v. t. To polish by rubbing with glass-paper.

When the first coating of varnish is perfectly dry, glass-paper the whole surface, and make it smooth as before. Workshop Receipts, 1st ser., p. 84.

glass-pot (glás'pót), n. A vessel or crucible used for fusing the materials of glass in a glass-furnace. Glass pots are made of the most refractory earths or fire clays by a tedious process, to insure the perfect uniformity and dryness necessary to enable them to resist the great heat of the furnace, and they constitute one of the chief elements in the cost of glass. The glass pots for lead glass (flint glass and striae) are covered, and have an opening at the side, for all other kinds of glass they are open, with sloping sides, like pails without handles.

glass-press (glás'préss), n. A press for compressing glass after it has been placed in a mold. It is a plunger which may be brought down upon the open top of the mold placed beneath it, the mold being firmly held in place while the pressure is applied.

glass-rope (glás'róp), n. The stem of a glass-sponge, see Hyalonema.

glass-shell (glás'shél), n. A pteropod of the family Hyalidae; so called from the thin hyaline shell.

glass-shrimp (glás'shrimp), n. The larva of stomatopodous crustaceans, as that of Squilla or Gonodactylus, in certain stages of development which have occasioned the spurious genera Alima and Erechthus. See Stomatopoda.

glass-silvering (glás'sil-ver-ing), n. The art of covering glass with a metallic film which will serve as a reflecting surface, as for a reflector or looking-glass. In one method a sheet of tin foil is laid upon a marble table and painted with mercury till an amalgam is formed. More mercury is added to form a shallow pool, and upon this the sheet of glass is laid and pressed down to drive out bubbles. A thin film of amalgam clings to the glass and forms the silver like mirror. In another method a bath consisting in part of silver nitrate is employed, which forms an adherent film of silver on the glass. The second process is used in all varying hollow and convex glassware.

glass-snail (glás'snail), n. A snail of the genus Etrina; so called from its pellucid vitreous shell.

glass-snake (glás'snak), n. 1. A large limbless lizard, Ophiosaurus centralis, abundant in the southern United States; so called from its Glass-snake (Ophiosaurus centralis).

general resemblance to a snake and the extreme fragility of its tail. The tail grows again, to some extent, after being broken off; it is about twice as long as the body. The animal attains a length of some 2 feet, and is of a greenish color above, marked with black, and pale yellowish below. Though destitute of feet, it makes its way along very well by wriggling like a snake. It is harmless. Also called joint snake.

2. A lizard of the genus Pseudopus, as P. palasii, inhabiting Europe and Asia. P. praeclarus of India is the Khaava glass-snake, without even the rudiments of limbs.

glass-soap (glás'sóp), n. Peroxid of manganese, used to remove from glass the green color caused by the presence of iron. E. H. Knight. Also called glass-makers' soap.

glass-soldering (glás'sól'dér-ing), n. The art of uniting pieces of glass by partly fusing the surfaces to be applied to one another. Also called glass-welding.

glass-spinning (glás'spín'ing), n. The art of drawing out fine filaments or threads of hot glass to make spun glass.

glass-sponge (glás'spunj), n. A species of silicious sponge, Hyalonema sieboldi, found in Japan. It consists of a cup-shaped spongy body supported by a number of twisted, glass-like, silicious fibers, which are sunk in the mud of the sea-bottom. The term is extended to several similar or related silicious sponges whose framework resembles spun glass, as Venus's flower-basket. See cut under Euplectella.

The naturalist finds at E-no-shima the well-known glass-sponge (Hyalonema sieboldi) . . . offered for sale. J. J. Rein, Japan, p. 488.

glass-stainer (glás'stá'nér), n. 1. A maker of stained glass.— 2. A glass-painter.

glass-staining (glás'stá'ning), n. The process of coloring glass during its manufacture, especially for the production of the glass used for colored or painted windows, or glass-painting.

glass-tinner (glás'tín'ér), n. A workman who applies the foil to the back of the glass in making mirrors.

The glass tinner, standing towards one angle of his table, sweeps and wipes its surface with the greatest care, along the whole surface to be occupied by the mirror-plate. Enc. Brit., III, 364.

glass-tongs (glás'tóngz), n. pl. In glass-making, an instrument for grasping hot bottles, etc.

glassware (glás'wār), n. Articles or utensils made of glass.

glass-welding (glás'wel'ding), n. Same as glass-soldering.

glass-work (glás'wérk), n. 1. The manufacture of articles of glass, glass for windows, and the like.— 2. The objects produced in a glass-factory, especially vessels and utensils made of glass.

glass-worker (glás'wér'kér), n. One who works in glass; one engaged in any capacity in the manufacture of glass.

It must be left to practical glass-workers to determine whether a spiral form is the best for the tube. Enc. Brit., IV, 91.

glass-works (glás'wérks), n. pl. and sing. An establishment where glass is made; a manufactory of glass; a glass-house.

glass-worm (glás'wórm), n. A glow-worm. Also glaze-worm.

glasswort (glás'wért), n. A plant of the chenopodiaceous genus Salicornia, succulent saline plants with leafless jointed stems and containing a large proportion of soda. Great quantities of the ashes of these and allied plants were formerly used, under the name of barilla, in the manufacture of glass and soap. Also called marsh-sampshire.— Prickly glasswort, the saltwort, Salicornia Kuh.

glassy (glás'í), a. [< ME. glassy; < glass, n., + -y.] 1. Resembling or of the nature of glass; vitreous; as, a glassy substance.

Another heaven
From heaven gate not far, founded in view Of the clear hyaline, the glassy sea.
Milton, P. L., vii, 612.

2. Resembling glass in some quality, as smoothness, brittleness, transparency, or power of reflecting; hence, as applied to the eye or glance, having a fixed, unintelligent stare, as in idleness, stupidity, spasms, terror, insanity, or death.

There is a willow grows aslant a brook,
That shows his bare leaves in the glassy stream.
Shak.; Hamlet, iv, 7.

Death stood all fixed in his glassy eye;
His hands were withered and his veins were dry.
Byron, Saul.

In one long, glassy, spectral stare,
The enlarging eye is fastened there.
Whittier, Mogg Megone, l.

Glassy cutworm, the larva of Hadena demotatrix, a noctuid moth.— Glassy field-spar. See orthoceras.

glauiberite (glá'ber-ít), n. [Named after Johann Rudolf Glauber, a German alchemist (1604-68).] A mineral of a grayish-white or yellowish color, a compound of the sulphates of sodium and calcium, occurring in very flat oblique rhombic prisms. It is found chiefly in rock-salt.

Glauber salt. See salt.

glaucescence (glá'ses'ens), n. [= F. glaucescence; as glaucescent (t) + -re.] The state of being glaucescent, or of having a somewhat sea-green luster.

Destitute of glaucescence or bloom.
Gardener's Assistant.

glaucouscent (glá-ses'ant), a. [= F. glaucouscent = Sp. glaucouscent, < NL. glaucouscent (-s) (in some specific names); as glaucous + -cent.] Becoming glaucous; somewhat or faintly glaucous. Also glaucine.

glaucic (glá'sik), a. [= F. glaucique; as glaucous + -ic.] Of or pertaining to plants of the genus Glaucium. — Glaucic acid, a name formerly applied to an acid obtained from Glaucium luteum, now known to be fumaric acid.

glaucid (glá'sid), n. A gastropod of the family Glaucidae.

Glaucids (glá'si-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Glaucus + -ids.] A family of polybranchiate nudibranchiate gastropods, typified by the genus Glaucus. They have the body extended laterally into lobes terminating in linear appendages, the mouth armed with jaws, and the radula with uniserial teeth. The species chiefly harbor in floating algae in the high seas.

Glaucidium (glá'sid'i-um), n. [NL. (Boie, 1836), < Gr. γλαυδών (dim. of γλαυκός, a fish), taken as dim. of γλαυξ (glauks), an owl.] A genus of very small owls without plumbeous, with the facial disk imperfect, the tarsus feathered, the wings short, and the tail moderately long; the glaucis-owls. The type is the pygmy or sparrow owl, G. passerinum, of Europe, to which the glaucis-owl of California, G. gnoma, is closely related. Another species of the United States is G. ternstroemii, and there are several more in the warmer parts of America as the Cuban G. roosei. These little owls, like species of Scops, exhibit dichromatism, having in different cases a red and a gray phase of plumage. Also called Phalaenoptilus and Microphallus.

glaucine (glá'sin), a. [L., glaucus, glaucous, + -ine.] Same as glaucouscent.

Glaucion (glá'si-on), n. [L.; see Glaucium.] 1. In ornith.: (a) Same as Glaucium. 2. Knapp, 1820. (b) [L. c.] The specific name of the golden-eyed duck, Clangula clangula. — 2. In conch., a genus of mollusks. Oken, 1815.

Glaucium (glá'si-um), n. [NL. Cf. L. glaucum, oelandine, < Gr. γλαυκός, the juice of a plant like the horned poppy, G. corniculatum, < γλαυκός, bluish-green or gray; see glaucous.] 1. A genus of papaveraceous herbs, with poppy-like flowers, glaucous foliage, and an acid copper-colored juice. There are 3 or 4 species, natives of Europe, of which G. luteum, the yellow horn poppy, is sparingly naturalized in the United States. They are sometimes cultivated for ornament. 2. A genus of ducks, of the subfamily Fuliginae; the glaucis; now usually referred to Clangula. Brisson, 1760. Also Glaucion.

glaucodot (glá'kō-dot), n. [Gr. γλαυκός, bluish-green or gray, + δοτός, verbal adj. of δοῦναι, give; see dot.] A mineral related to arsenopyrite or mispickel. It occurs in orthorhombic crystals of a tin-white color and metallic luster, and consists of arsenic, sulphur, cobalt, and iron.

glaucogonidium (glá'kō-gō-nid'i-um), n. [Gr. γλαυκός, bluish-green or gray, + NL. gonidium.] In lichenology, same as gonidium.

glaucolite (glá'kō-lit), n. [Gr. γλαυκός, bluish-green or gray, + λίθος, a stone.] In mineral., a greenish-blue variety of scapolite.

glaucoma (glá'kō-mā), n. [L., glaucoma, < Gr. γλαυκωπά, opacity of the crystalline lens, so called from the dull-gray appearance of the eye so affected. Cf. γλαυκός, bluish-green or gray; see glaucous.] 1. In pathol., a condition of increased tension or fluid-pressure within the eyeball, with progressive diminution of clearness of vision, and an excavation of the papilla of the optic nerve, resulting (unless properly treated) in blindness. Also called glaucoma. — 2. [cop.] [NL. (Ehrenberg).] A genus of ciliate infusorians, of the group Colpodina. G. acinellus is an example.

glaucomatous (glá-kom'a-tus), a. [Gr. glaucoma (-s) + -ous.] Of, pertaining to, or having the nature of glaucoma; affected with glaucoma.

The glaucomatous eye. Allen and Neurol., VIII, 139.

Glaucomya (glá-kō'mi-g), n. [NL., < Gr. γλαυκός, bluish-green or gray, + mys, a mussel.] A genus of bivalves with a sea-green epidermis, as G. cuneata, typical of the family Glaucomyidae; formerly called Glaucome, a name preoccupied for a genus of corals. Also Glaucomya.

glaucomyid (glá-kō'mi-id), n. A bivalve mollusk of the family Glaucomyidae.

Glaucomyids (glá-kō'mi-idē), n. pl. [NL., < Glaucomya + -ids.] A family of siphonate bivalve mollusks, typified by the genus Glaucomya. The siphons are very long and united nearly to the end, which is fringed, and the foot is large and lingual form; the shell is oblong and covered with green epidermis, the ligament is external, and each valve has three teeth, or the left one only two. They are mostly inhabitants of the Indian seas and mouths of rivers.

Right Valve of Glaucomya cuneata

glauciferous (glá-kō-nif'e-rus), a. [Gr. γλαυκός (glauk) + L. ferre = F. bear.] Same as glaucouscent. Geol. Jour., IV, 98.

glaucite (glá'kō-nit), n. [Gr. γλαυκός, bluish-green or gray, + -ite (a more insertion) + -ite.] A mineral which essentially is a hydrous silicate of iron and potassium. It is the green earth of the cavities of cuprite rocks, or the substance which gives the color to the grains of green sand and chalk.

glaucitic (glá-kō-nit'ik), a. [Gr. γλαυκός + -itic.] Containing or resembling glauconite; as, a glaucitic marl; glaucitic sands and clays. Also glauciferous.

Glaucome (glá-kō'mō-mē), n. [NL., < Gr. γλαυκωμή, the name of a Nereid, < γλαυκός (see thalassa), the blue sea (< γλαυκός, bluish-green or gray), + μήνη, dwell in.] 1. A genus of coral polyps. Goldfuss, 1826. — 2. A genus of siphonate bivalve mollusks, now called Glaucomya. Gray, 1828. — 3. A genus of crustaceans. Kroyer, 1845.

glaucophane (glá'kō-fān), n. [Gr. γλαυκός, bluish green or gray, + φάνη, in comp., show, conspicuous, manifest, < φαίνω, appear, shine.] A bluish or bluish-black mineral belonging to the amphibole or hornblend family, containing 7 per cent. of soda. It is a characteristic constituent of certain crystalline schists.

glaucopirine (glá-kō-pi-rin), n. [Gr. γλαυκός + Gr. πύρις, sharp, bitter.] A crystalline alkaloid contained in the root of Glaucium luteum.

Glaucopis (glá-kō-pis), n. pl. [NL., < Glaucops + -is.] A New Zealand and Australian subfamily of Corvidae, typified by the genus Glaucops; the wattle-crows. Sutton, 1837.

Glaucopsis (glá-kō'pis), n. [NL., < Gr. γλαυκός, with gleaming or piercing eyes, or with gray eyes (an epithet of Pallas, < γλαυκός, gleaming, bluish-green or gray, + ὤψ, eye.)] 1. A genus of New Zealand wattle-crows, such as G. cinerea, the kokako; same as Glaucops. J. F. Gmelin, 1799. Also written Glaucopsis. Fleming, 1822. — 2. A genus of lepidopterous insects. Fabricius, 1808.

glaucopyrite (glá-kō-pi-rīt), n. [Gr. γλαυκός, bluish-green or gray, + πύρις, pyrites.] A variety of lollingite or arsenical iron, containing a little sulphur and antimony.

glaucosis (glá-kō'sis), n. [NL., < Gr. γλαυκός, bluish-green or gray, + -osis.] Same as glaucoma, 1.

glaucous (glá'kus), a. [= F. glauque = Sp. Pg. It. glauco, < L. glaucus, < Gr. γλαυκός, gleaming, silvery; of color, bluish-green or gray; esp. of the eyes, light-blue or gray (L. catus; see catus), the lightest shade of eyes known to the Greeks. Cf. glauz.] Of a pale, luminous sea-green color; of a bluish green or greenish blue; specifically, in bot. and zool., dull-green passing into grayish blue.

Leafhopper depicted under the glaucous variety of old bean.

Shelley, Prometheus Unbound, II, 1.

Its waters are of a lovely bluish green or glaucous color.

Thoreau, Walden, p. 214.

Glaucus (glá'kus), n. [NL., < L. glaucus, < Gr. γλαυκός, a fish of gray color, < γλαυκός, bluish-green or gray; see glaucous.] 1. In ichth., a genus of fishes. Alein, 1744. — 2. In conch., a genus of nudibranchiate gastropods, typical of the family Glaucidae, of slender elongate form, with four tentacles. There are 2 species found in the warmer latitudes floating in the open sea, and remarkable for their beautiful azure-blue and silvery tints. G. atlanticus is very abundant in the Atlantic, living on floating algae. They are popularly called sea-slugs. Eucharis is a synonym. Poh, 1706.

New Zealand Glaucus atlanticus

3. In ornith.: (a) [L. c.] The specific name of the burgomaster-gull, Larus glaucus. (b) A genus comprising the section of the genus Larus represented by the burgomaster. Bruch, 1853.

glaudkin, glaudynt, n. An outer garment, supposed to be a species of gown, worn in the time of Henry VIII.

glau (glām), v. t. [Sc., also glauip, glamp; origin obscure.] To grope or feel with the hands, as in the dark. To glau at, to grasp at; attempt to seize.

My heart, for fear, was rough for rough,
To hear the thuds, and see the clods
Of clans trace woods in tartan duds,
When glau'd at kingdoms three, man.

Burns, Battle of Shorrib Muir.

glaur (glār), n. A Scotch form of glair.

glaur (glār), v. t. [Gr. glaur, a.] To bewilder; make slippery.

Glaux (glaks), n. [NL., < L. glaux, < Gr. γλαυξ, now read γλαυξ, the milk-vetch. The Gr. γλαυξ, Attic γλαυξ, prop. means an owl, so called f. m. its glaring eyes; see glaucous.]

A pruinaceous genus of plants, consisting of a single species, G. maritima, known as sea-milkwort or black saltwort. It is a low, fleshy perennial herb, with opposite leaves and small purplish white flowers in the axils, and is found in salt marshes and other saline localities in Europe, Asia, and North America.

Flowering branch of Glaux maritima glave, glave (glav), n.

[Formerly also glave; < ME. glave, glayre, glave, glayr, a lance or spear (not a sword) (cf. MLG. glere, glieve, glerving, the point of a lance, a lance, = MLG. glavin, glavin, gläfen, = Old Dan. glaven, a spear, lance, Dan. glärd, a sword), < OF. glave, glave, glave, a lance or spear, also a sword, = Fr. glay, glay, glav, glay = Pg. It. gladio, < L. gladius, a sword. Cf. Ir. claidheamh, a sword; see claymore.] 1. A lance or spear. In the fourteenth century the lance was often shortened, for use by a dismounted man at arms.

They . . . whet their lances as sharp as sword or pike, Court of Love, I, 544.

A heavy case
When force to force is knelt, and sword and gleave
In civil broil make kin and countryman
Slaughter the myself in others.

Marlowe (and Shakespeare), Edw., III.

Cast your eyes on the glave ye run at, or glave ye will lose the game.

J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1863), II, 48.

2. A sword; a broadsword; a falchion. [Obsolete or archaic.]

Achilles passing through the Phrygian glaves,
And Orpheus, daring to provoke the yin
Of damned fiends, to get his love retype.

Spenser, In Honour of Love, I, 333.

What iron instrument said the advocate, if possibly might be a spele. No, sir, said the countryman, it was a glave, being unwilling to use the name of sword or whittle.

Comical Hist. of France.

His men at arms, with glaves and spears brought up the battle's glittering rear.

Scott, I. of L. M., IV, 10.

3. A weapon like the halberd, having a long cutting blade with a sharp point fixed upon a staff; sometimes called a Welsh glave, from its supposed origin.

With bills and dows from prison was I led.

Churchyard, Challenge, p. 44.

When yeal will agd, lute and glaves
Case of lute, lute and white staves

Southey, Hudibras, III, II, 543.

4. A slipper. Hallwell, [Prov. Eng.]

glaved, glaved (glavd), a. [Gr. glave, glatre, + -ed.] Armed with a glave; armed.

Then Wallace . . .

Must ride again on his bloodied hand

To smite the slavers from his native land.

J. Halliwell, Wallace, lxi.

glaver (glav'er), v. [F. dial., also glaffer, Sc. glabbar, glabber; < ME. glaveren, talk idly, flatter, appar. < W. glafu, flatter. Cf. Guol. glafu, a babbling.] 1. Intrans. 1. To talk idly; babble; chatter.

How many, cleft philosophies, glaveren dyversely.
Wright, Select Works (ed. Arnold), I, 181.
 Sicke glaverende games graves me bot lyttile!
Mute Artike (C. E. T. S.), I, 253a.

2. To use flattery; speak wheedlingly.

That wicked folk witten in truth,
 And biggleth hem of her good with glaveren wordes Piers Plowman's Creed (C. E. T. S.), I, 51.
 O glaveren flatterer!
 How potent art thou!
Marlowe, What you Will, II, 1.
 Give him warning, admonition, to forsake his soney glaveren grace, and his gogly eye.
B. Jonson, Poetaster, III, 1.
 Fielding writes that he never knew a person with a stately glaveren smile, but he found him a rogue.
Goldsmith, Animated Nature, II, 64.

II. trans. To flatter; wheedle.

Bears not a flattery tongue to glaver me Shakespeare, Shepherd's Play, act. II, 4.
 [Now only prov. Eng.]
glaverer (glav'ér-er), n. A flatterer.
 Thou glaverer, come, myself to eat I bid,
 And, doubting nothing, soundly fall asleep.
Mir for Mir, p. 407.

glaynt, glaymoust. See glaim, glaimous.

glaymore (glá'mor), n. A form of claymore, probably used by mistake in the following passage:

Their arms were anciently the glaymore, or great two-handed sword, and afterwards the two edged sword and target.
Johnson, Jour. to Western Isles.

glaze (glaz), v.; prot. and pp. glazed, ppr. glazing. [ME. glazen, furnish with glass, cause to shine (= MHd. glazen, G. ver glazen, glaze, = leel, glasa, cause to shine), cf. glas, glass; see glass, n. (cf. glass, v.)] I. trans. 1. To place or fasten glass in; furnish or set with glass, as a window, case, frame, or the like; cover with glass, as a picture.

With glass
 Were all the windowes wel glazed Chaucer, Death of Blanche, l. 323.
 Bothe windowes and woues [walls] Ich wolde a-mouen and glaze.
Piers Plowman (C), IV, 65.
 Let there be two delicate or rich cabinets, daintily paved, richly hangod, hand-glazed with crystalline glass Bacon, Building (ed. 1887).

In England, we have not, as far as I am aware, any instance of a glazed triforium.
J. Ferguson, Hist. Arch., I, 350.

2. To cover, incrust, or overlay with something resembling glass in appearance or effect; cover with a shining vitreous or glairy substance; hence, to make glossy or glass like in appearance; as, to glaze earthenware; to glaze pastry, cloth, or paper.

For sorrow's eye, glazed with blinding tears,
 Divides one thing entire to many objects.
Shak., Rich. II, II, 2.

An old gentlewoman's glazed face in a new perwig
Middleton, Family of Love, II, 2.
 What a hard glazed hat as a sympathetic person's head might ache at the sight of—Dickens, Dombey and Son, IV.
 What is this? his eyes are heavy. Think not they are glazed with wine.
Tennyson, Locksley Hall.

3. Specifically, in oil-painting, to cover, as a picture or parts of a picture, with a thin coat of transparent color to modify the tone.

Richly lusted, the drapery of Abraham being grounded in a full mass of ruby, glazed over blue outline and shading.
Cat. Burlington Coll., p. 19.

4. To cause to shine; polish.

Glaze, or make a thing to shine; peritudo, polio Promptuary, p. 197.

glazed iron, pig iron containing a large amount—sometimes as much as 6 or 7 per cent.—of silicon. Such iron is very brittle in the process of casting, and unmanageable in the puddling furnace or the refinery. Also called glazy iron.—Glazed pottery, pottery the paste or body of which is covered with a vitreous material called glaze.
 (See glaze, n., 1.) This glaze is sometimes applied to the surface by dipping or otherwise; but the common salt glaze is produced by throwing salt into the hot kiln when the firing is nearly complete. To glaze one's hood; or houset, to hoodwink; beguile; deceive.

But wala-way! at this nat but a mare,
 Fortune has house extended bet to glaze.
Chaucer, Troilus, v, 369.

II. intrans. 1. To shine; be brilliant.

Let's ever gabbling glide & goon
 Away, whether it wale glaze or glent Humans to Eternity, etc. (C. E. T. S.), p. 100.

2. To assume a dim glassy luster; become overspread with a semi-transparent film.

A light on Marmion's visage spread,
 And fired his azure eye.
Scott, Marmion, vi, 37.

glaze (glaz), n. [cf. glaze, v.] 1. A vitrifiable substance applied to the surface of fine pottery, stoneware, and porcelain. It is either a substance which can be applied directly to the biscuit in liquid form, or one, as common salt, the vapors of which, when it is placed in the furnace with the ware, will affect the surface of the latter in the manner desired. Porcelain glaze is an example of the first kind, and is a sort of translucent glass which combines with the paste sufficiently to form a perfect union with it, but retains a slight thickness through which the paste is seen. Salt glaze is the commonest instance of the second variety. Also called cover, covering, glazing.

Great confusion has been caused in various works on pottery by a careless use of the terms glaze and "enamel"; they are both of the nature of glass, but the best distinction to make is to apply the word "enamel" to a vitreous coating that is opaque, and the word glaze to one that is transparent, both may be coloured.
Eng. Brit., XIX, 201.

2. A bright polish or glazed appearance on any surface.

Blacklead (graphite) is placed in the churns with the common powder to give a fine glaze in a short time, but this practice is detrimental to the quality of the powder, causing the gun barrel to load much quicker and leaving a greater residue.
W. W. Greener, The Gun, p. 334.

3. In oil-painting, a thin layer of transparent color spread over a painted surface.—Aventurin glaze. See aventurin. Lustrous glaze, a name given to the extremely thin glaze of certain kinds of pottery, especially Greek, Egyptian, etc., the exact composition of which is imperfectly known. This glaze is not generally very brilliant, although it varies in different pieces, but its slight gloss is almost indestructible, and was of importance in making the vessels water-tight. Marbled glaze, a glaze for pottery colored with hues mingled in imitation of the veining of marble. Varnished glaze, the glaze or enamel of pottery when applied in considerable thickness, as in most of the fine potteries of modern Europe.

glazen (gláz'n), v. [Early mod. E. glazen (also glusen, q. v.); cf. ME. glazen, cf. AS. glazen (= OHG. glasan, MHG. glazan, G. glazen), of glass, cf. glas, glass, + -en. cf. brazen.] Of or resembling glass.

Wright, Rev. xv, 2 (Oxf.) Contre fenestre [E.], a wooden window (on the outside of a glazen one).
Cutgrave.

He did him to the market place,
 And there he bought a load o' wax,
 He shaped it baldin and baldinly hie,
 And in two glazen came put Willie's Lady (Child's Ballads), I, 100.

glazer (gláz'ér), n. One who or that which glazes. Specifically (a) A workman who applies the vitreous incrustation to the surface of earthenware. (b)
 A roll for calendering cloth or paper. (c) A wooden wheel used by cutlers and lapidaries for grinding and finishing.
 It is faced with leather, or with an alloy of lead and tin, and is employed with emery powder or other polishing material. Sometimes it is faced without facing. Also called glazina wheel.

glaze-wheel (gláz'hwél), n. A wooden wheel used by cutlers for putting a final polish on the metallic surface of their wares; a glazer.

Wheels of wood, or glaze wheels
O. Byrne, Artisan's Handbook, p. 414.

glaze-worm, n. Same as glass-worm.

Do not thou not know that a perfect friend should be like the glaze-worm, which shineth most bright in the darkest?
Love Epithes, sig. 14.

glazier (gláz'zhér), n. [cf. ME. glaziere, glazure,
cf. glaze, glass, + -er. cf. brazen, glazer.] 1.
 One who fits window-glass to sash and picture-frames.—2. One who applies the vitreous glaze to pottery.—3. pl. Fyres. [Old slang.]

Tout out with your glaziers! I swear by the ruffin,
 That we are assaulted by a queer raffin.
B. Jonson, Jovial Crew, II.

These glaziers of mine, mine eyes
Middleton and Dekker, Raring Girl, v, 1.

Gladder than glee-man that gold hath to gyfte.

Piers Plowman (C), xli. 104.

The gleemen added mimicry, and other means of promoting mirth, to their profession, as well as dancing and tumbling, with sleights of hand, and variety of deceptions to amuse the spectators

Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 251.

The visits of the gleeman and the juggler, or "tumbler," were welcome breaks in the monotony of the theatrical life. It is hard not to look kindly at the gleeman, for he no doubt did much to preserve the older poetry which even now was ebbing away

J. R. Green, Conq. of Eng., p. 324.

No rude shows of a theatrical kind, no minstrel, with his harp and legendary ballad, nor gleeman, with an ape dancing to his music.

Northorn, Scottish Letter, p. 270.

You see, at the court of the Great Khan there was a great number of gleemen and jugglers

Polo, tr. of Marco Polo, II. 54.

Mammalia, composed of the genera Hystrix, Lepus, Castor, Mus, Sciurus, and Noctilio; excepting the last, the same as Rodentia, the rodents or Rosores. The term has long been superseded by Ren-dentia, but has come into renewed use, as by Alston, Allen, Coates, and Gill. The Glirres are divided into three sub-orders: (a) Simplexidentati, with one pair of incisors above and below, containing all living rodents excepting the hares and pikas; (b) Duplexidentati, with more than one pair of upper incisors, containing the hares and pikas; and (c) Hebexidentati based upon a fossil genus. The Duplexidentati are subdivided into the three series of Myo-morpha or murine rodents, Hystriomorpha or hystricine rodents, and Sciuromorpha or sciurine rodents, respectively typified by mice, porcupines, and squirrels. The Duplexidentati are not subdivided, but are also called Le-gomorpha, or leporine rodents. The Glirres are by far the largest order of mammals, and embrace a great number of highly diversified animals, all conforming, however, to a single type of structure. See Rodentia.

The other (the quilder-rose) tall,
And throwing up into the darkest gloom . . .
Her silver globe. Cowper, Task, vi. 156.

Especially—(a) A spherical glass shade for a lamp. (b) A large globular glass receptacle filled with water, in which fish are placed for exhibition, or which is used as a magnifying glass or illuminator.

This consists in filling a large transparent glass globe with clear water, and placing it in such a manner between the lamp and the workman that the light, after passing through the globe, may fall directly on the block.

Chatto, Wood Engraving, p. 574.

3. The earth: usually with the definite article.

The cloud capp'd towers, the gorgeous palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve.

Shak., Tempest, iv. 1.

Trade is the golden globe of the globe.

Cowper, Charity, l. 86.

4. An artificial sphere on whose surface is drawn a map or representation of the earth or of the heavens, called in the former case a terrestrial globe, and in the latter a celestial globe.

Terrestrial globe. Terrestrial globes are made so as to revolve freely about an axis representing that of the earth. This axis turns in a vertical brass circle divided into degrees, or smaller divisions; and this represents the meridian of any station. This meridian has a motion in its own plane, so that the axis can be brought into parallelism with that of the earth at the assumed station. The meridian moves in a fixed horizontal circle of wood, called the horizon, which is divided into signs, days, etc. Cheaper globes are made without these circles. Celestial globes of the ordinary kind, with the drawing, as in terrestrial globes, on the outer or convex surface, represent the stars as they would appear in a mirror, or as if viewed from without the celestial sphere, and not as they appear on a map of the heavens; but globes are also made with the heavenly bodies represented on the inner surface as they appear from the earth.

Terrestrial globe

In the next room . . . is very cunningly made in brass, a Globe or Sphere of the world, both heaven and earth.

Corpat, Crudities, l. 17.

I suppose you've been taught music, and the use of the globe, and French, and all the usual accomplishments.

Mrs. Gaskell, Wives and Daughters, l. 62.

5. In her., same as mound.—Et. A mass; company; group; throng; body.

The [waters] that omen from above shroud stand together
In the discharge of thy place set before thee the best examples, for imitation is a globe of precepts.

Bacon, Great Place (ed. 1887).

Straight a fiery globe

Of angels on full sail of wingful high.

Milton, P. R., iv. 681.

Globe of compression, an exploded military mine in which the crater radius is greater than the line of least resistance. Also called overcharged mine. See mine.

Horizon of a globe. See horizon.—Meridian of a globe. See meridian.—Syn. 1. and 2. Globe, Sphere, Orb, Ball. Globe and sphere represent that which is either perfectly round or closely approaches roundness; as, the earth is not a true sphere. Ball is freer in this respect; as, the eyeball, the ball of the foot; the Rugby football ball is oval. A globe is often said, a sphere often hollow. The secondary senses of globe are physical; those of sphere are moral. Sphere is the term of geometry and astronomy; orb of poetry, heraldry, and ancient astronomy. See orb.

She is spherical, like a globe. Shak., C. of E., III. 2.

The Lieutenant's evidence was as round, complete, and lucid as a Japanese sphere of rock-crystal.

globe (glob), v.; pret. and pp. globed, ppr. globing. [< globe, n.] I. trans. 1. To form into a round ball or sphere; gather round or into a circle; congregate. [Rare.]

The great stars that globed themselves in Heaven.

Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

2. To raise as a globe or sphere. [Rare.]

I have giv'n it the name of a liquid thing, yet it is not incontinent to bound itself, as hurried things are, but hath in it a most restraining and powerful abstinence to start back, and glob itself upward from the mixture of any ungenerous and unbeseeming motion, or any sole wherewith it may peril to stain itself.

Milton, Church-Government.

II. intrans. To become round or globe-shaped. Mrs. Browning. [Rare.] globe-amaranth (glob'am'a-ranth), n. The plant Gomphrena globosa, natural order Amaranthaceae, well known for its abundant round heads of purple and white flowers, very durable after being gathered, and hence used as immortelles.

globe-animal (glob'an'i-mal), n. One of certain minute globular plants of the genus Volvox, formerly supposed to be animals, as V. globator.

globe-cock (glob'kok), n. Originally the name of a cock in the form of a sphere moved by a stem, but now of a circular disk forming only a zonal segment of a sphere, for the same use. E. H. Knight.

globe-daisy (glob'dā'zi), n. The plant Globularia vulgaris. See Globularia.

globe-fish (glob'fish), n. A gymnodont plectognath fish of either of the families Tetrodontidae and Diodontidae. These fishes are so named from their capacity for inflating themselves by swallowing air, the whole body or much of it becoming blown up like a balloon. In some cases, as that of Diodon, the fish assumes an almost perfectly globular form. See Diodon. Also called swell-fish, swell-tout, egg-fish, bottle-fish, bellows-fish, blower, etc.

globe-flower (glob'flou'ér), n. 1. The Trollius Europæus, a ranunculaceous plant of Great Britain and the mountains of central Europe, with deeply lobed leaves and pale-yellow flowers. The conspicuous colored petals are incurved, giving the flowers a globular form. It is often cultivated in gardens. Also globe-ranunculus.

The globe-flower, the purple geranium, the heath, and the blue forget-me-not spanned the ground.

H. Taylor, Northern Travel, p. 200.

2. The globe-amaranth, Gomphrena globosa.

globe-lightning (glob'lit'ning), n. Lightning which assumes a spherical shape. See lightning.

But the most mysterious phenomenon is what goes by the name of globe lightning or 'fire ball,' a phenomenon lasting sometimes for several seconds, and therefore of a totally different character from that of any other form of lightning.

P. G. Tait, Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 380.

globe-ranunculus (glob'rá-nun'kú-lus), n. Same as globe-flower, 1.

globerder, n. See glucider.

globe-runner (glob'run'ér), n. A gymnastic performer who stands upon a large round ball and moves the ball with himself forward by the motion of his feet.

globe-sight (glob'sit), n. A form of front sight for small-arms, consisting of a small ball on one end of a pin, or of a disk with a central hole set in a tube with open ends.

globe-slater (glob'slá'tér), n. A sessile-eyed isopod crustacean of the genus Spharoma.

globe-thistle (glob'this'tl), n. A plant of the genus Echinops, natural order Compositæ; so called from the thistle-like foliage and the globular form of the flower-heads. See cut under Echinops.

globe-trotter (glob'trot'ér), n. A tourist who goes about from country to country all over the world; one who roams over the world for pleasure or recreation. [Humorous.]

The inevitable steamboat and the omnivorous globe-trotter.

The Academy, March 17, 1888, p. 182.

globe-trotting (glob'trot'ing), n. The practice of roaming round the world. [Humorous.]

In fact globe-trotting, as the Americans somewhat irreverently term it, is now frequently undertaken as a mere holiday trip.

The Academy, Sept. 25, 1888, p. 182.

globe-tube (glob'túb), n. A spherical lens, or a lens of very wide angle, mounted for photographic work.

It is asserted that the new globe-tubes the invention of C. C. Harrison, have an aperture of ninety degrees.

Silver Sunbeam, p. 41.

globe-valve (glob'valv), n. A valve having a casing approximately globular in form.

globewise (glob'wiz), adv. After the fashion or form of a globe.

In the Orangerie were very large Trees, and two pair of Miracles in Cases, out Globe-wise, the best and biggest I had seen.

Lester, Journey to Paris, p. 192.

globi, n. Plural of globus.

globical (glob'ikal), a. [< globe + -ical.] In her., having the outer bounding line circular, whether continuous or broken.

Globicephalines (glob'bi-sel'p-a-lí'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Globicephalus + -inae.] A subfamily of Delphinidae, typified by the genus Globicephalus, having the second and third digits of the manus with more than six phalanges; the caating-whales, grampuses, or pilot-whales.

globicephaline (glob'bi-sel'p-a-lín), a. [As Globicephalus + -ine.] Having a globose head, as a cetacean; specifically, of or pertaining to the Globicephalidae.

Globicephalus (glob'bi-sel'p-a-lus), n. [NL., < L. globus, a ball, + Gr. κεφαλή, head.] 1. A genus of delphinoid odontocete cetaceans, containing the caating- or pilot-whales, of which the best-known species is G. melas or grimaldi. Their technical characters are: 56 or 59 vertebrae, of which the cervicals are mostly ankylosed, the dorsals 11 in number, and the lumbar only about as long as broad; teeth 32 to 48 in number, restricted to the anterior half of each jaw, small, conical, and curved; flippers very long and narrow, with the second digit the longest, and consisting of 12 or 13 phalanges; the dorsal fin long, low, and triangular; and the head globose, whence the name. Though related to the orca or killer, the species of Globicephalus are timid and inoffensive, feeding chiefly upon cephalopods, and gregarious. The described species are numerous, but not well made out; some of them are called blackfish, coarctus, and grampus. Also Globicephalus.

2. [i. e.] A member of this genus; as, the short-finned globicephalus, G. brachypterus.

globiferous (glob'if'ér-us), a. [< L. globus, a ball, + ferre = E. bear.] In entom., having, in addition to one or two small joints, a very large globose joint which bears a bristle; applied to insect antennae or stiff antennae so characterized.

Globigerina (glob'ij-e-rí-nā), n. [NL., < L. globus, a ball, + gerere, carry, + -ina.] 1. The typical genus of Globigerinidae, originally regarded as a genus of cephalopods. [Orbigny, 1826.—2. [i. e.] An individual of this genus; used chiefly in collective compounds; as, globigerina-mud.

Globigerinae (glob'ij-e-rí-nā), n. pl. [NL., pl. of globigerina.] Same as globigerinidae.

It is no less certain that at all depths down to 2000 fathoms or thereabouts, Globigerinae in all stages of growth and containing more or less protoplasmic matter are found at the bottom, mixed with the cases of the surface Diatoms and the skeletons of Radiolaria. The proportion of Globigerinae, Orbulines, and Pulvinularia in the deep-sea mud increases with the depth, until, at depths beyond 1000 fathoms the sea bottom is composed of a fine chalky ooze made up of little more than the remains of these Foraminifera and their associated Diatoms and Radiolaria.

Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 80.

globigerina-mud (glob'ij-e-rí-nā-mud), n. A chalky mud or ooze occurring in enormous deposits on the bottom of the ocean, largely consisting of the debris of the shells of Globigerinidae.

globigerina-ooze (glob'ij-e-rí-nā-ōz), n. Same as globigerina-mud.

If we suppose the globe to be uniformly covered with an ocean 1000 fathoms deep, the solid land covering its bottom would be out of the reach of rain, waves, and other agents of degradation, and no sedimentary deposits would be formed. But if Foraminifera and diatoms, following the same laws of distribution as at present obtained, were introduced into this ocean, the fine rain of their effluents and calcareous hard parts would commence, and a circum-polar cap of silicious deposit would begin to make its appearance in the north and in the south; while the intermediate zone would be covered with globigerina ooze, containing a comparatively small proportion of silicious matter. The thickness of the . . . beds thus formed would be limited only by time and the depth of the ocean. . . . The beds of chalk which underlie the nummulitic limestone and occupy a still greater area are essentially identical with the globigerina ooze; the species of Globigerina found in it being undistinguishable from those now living.

Huxley, Anat. Invert., pp. 80-82.

globigerina-shells (glob'ij-e-rí-nā-shells), n. pl. The shells or tests of dead globigerinae from which the animal has disappeared, and which compose globigerina-mud in a more or less fragmentary or decomposed state.

globigerine (glob'ij'ér-in), a. and n. [< Globigerina.] 1. a. Pertaining to or characteristic of the Globigerinidae.

Which is made up of an aggregation of globigerina chambers.

H. E. Carpenter, Microsc., 2 ed.

II. a. One of the Globigerinae.

Also globigerinidae.

globigerinid (glob-i-jer-i-nid), n. A foraminifer of the family Globigerinidae; a globigerine.

Globigerinidae (glob-i-jer-i-ni-dē), n. pl. [NL.] Same as Globigerinidae.

Globigerinids (glob-i-jer-i-ni-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Globigerina + -ids.] A family of chiefly pelagic foraminiferous rhizopods, with the perforate test free and calcareous, its several chambers inflated or globose and arranged in a turbinate spiral, the aperture simple or multiple and conspicuous, opening into an umbilical depression, and no supplementary skeleton or canal system. The family occurs from the Trias to the present day, and the remains of its individuals constitute much of the chalky mud found at the bottom of the sea as well as vast extent of limestone. Like other foraminifers, they were originally mistaken for and described as minute cephalopods, owing to the form of the chambered shells. But they are prominent animalcules whose soft parts consist of apparently structureless protoplasm, like that of other foraminifers and of rhizopods in general, which has the power of secreting lime and building of this substance a shell of characteristic form. The Globigerinidae are prominent among many related forms of foraminifers, for the profusion in which they occur, their myriads having furnished the material for considerable of those parts of the earth's crust which consist of limestone. In this respect the globigerines resemble nummulites but they are still in evidence, and in the present formation of globigerinids at the bottom of the ocean is witnessed a process by which solid rock may be formed from the hard chalky shells of microscopic organisms whose soft parts have long since perished. See Foraminifera. Also Globigerina, Globigerinidae.

Globigerina bulloides

globigerinidan (glob-i-jer-i-ni-dan), a. and n. Same as globigerine.

Globigerinidae (glob-i-jer-i-ni-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Globigerina + -idae.] The Globigerinidae regarded as an order of perforate Foraminifera.

globigerinidean (glob-i-jer-i-ni-dē-an), a. and n. 1. a. Of or pertaining to the Globigerinidae; globigerine, in a broad sense.

II. a. A member of the Globigerinidae.

globin (glō-bin), n. [L. globus, a ball (see globe), + -in.] The protein substance which with hematin makes up the larger part of the red blood-corpuscles. It is possibly a mixture of several distinct proteins.

Globiocephalus (glō-bi-o-sef-a-lus), n. An incorrect form of Globicephalus, 1. J. E. Gray, 1864.

globird (glō-bērd), n. See glowbird.

globist (glō-bist), n. [Globe + -ist.] One who understands the use of globes. Davies [Rare.]

Being a good globist, he will quickly find the zenith, the distance, the climate, and the parallels.

Howell, Fortune Travels, App.

globo-cumulus (glō-bō-kū-mū-lus), n. A form of cloud. See cloud, 1 (k).

globoid (glō-boid), a. and n. [L. globus, a ball (see globe), + -oid, form.] 1. a. Approaching a globular form; globe shaped; spheroid.

These bush-retreats of the mice were all distinctly globular, or globoid.

Pop. Sci. Mo., XXX, 324.

II. n. In bot., an amorphous or globular concretion of a double phosphate of calcium and magnesium, associated with the protein-crystals in protein-granules.

globose (glō-bōs), a. and n. [L. globosus, round as a ball; see globosa.] 1. a. 1. Like or resembling a globe; round or spherical in form; specifically, in common use, nearly but not quite spherical or globular.

Then form'd the moon
Globose, and every magnitude of stars.

Milton, P. L. vii. 367.

The look with crown globose, and ready stem.

Crabbe, Works, 1. 60.

2. In zool.: (a) Rounded and very prominent; projecting from a surface like a sphere partially buried in it: as, globose eyes, cornea, etc. (b) Having a globose part: as, the globose currawow, Ceryx globosus.

II. n. A globe. [Rare.]

Regions in which
All thy dominion, Adam, is no more Than what this garden is to all the earth.
And all the sea, from one entire globe
Stretch'd into longitude.

Milton, P. L., v. 752.

globosely (glō-bōs-ē), a. In a globose manner; so as to be globose.

globosity (glō-bōs-i-ti), n. [OP. globositas = Fig. globositas = It. globosità, < L. globosus, in(-)s, < L. globosus, round as a ball; see globosa.] The quality of being globose; sphericity.

For why the same eclipse . . . should be seen to them that live one degree more westerly, when the sun is but five degrees above the horizon, . . . no account can be given but the globosity of the earth.

Ray, Works of Creation, ii.

globospherite (glō-bō-sfēr-it), n. [L. globus, a ball, + sphæra, sphere, + -ite.] A name given by Vogelsang to an aggregation of globulites into spherical forms, the individual constituents being arranged in lines radiating from the center of the group.

globous (glō-bus), a. [OF. globosus = Sp. Fig. It. globoso, < L. globosus, round as a ball (> E. globosus, q. v.), < globus, a ball; see globe.] Same as globose.

Wide over all the plain, and wider far
Than all this globous earth in plain outspread (Such are the courts of God), the angelic throng Dispersed in bands.

Milton, P. L., v. 640.

globular (glō-bū-lār), a. [F. globulaire = Fig. globular = It. globulare, < NL. globularis, < L. globulus, a little ball; see globule.] Globe-shaped; having the form of a ball or sphere; round; spheric.

The figure of the atoms of all visible fluids, qua fluids, seemeth to be globular. N. Greco, Cosmologia Sacra, l. 2.

The form of the body is usually oblong but when alarmed it has a power of inflating the body to a globular shape of great size. Pennant, Brit. Zool., The Globe Tetradon.

Globular chart. See chart. Globular sailing, the art of sailing in great circles — a phrase of navigation formerly employed to denote the sailing from one place to another over an arc of a great circle, which is the shortest distance between two places.

Globularia (glō-bū-lār-i-ā), n. [NL., neut. pl. of globularis, < L. globulus, a little ball; see globule.] 1. A genus of gametophytous herbs or small shrubs, of the order Scapellata, including a dozen species of the Mediterranean region. They have small blue flowers in terminal globular heads, with irregularly lobed corolla, didynamous stamens, and an indehiscent one-celled and one-seeded fruit. G. vulgaris, a common species of southern Europe, is sometimes called the globe daisy. The leaves of G. Alpinum are used as a substitute for scum.

2. A genus of mollusks. Swanson, 1840.

globularity (glō-bū-lār-i-ti), n. [Globular + -ity.] The state or quality of being globular; globosity; sphericity. [Rare.]

globularly (glō-bū-lār-ē), adv. In a globular or spherical form; spherically.

globularness (glō-bū-lār-nēs), n. The quality of being globular; sphericity.

globule (glō-bū-l), n. [F. at. globe = Sp. globula = Fig. It. globula, < L. globulus, a little ball, dim. of globus, a ball; see globe.] 1. A little globe or sphere; a small or minute body of matter of a spherical form.

Hallstones have opaque globules of snow in their centre.

Newton, Opticks.

2. Specifically — (a) In anat. and physiol., a blood-disk or corpuscle, or a lymph-corpuscle. (b) In bot., the antheridium of Characeae. (c) In homeopathic med., a minute pill consisting of sugar of milk combined with the active principle of some drug.

globulet (glō-bū-lēt), n. [Globule + -et.] A little globule; a minute globular particle.

globulin, globuline (glō-bū-lin), n. [Globule + -in, -ine.] 1. The general name of a class of native proteins allied to the albumins, but distinguished from them by being insoluble in pure water. The globulins are soluble in weak acids and alkalis and dilute salt solutions but most of them are precipitated when their solutions are saturated with salt. They include vitellin, myosin, paraglobulin, and others.

2. A protein body occurring, mixed with albumin, in the cells of the crystalline lens of the eye (whence it is also called crystallin). It resembles albumin, but differs from it in being precipitated from both acid and alkaline solutions by casein (neutralization, and in being completely thrown down from its solutions by carbonic acid gas.

3. In bot., a name given by Turpin to starch-granules, and by Krieser to chlorophyll-granules, and now applied to such protoids as are soluble in a strong solution of salt, but not in pure water.

globulism (glō-bū-lizm), n. [Globule + -ism.] The practice of administering medicine in globules or very small pills; a term sometimes applied to the practice of homeopathy.

globulite (glō-bū-lit), n. [Globule + -ite.] In lithol., the simplest and most rudimentary form developed in the process of devitrification. See that word. Globulites are very minute rounded bodies, destitute of crystalline structure. They retain the name globulite so long as they remain irregularly scattered about and disconnected from one another. When grouped together, they assume various forms to which names have been assigned, of which conulites and microstolites are the most important. See those words and microstolite.

globulitic (glō-bū-lit-ik), a. [Globulite + -ic.] Pertaining to, of the nature of, or containing globulites.

Between these microstolites, arranged in a basaltic fashion, could be detected a trace of pyroxene, apparently monoclinal, with considerable brownish glass and dark globulitic bands.

Amor. Jour. Sci., 3d ser., XXVIII, 222.

Globulitic structure. See rock-structures, under structure.

globuloid (glō-bū-loid), a. [L. globulus, a little ball (see globule), + (Gr. eidōs, form.) Resembling a globule or globules.

globulose (glō-bū-lōs), a. Same as globulous; as, the globulose currawow, Ceryx globulosa, Sclater.

globulous (glō-bū-lus), a. [L. as if 'globulosus, < globulus, a little ball; see globule.] Having the form of a small sphere; round; globular. [Rare.]

The whiteness of such globulous particles proceeds from the air included in the froth.

Boyle.

globulousness (glō-bū-lus-nēs), n. The state or quality of being globulous. [Rare.]

The same drops will retain the same figure on stone, or iron, yet they will readily adhere to gold, and leave their globulousness upon it, though gold be a far drier body than wood.

Boyle, Works, li. 664.

globus (glō-bus), n.; pl. globi (-bi). [L.: see globe.] 1. A ball; a globe; a globous body. Specifically — 2. In anat., same as mundus. — Globus hystericus, in pathol., a sensation of hysteria as of a ball fixed in the throat, supposed to be due to spasm of the oesophagus. Globus major, the head of the epididymis. Globus minor, the tail of the epididymis.

globy (glō-bi), a. [Globe + -y.] Resembling or pertaining to a globe; round; orbicular.

Your hair, whose globy rings
He [Love] flying curls, and crisps with his wings.
B. Jonson, Underwoods, 1261.

Torturing convulsions from his globy eyes
Had almost drawn their spheres.

Fletcher (and another), Two Noble Kinsmen, v. 1.

glochidate, a. See glochidiate.

glochidium, n. Plural of glochidium.

glochidial (glō-kid-i-āl), a. [Glochidium + -al.] Having the character of a glochidium; being in the encysted and quasi-parasitic stage, as the larva of some lamellibranchia, known as a glochidium.

glochidiate, glochidate (glō-kid-i-āl, glō-kid-i-āt), a. [Glochis (with assumed stem glochid-*) or glochidium + -ate.] In bot. and zool., barbed at the tip, as a hair or bristle.

glochidious (glō-kid-i-us), a. Same as glochidiate.

glochidium (glō-kid-i-um), n.; pl. glochidia (-i). [NL., < (Gr. glochis (γλοχis), only in pl. γλοχis, the beard of corn, γλοχis, a projecting point (see glochis), + -idion, dim. suffix.] 1. [cap.] In zool., a generic name given to the young of certain fresh-water mollusks, as Union and Anodonta, which are hatched in the gills of the parent, and were at one time supposed to be parasites. Rathke, 1797. — 2. In bot., a hair-like appendage to the maxilla of heteroporous Filicinae, by which the maxilla attach themselves to the macrospores after both have been discharged into the water.

glochis (glō-kis), n.; pl. glochines (-ki-nēs). [NL., < (Gr. γλοχis (γλοχis), a projecting point. Cf. glochidium.) In entom., a barbed point; a spine or unguis furnished with one or more barbs slanting backward.

glod, glodet. Obsolete strong preterit of glude. Chaucer.

glue (glō), n. [NL., < (Gr. gluē, glue; cf. gluē, glue, gluten; see gluc.] Animal mucilage; a cohesive mucous substance secreted by many low animals, as protozoans, forming a protective case or investment, as a tube, shield, or lorica. See myoglan.

Gloeocapsa (glō-ō-kap-sā), n. [NL., < (Gr. gloia, glue, + L. capsula, a case; see glan and cap.)] A genus of bluish-green algae, comprising fresh-water and marine species. The plants consist of spherical cells united into families and surrounded by a gelatinous substance which forms an outer layer. They are reproduced by cell division, which takes place in all directions. A variety of Gloeocapsa is a theory, species of the genus consists of the gonidia of certain genera of algae.

gloeocapsin (glō-ō-kap-sin), n. [Gloeocapsa + -in.] A red or blue coloring matter found in Gloeocapsa and some other algae.

gloeocapsoid (glō-ō-kap-soid), a. Belonging to or resembling the genus Gloeocapsa; said of the gonidia of certain lichens.

gloiocarp (glō'ō-kārp), n. [For reg. gloiocarp*, < Gr. glōiōs, glue, < glōiōs, g., gum, gluten, + carpōs, fruit.] In bot., the quadruple spore of some algae. Imp. Dict.

glome¹, glombet, v. t. Middle English forms of gloom or gloom.

gloria (glō'ri-ā), n. [Lat. gloriā; see glory.] 1. In liturgies, the great doxology (Gloria in Excelsis) or the lesser doxology (Gloria Patri). See below.

I show myself demurely in my seat in the village church, bowing at the Gloria, or kneeling with my face hid in my hands.

2. A musical setting of one of these doxologies. — 3. In general, a doxology or ascription of praise. — 4. In recess, art, a glory: often incorrectly used for halo or aureole.

Gloria in Excelsis, the hymn or chant beginning in Latin with the words Gloria in Excelsis Deo (Glory in the highest to God) and in the English version with Gloria be to God on high. The first two stanzas are given in Luke B. 14 as sung by angels, and both this shorter form as sung in churches in early times and still in use in some oriental offices, and the enlarged form are therefore known as the angelic hymns. In some Eastern liturgies it stands at the beginning of the eucharistic office. In Western rites it is found at the beginning of mass after the introit and Kyrie, and before the collect in the Roman missal, and also in the Use of Sarum and in the Anglican Prayer Book of 1549.

Revisions of the Anglican Prayer Book since 1552 it has stood at the end of the Communion Office after communion and a prayer of thanksgiving. In the American Prayer Book it is also an alternate to the Gloria Patri after the last psalm at Morning and Evening Prayer. In the Greek Church it is used after the psalms called stichera (stichera) toward the end of the matin service, and at complies (complies) after Vespers. Also called, especially in the Eastern Church, the great doxology. — Gloria Patri, the short hymn, "Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost." As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end. Amen. (In the Latin form, "Gloria Patri, et Filio, et Spiritui Sancto, Sicut erat in principio, et nunc, et semper, et in secula seculorum. Amen.") This ascription has been used since very early times in both the Eastern and Western churches. Also called the lower doxology.

Gloria Tibi, the brief doxology in Latin, "Gloria tibi Domine." In the English version, "Glory be to thee, O Lord." — and after the announcement of the liturgical gospel in Roman Catholic and Anglican churches. In the Eastern Church the form is, "Glory be to thee, O Lord, glory to thee" (doxa sei, Kyrie, Ipsi sei). This is repeated after the gospel. In the East the Gloria Tibi is as old as the fifth century or older; in the West it is not mentioned till later.

Glossic (glos'ik), n. [< Gr. γλῶσσα, the tongue, a language, + -ic.] A phonetic system of spelling invented by Alexander J. Ellis, intended to be used concurrently with the existing English orthography (which he calls Nomic, i. e., 'consonantary'), in order to remedy some of its defects without changing its alphabetic form or detracting from its value. It is based on the principle of uniformly using for each s and the letter or digraph that happens to be most commonly used for such sound in the existing orthography. The following are the vowel notations with their equivalents in the system of this dictionary, and such of the consonant combinations as differ from those of that system: An inverted period after a vowel marks it as accented.

In anat., of or pertaining to the tongue and the pharynx. Glossopharyngeal ganglion. See ganglion. Glossopharyngeal nerve. A large nerve distributed to the tongue and the pharynx; the ninth cranial nerve of the new nomenclature; of the old, forming (with the pneumogastric and spinal accessory) a part of the eighth cranial nerve. It is a nerve of common sensation of the fauces, pharynx, tonsil, etc., and of the special sense of taste of all parts of the tongue to which it is distributed. It is the smallest one of the three which together formed the eighth nerve in the nomenclature of Willis. Its apparent origin is by several filaments from the upper part of the medulla oblongata in the groove between the restiform and olivary bodies. It leaves the cranial cavity by the jugular or posterior lateral foramen, together with the pneumogastric and spinal accessory, and passes forward between the jugular vein and the internal carotid artery. It descends along the side of the neck in front of this artery, forming an arch upon the stylopharyngeus muscle and the middle constrictor of the pharynx, and passes beneath the hyoglossus to be distributed in the mucous membrane of the fauces, etc. In the jugular foramen it has two ganglia: the upper, the jugular ganglion; the lower, the petrosal or Anderson's ganglion. It has branches of communication with the pneumogastric, facial, and sympathetic nerves. Its branches of distribution are called the tympenic (Jacobson's nerve), carotid, pharyngeal, lingual, lingual, and muscular nerves. See second cut under brain.

II. n. The glossopharyngeal nerve.

Glossophora (glo-sol'-o-fá), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of glossophorus; see glossophorus.] A main branch of the phylum Mollusca, containing all true mollusks except the lamellibranchs or headless mollusks, which are contrasted as Lipocéphala.

Encyc. Brit., XXII. 302.

glottidean (glo-tid'-é-an), a. [Gr. glottis (-id) + -ean.] Same as glottic.

glottides, n. Plural of glottis.

Glottidia (glo-tid'-i-á), n. [NL. (Dall, 1870), < Gr. γλῶττα, tongue; see glottis, gloss.] A genus of brachiopods, of the family Lingulidae, replacing Lingula proper in American waters. The type is L. or G. abida of the Californian coast. The common species of the Carolina coast and southward, formerly called Lingula pyramidalis (Stimpson), is now known as G. auduberti.

glottis (glot'-is), n.; pl. glottides (-i-déz). [= F. glotte = Sp. glotis = Pg. glote, glotis = It. glottide, < NL. glottis, the glottis (L. glottis, a little bird so called), < Gr. γλῶττις, the mouth of the windpipe, the glottis, < γλῶττα, Attic form of γλῶσσα, the tongue; see gloss.] 1. In anat., the mouth of the windpipe; the opening at the top of the larynx; the chink, cleft, or fissure between the vocal cords. It closes to a slit-like opening during phonation, through the approximation of the vocal cords. The term designates most strictly the opening itself, sometimes distinguished as rima glottidis, but is also applied to the opening with the contiguous limiting structures, as in the expression "edema of the glottis," much as the term "mouth" is used as to include the lips. The ventral or anterior portion of the glottis, called glottis vocalis, is bounded by the true vocal cords; the dorsal or posterior part, glottis respiratoria, by the internal margins of the arytenoid cartilages.

2. The reed or tongue of certain ancient musical instruments. 3. In ornith., an old name of the greenshank; subsequently taken as the specific name of the same, Totanus glottis; made by Koch in 1816 the generic name of the same, Glottis chloropus. 4. Stroke of the glottis, a sudden approximation of the vocal cords whereby a tone is produced promptly and clearly, without aspiration. Also called chuck of the glottis.

glottitis (glo-tí'-tis), n. Same as glossitis. glottogenic (glo-tó-jén'-ik), a. [Gr. γλῶττα, tongue, language, + γένος, generation, < γένω, produce.] Relating to the origin of language or of languages.

The general interest still clung to Ropp's old glottogenic problems.
Encyc. Brit., XVII. 721.

glottologic, glottological (glo-tó-loj'-ik, -i-kál), a. [Gr. glottology + -ic, -al.] Pertaining to glottology; as, glottologic observation and research.

glottologist (glo-tol'-o-jíst), n. [Gr. glottology + -íst.] Same as glossologist.

glottology (glo-tol'-o-jí), n. [Gr. γλῶττα, Attic form of γλῶσσα, tongue, language, + λογία, < λογία, speak; see -ology.] Same as glossology.

Gloucester, n. See Gloster.

glour, v. and n. See glower.

glout (glout), v. i. [Formerly also glout; < ME. glouten; another form of glout, q. v.] 1. To gaze attentively; stare.

Whoever attempteth anything for the publick... the same setteth himself upon a stage to be glouted upon by every evil eye.

glow-worm (glô' wôrm), n. [Formerly also glowworm; < glow + worm: cf. glowbird and dial. glowbacon: so called with ref. to the light which it emits; cf. the D. name gluwworm, lit. 'glow-worm,' Sw. lygnask, lit. 'light-worm'; F. ver luisant, lit. 'shining worm,' Sp. lucérnaga, Pg. vagalume, pyralampo, lucerna, It. luciolà, etc., L. cicindela, Gr. λυγνῆς, etc., with similar meanings: see Cicindela, Lampyrus, etc.] The common English name of Lampyrus noctiluca, a species of pentamerous beetle, of the family Lampyridae and subfamily Lampyrinae: a name applicable strictly only to the female, which is wingless, somewhat resembles a caterpillar, and emits a shining green light from the end of the abdomen. The male is winged and not phosphorescent, resembling an ordinary beetle; he flies about in the evening, and is attracted by the light of the female. The same name is given to other species of Lampyrus, as L. splendula. Some related beetles are known in the United States as fireflies and lightning-bugs.

You gandy glow-worms, carrying seeming fire,
Yet have no heat within ye!

Fletcher (and another), Elder Brother, iv. 1.

Even as the glow-worm, which makes a goodly show Among the grass of the field, would be of little avail if Deposited in a beaumont grate. Scott, Monastery, xviii.

Gloxinia (glok-nin'-i-à), n. [NL., named after Gloxin, a German physician.] 1. A genus of glossaceous plants, low and almost stemless,

A variety of Gloxinia

with creeping rhizomes and large, nodding, bell-shaped flowers. There are a species, natives of tropical America, several of which are very common in green-houses, and have given rise to numerous hybrids and varieties.

2. [L. c.] A plant of this genus; also, the garden name of tuberous-rooted plants of the genus Sinningia.

glosser (glôz), n. [Early mod. E. also glose; < ME. glose, n. gloss, explanation, specious talk, flattery (noun not in AS., but see the verb), = D. glos = G. glossa = Icel. glösa, a gloss, explanation, a bunter, taunt, = Sw. glosa = Dan. glose, vocable, colloq. taunt, = Sw. glosa = Dan. glosse, gloss, = OF. glose, F. glose, a gloss, comment, parody, = Fr. glosa, glosa = Sp. glosa = Pg. glosa, glosa = It. glosa, < L.L. glossa (ML. also glosa), an obsolete or foreign word requiring explanation, later applied to the explanation itself, < (Gr. γλῶσσα, the tongue, a tongue or language, an obsolete or foreign word requiring explanation: see gloss, the same word as gloss, n., but directly from the L. The verb glose is from the noun.] 1. Explanation; comment; gloss. See gloss, n.

3. To put a fair face upon; gloss over; extenuate.

Some glōsed those wordes, and some thought in their con-rage that the answer was not reasonable, but they durst not saye agaynst it, the Duke of Gloucestre was so sore drel.
Berners, tr. of Froissart's Chron., II. ccl.

The fond world,
Like to a dotting mother, glōses over
Her children's imperfections with fine terms.

Chapman, All Fools, II. 1.

Short be my speech; nor time affords,
Nor my plain temper, glōsing world.

Scott, L. of the L., II. 28.

II. intrans. 1. To use glosses; practise glossing: same as gloss, v. 1., 1.

Paris, and Trolus, you have both said well,
And on the cause and question now in hand
Have glōsed - but superficially.

Shak., T. and C., II. 2.

2. To talk speciously and smoothly; use flattery.

Who that couthe glōse softe
And flater, such he set abofte,
In great estate

Gower, Conf. Amant., III. 170.

Shak., Rich. II., II. 1.

glosser (glô'zér), n. [Early mod. E. also glos-ser; < ME. glosser; < glose + -er.] 1. A glosser or glossator; an explainer.

It is necessary that I be the declarer or glosser of mine own worke, or els your Lordship should have had much labour to vnderstand it. Hakluyt's Voyages, l. 231.

2. One given to glossing over things, or putting a fair face on them; a hypocritical deceiver.

False prophetes, flaterers and glossers shullen come and be curiours over kynnes and orles.

Piers Plowman (C), xlii. 221.

No no glossers nor no smokeo,
No no seruantes no wey lokero.

Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 19.

glōsing (glô'zing), n. [< ME. glōsing; verbal
n. of glose, v.] Flattery; deceit.

With false wordes and wittes ich have wonne my goodes,
And with gyle and glōsing gadored that ich have.

Piers Plowman (C), vii. 250.

No theme his fate supplies
For the smooth glōsings of the indulgent world.

Wordsworth, Excursion, vi.

glōsinglyt (glô'zing-lī), adv. Flatteringly.

As also glōser, closely, close, glōsinglyt, hourly, materially, maliciously.

Cumtun, Remains, Excellence of Eng. Tongue.

glut, n. An obsolete form of glue.

glubi, v. t. [< ME. glubben, var. of gluppen, var.
of gulpen*, gulp; see gulp. Cf. glubber.] To swallow greedily; gulp.

Swiche stomerers in slepe slanthe is her ende,
And glotony in her god with glupping of drynk.

Piers Plowman's Cries (E. E. T. S.), l. 92.

glubber (glub'ér), n. [Also gllobber; < ME. glub-bere, gllobber; < glub + -er.] 1. A glutton.

Moche wo worth that man that mys-reuleth his Inwitte;
And that he glotouns glubber; her (their) god is her wombe.

Piers Plowman (B), ix. 60.

2. A miser. [Obsolete or prov. Eng. in both senses.]

glue. In the following words, of recent introduction, the equivalent of the regular glue.

gludic (glô'sik), a. [< Gr. γλῦκίς, sweet, prob.
= L. dulcis, sweet; see duice, dulcet, douce.]

Of or pertaining to or obtained from sugar. - Glucic acid, C₁₂H₂₂O₁₀, an acid produced by the action of alkalis or acids on sugar. It is a colorless amorphous substance, is very soluble in water, attracts moisture rapidly from the air, and its solution has a decidedly sweet taste.

All of its neutral salts are soluble.

glucina (glô-si'na), n. [NL., < Gr. γλῦκίς, sweet.]
The only oxid (BeO) of the metal glucinum or beryllium. Pure glucina is white, tasteless, without odor, and quite insoluble in water, but soluble in the liquid fixed alkalis. Also glucina and beryllia.

glucinum (glô-si-num), n. [NL., < Gr. γλῦκίς, sweet.] Chemical symbol, Be or Gl; atomic weight, 9.1. A white metal, of specific gravity 2.1. It belongs to the group of the alkaline earths, and is prepared from beryl (whence it is also called beryllium).
Native compounds are rare. Besides the common mineral beryl, it occurs in the oxid chrysoberyl, in the silicates enclase, phenacite, and bertrandite, and a few others, also in the phosphates hercynite and beryllonite; the last-named is a phosphate of beryllium and sodium. Many of the salts of this metal have a sweet taste.

glucohemina, glucohemina (glô-kô-hé-mi-nà), n.
[NL. glucohemina, < Gr. γλῦκίς, sweet, + haima, blood.] In pathol., the presence of an excessive quantity of glucose in the blood.

glucometer (glô-kom'e-tér), n. [< Gr. γλῦκίς, sweet, + μέτρον, a measure.] An instrument for testing the percentage of sugar in wine or must.

glucose (glô'kôw), n. [< Gr. γλῦκίς, sweet, +
-ose.] 1. The name of a group of sugars having the formula C₆H₁₂O₆, which may be regarded as aldehydes of hexatomic alcohols.
They are less sweet than cane-sugar. One or more of them constitute the sugar of fruits, and they are produced from cane sugar, dextrine, starch, cellulose, etc., by the action of acids, certain ferments, and other reagents, and by processes going on in living plants. The two best-known varieties, distinguished by their action on polarized light, are dextroglucose, dextrose, or grape-sugar, which turns the plane of polarization to the right, and levoglucose, levulose, or fruit-sugar, which turns it to the left.

2. In com., the sugar-syrup obtained by the conversion of starch into sugar by sulphuric acid, the solid product being called grape-sugar, starch-sugar, diabetic sugar, etc.

glucosic (glô-kô's'ik), a. [< glucose + -ic.] Pertaining to, of the nature of, or producing glucose.

According to M. Bulgniet's investigations, the cause of the change of the primarily formed cane sugar into fruc-tose is not the acids of the fruits, but appears to depend on the influence of a nitrogenous body playing the part of a glucosic ferment. R. Bentley, Manual of Botany, p. 783.

glucoside (glô'kô-sid or -sid), n. [< glucose +
-ide.] One of a class of compounds widely distributed in the vegetable world, which, treated with acids, alkalis, or certain ferments, are resolved into a sugar, an acid, and sometimes another organic principle. Tannic acid, for example, is a glucoside resolvable into glucose and gallic acid.
The glucosides may be regarded as compound ethers.

glucosuria (glô-kô-si'ri-à), n. [NL., < Gr. γλῦ-κίς, sweet (see glucose), + οὖρον, urine.] In pathol., the presence of glucose in the urine. See diabetes.

glucupicronit, n. [< (Gr. γλῦκίς, sweet, + πικρὸν, bitter, sharp, sweet-bitter, < γλῦκίς, sweet, + πικρὸς, bitter, sharp.) A bitter-sweet thing.

Our whole life is a glucupicron (read glucupicron), a bitter sweet passion. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 342.

glue (glû), n. [Formerly also glaw; < ME. glue, glu, glaw, < OF. glu, F. glu, birdlime, = Pr. glut, < L.L. glus (glut-), glue; cf. gluten (glutin-), also glutinium, glue; glutius, tenacious, well-tempered, soft, pp. of an unused verb gluere*, draw together; akin to Gr. γλῦκίς, glue, gluten, adj. slippery, γλῦμα, glue.] A viscous adhesive substance used as a cement for uniting pieces of wood or other material, or in combination with other substances to give body or to make rollers, molds, packing, etc. The glue is ordinary use is common or impure gelatin, obtained by boiling animal substances, as skin, hoofs, etc., in water. It is also employed by textile colorists, for the reason that its solutions are precipitated by tannic acid, and the precipitate so produced attracts many of the coal-tar colors from their solutions. In this respect it serves as a fixing-agent for the tannic acid; but as a nitrogenous albuminoid substance, it may at the same time act as a mordant. A kind of glue is made in Japan from Gloeopetris saccharifera, which is used to stiffen thread, to cleanse and soften the hair, for sealing on porcelain, and for attaching paper hangings to plastered walls.

Therefore he that keepeth that one only commandment of love keepeth all. With this glue shall we be fast loyed to Christ, so that he be in us, and we remain in him.

J. Usser, On John 14.

Albumen glue, partially decayed gluten obtained from wheat flour in the manufacture of starch. - Cassia glue.
See casein. - Oologous glue, a very pale strong glue obtained from otter, which is first fixed and then bleached with a solution of chlorid of lime. - Plastic glue, a preparation of glue and glycerin. It is used in the composition of printers' ink rollers, and for making elastic figures, galvanoplastic molds, etc. - In a glue, in soap-making, of the viscid consistency of liquid glue. F. L. Goussier, Soap and Candles, p. 167. - Liquid glue, glue glue permanently liquidized by treatment with either nitric or acetic acid, and put up in bottles for ready use. - Marine glue, a strongly adhesive preparation of mucous or animal matter, usually of fish or of turpentine, with shells added in the proportion of two or three parts to one by weight, run into plates and dried; so called because it is unaffected by water, and is therefore adapted for use on ship-timbers. — Mouth or lip glue, ordinary dissolved glue to which a pound of white half-pound of sugar has been added. It forms solid cakes, which are readily soluble, and for use may be moistened with the tongue. — Vegetable glue. See the extract.

For 250 grains of the concentrated gum solution (prepared with two parts of gum (arabic) and five of water), two grains of crystalline aluminium sulphate will suffice. This salt is dissolved in ten times its quantity of water, and mixed directly with the mucilage, which in this condition may be termed vegetable glue. Sci. Amer., N. S., LVIII, 106.

Water-proof glue, isinglass boiled in milk. (See also fish-glue.)

glue (glō), v.; pret. and pp. glued, ppr. gluing. [ME. glusen, glouen, < OF. gluer, gluser, gluyer, F. gluer, glue, stick together; from the noun.] I. trans. 1. To join with glue or other viscous substance; stick or hold fast.

Their bowes are of wood of a yard long, sinewed at the back with strong sinews, not glued too, but fast girded and tied on. Hakluyt's Voyages, III, 37.

This cold congealed blood
That glues my lips, and will not let me speak.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., v. 2.

2. To unite or hold together as if by glue; fix or fasten firmly.

Let men glue on us the name;
Sufficeth that we have the fame.
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 1761.

The love which to mine own Queen glues my heart
Makes it to every other Lady kind.
J. Beaumont, Psyche, v. 107.

She now began to glue herself to his favour with the grossest adulation. Smollett, Humphrey Clinker.

Job kept his eyes fixed on the ground for some time. Sam, with his glue to Job's countenance, ran up against the people who were walking about.

Dickens, Pickwick, xiv.

To glue up, in bookbinding, to apply melted glue to (the backs of sewed but unbound books). The glue binds the sewed sections to the sewed thread and the false back.

II. intrans. To stick fast; adhere; unite; cling.

In most wounds, if kept clean, and from the air, for which the use of plaisters in wounds chiefly consists: the flesh will glue together with its own native balm.

N. Greve, Comologia Sacra, III, 2.

He [Sir H. Willoughby] with his hapless crew,
Each full exoriated at his several task,
Drove into station; to the cordage glued
The sailor, and the pilot to the helm.
Thomson, Winter, l. 934.

glue-boiler (glō'boi'ler), n. 1. One whose occupation is the making of glue. — 2. An apparatus for boiling skins, hoofs, etc., to obtain the gelatinous matter.

glue-pot (glō'pot), n. A utensil for dissolving glue, usually consisting of two pots, one within the other. The inner pot contains the glue; the outer is filled with water, the boiling of which causes the glue to melt.

gluer (glō'er), n. One who or that which glues; one who cements with glue.

glue-size (glō'siz), n. A solution of one pound of glue in a gallon of water. Car-Builder's Dict.

glue-stock (glō'stok), n. Materials from which glue is to be prepared, as hides, hoofs, etc.

All stag, tainted, and badly scored, grubby, or myrrain hides are called damaged, and must go at two thirds price, unless they are badly damaged, when they are classed as glue stock. C. T. Davis, Leather, p. 55.

gluey (glō'i), a. [Also gluy, and formerly gluey, gluey; < ME. gluey, gluey; < glue + -y.] Like glue; viscous; glutinous; sticky.

To prove it taste, a clodde aviesly
To take, and with gode water weel it wete,
And loke if it be gluey, tough to trete.
Palladius, Husbandrie (E. K. T. A.), p. 4.

And to the end the golde may cover them, they anoynt their bodies with stamped hearts of a gluey substance. Hakluyt's Voyages, III, 665.

On this [gum] they found their waxen works, and raise the yellow fabric on its gluey base.

Addison, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, IV.

glueyness (glō'i-ness), n. The state or quality of being gluey. Imp. Dict.

glug, n. [ME., a var. of clog.] A clog.

Place of entry is stones, and the glug (L. glaber) of hym gold. Wyclif, Job xxviii. 6 (192).

Glue's corpuscles. Same as granule-cells.

gluing-press (glō'ing-pres), n. In bookbinding, a press of simple form which presses freshly glued books, and prevents the melted glue on them from soaking too far into the leaf.

gluish (glō'ish), a. [ME. gluwish, < glu, glou, etc., + -ish.] Resembling glue; having a viscous quality.

glum (glum), v. i. [ME. glumen, glommen, gloumen, gloumben, frown, look sullen: see glum, v., of which glum is but another form (like glum, another form of glum), and of glum, e.] To frown; look sullen or glum: same as glum.

"Oure syre sytten," he says, "on sage [seat] an hyge in his glumde glorie, & gloumben ful lyttel. That he nummen [taken] in Ninive & naked dyspayled." Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), III, 94.

glum (glum), a. and n. [glum, v., but perhaps, as an adj., of L.G. origin. Cf. L.G. glum, G. dial. glumm, gloomy, troubled, turbid: see glum, v., and of glummy, gloomy.] I. a. Gloomily sullen or silent; moody; frowning.

And not Athens only, but to austere and glum a generation as those of Sparta. Rymer, on Tragedies (1687), p. 3. Fred was so good-tempered that, if he looked glum under scolding, it was chiefly for propriety's sake. George Eliot, Middlemarch, I, 268.

II. n. A sullen look; a frown.

She looked hawtly, and gaue on me a glum. Shelton, Garland of Laurel, l. 1117.

Glumaceae (glō-mā'sē-ā), n. pl. [NL., pl. of glumacea: see glumaceus and -aceae.] In bot., a group or cohort of endogenous orders, characterized by having the flowers solitary and sessile in the axils of glumaceous bracts, arranged in heads or spikelets, and with the segments of the perianth also glumaceous. The seeds are albuminous. It includes the Cyperaceae and Gramineae, in which the ovary is one-celled and the single ovule erect, and the small orders Restiaceae, Brassiculaceae, and Centropodeae, which have a one- to three-celled ovary and the ovules pendulous. Also Glumales.

glumaceus (glō-mā'shūs), a. [NL. glumaceus, < L. gluma, a husk: see glum.] Glumelike; having glumes; belonging to the Glumaceae.

glumal (glō'māl), a. [NL. glumalis, < L. gluma, a husk: see glume.] Same as glumaceus.

Glumales (glō-mā'lēz), n. pl. [NL., pl. of glumalis: see glumal.] Same as Glumaceae.

glume (glum), n. [= F. glume = Sp. Pg. It. gluma, < L. gluma, a hull or husk, orig. gluma, < glubere, bark, peel, cast off the shell or bark.] A chaffy bract or bractlet characterizing the inflorescence of grasses, sedges, and other Glumaceae. By some early botanists the term was also applied to chaffy segments of the perianth, which are now called palae or paleae. See cut under Gramineae.

There was a thin film of fluid between the coats of the glumes, and when these were pressed the fluid moved about, giving a singularly deceptive appearance of the whole inside of the flower being thus filled. Darwin, Different Forms of Flowers, p. 288.

glumella (glō-mel'ā), n. [NL., dim. of L. gluma, a husk: see glume.] Same as glumelle.

glumelle (glō-mel'ā), n. [F., < NL. glumella, q. v.] The palea of grasses; also, the lodicule or scale at the base of the ovary. [Not used.]

glumellule (glō-mel'ūl), n. [= F. glumellule, < NL. glumellula, dim. of glumella, q. v.] In bot., same as lodicule.

glumiferous (glō-mif'ē-rūs), a. [NL. glumifer, < L. gluma, husk, + ferre = F. bear.] In bot., having glumes.

glumly (glum'li), adv. In a glum or sullen manner; with moroseness.

They all sat glumly on the ground. C. D. Warner, Winter on the Nile, p. 240.

glummish (glum'ish), a. [glum + -ish.] Cf. glumish.] Somewhat glum or gloomy.

With glummish darkish shade bespangled the same, that none may see. Phaer, Amiel, xi.

But of the course was set some were away space
And Boreas breath was black, and glummish chill.
Golden Mirror (1580).

glummy (glum'i), a. [A var. of glummy: see glummy, and cf. glummy, glum, a.] Dark; gloomy; dismal.

Such casual blasts may happen as are most to be feared, when the weather waxeth dark and glummy. E. Knight, Trial of Truth (1580), fol. 27.

glumness (glum'ness), n. The condition or character of being glum; sullenness. Trollope.

glumose (glō'nōs), a. [glume + -ose.] Glumous.

glumous (glō'mūs), a. [glume + -ous.] In bot., having a glume.

glump (glump), v. i. [Another form of glum, gloom, v.] To show sullenness by one's manner; appear sulky. [Colloq.]

glumphish (glum'pish), a. [glump + -ish.] Cf. glumish, glumish.] Glum.

Mr. Tom 'all sit by himself as glumphish, a knittin his brows. George Eliot, Middlemarch, VI, 4.

glumps (glump), n. pl. [See glump.] A state of sulkiness or gloominess. [Colloq.] — In the glumps, in a sulky or gloomy state; out of humor.

glumpy (glump'i), a. [glump + -y; cf. glummy, gloomy.] Sullen; sulky. [Colloq.]

He was glumpy enough when I called. T. Hook, Oliver Garvey.

glumsh (glumsh), v. i. [Var. of glunch.] Same as glunch.

glunch (glunch), v. i. [Also glumsh, glumch, an extension of glum, v. Cf. glumpy, glumish.] To frown; look sour; be in a dogged humor. [Scotch.]

An' when her marriage day does come,
Ye main us gang to glumsh an' gloom.
A. Douglas, Poems, p. 68.

glunch (glunch), n. [glunch, v.] A sudden angry look or glance; a look implying dislike, disdain, anger, displeasure, or prohibition; a frown. [Scotch.]

glut (glut), v. i.; pret. and pp. glutted, ppr. glutting. [ME. gluten, glutton, < OF. gloter, gloutir, < L. glutire, glutire, swallow, gulp down.] I. trans. 1. To swallow; especially, to swallow greedily.

And glutting of meals which weakeneth the body.
Sir J. (Walter) Scott, Narrative of Scotland.

He'll be hang'd yet; *
Though every drop of water sweat against it,
And gape at wid' at to glut him. Shak., Tempest, I, 1.

2. To fill to the extent of capacity; feast or delight to satiety; ate; gorge: as, to glut the appetite.

There is no greatness so great as vnder god one,
As the glorying of gold, that glotes these herds.
Instruction of Troy (E. K. T. A.), l. 11777.

The over haste and too speedy returne of one manner of tune (doth) too much annoy & as it were glut the care. Purcell, Art of Eng. Poets, p. 68.

You're too greedy,
And glut your appetites with the first dish.
Beau., and Pl. (7), Familiar Friends, I, 1.

Where famine never blasts the year,
Nor plague, nor earthquake glut the grave.
Bryant, Freeman's Hymn.

3. To saturate.

The menstruum, being already glutted, could not act powerfully enough to dissolve it. Hagley.

To glut the market, to overstock the market; furnish a supply of any article largely in excess of the demand, so as to occasion loss of profit or of sales.

II. intrans. To feast to satiety; fill one's self to cloying. [Rare.]

Three horses that have broken fence,
And glutted all night long broad-deep in corn.
Tennyson, Princess, II.

glut (glut), n. [In def. 2, < ME. glut, < OF. glut, glot, glout = Lr. glot = GLT. ghottio, a glutton; < OF. and It. also ad., glutinosus; from the verb.] 1. A glutton.

What glut of the gumes may any good kitchen,
He will keep it himself, & refuse it fast.
Piers Plowman's Creed (E. K. T. A.), l. 67.

2. A swallowing; that which has been swallowed.

Their devilish glut, chaf'd thunderbolts, and hail
Of iron globes.
Milton, P. L., VI, 408.

3. More of something than is desired; a superabundance; so much as to cause displeasure or satiety, etc.; specifically, in com., an over-supply of any commodity in the market; a supply above the demand.

Let him drink a little alep made with clean water and sugar, or a little small beer or ale, so that he drinke not a great glut, but in a lytel quantite.

Sir T. Elyot, Castle of Health, II, 27.

Husbands must take heed
They give no glut of kindness to their wives.
H. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, II, 2.

He shall find himself miserable, even in the very glut of his delights.

Sir R. L. Ketrage.

A glut of study and retirement in the first part of my life cast me into this; and this will throw me again into study and retirement.

Pope, To Swift.

Some of these [springs] send forth such a glut of water that, in less than a mile below the fountain head, they afford a stream sufficient to supply a great mill.

Barlow, Virginia, II, 93.

A glut of those talents which raise men to eminence.

Nassau.

4. The state of being glutted; a choking up by excess; an engorgement. [Rare.]

The water some suppose to pass from the bottom of the sea to the heads of springs through certain subterranean conduits or channels, until they were by some glut, stop, or other means arrested in their passage.

Woodward.

5. A thick wooden wedge used for splitting blocks. [Prov. Eng.] — 6. Naut.: (a) A piece of wood employed as a fulcrum in order to obtain a better leverage in raising any body, or a piece of wood inserted beneath the thing to be raised in order to prevent its recoil when freshening the nip of the lever. (b) A becket or thimble fixed on the after side of a topsail or course, near the head, to which the bunt-jigger is hooked to assist in furling the sail.—7. In brickmaking: (a) A brick or block of small size, used to complete a course. (b) A crude or green pressed brick. C. T. Davis, Bricks and Tiles, p. 89.—8. The broad-nosed eel, Anguilla latirostris. [Local, Eng.]—9. The offal or refuse of fish.

gluteus, gluteus (glŭ-tŭ-us), n.; pl. glutei, glutei (-i). [NL., < Gr. γλῦς, the rump, pl. the buttocks.] One of several muscles of the nates or buttocks, arising from the pelvis and inserted into the femur. Gluteus maximus, the scotogluteus, the outer or great gluteal muscle, notable in man for its enormous relative size and very coarse fiber, arising from the sacrum, coccyx, and adjoining parts of the pelvis, and inserted into the greater trochanter of the femur. It chiefly forms the bulk of the buttocks, is a powerful extensor of the thigh, and assists in maintaining the erect posture of the body. See cut under muscle. Gluteus medius, the mesogluteus or middle gluteal muscle, arising from the dorsum of the ilium and inserted into the great trochanter of the femur. See cut under muscle. Gluteus minimus, the entogluteus or smallest and innermost gluteal muscle, the origin and insertion of which are similar to those of the middle gluteal. In some animals certain gluteal muscles are enumerated as gluteus primus, gluteus secundus, gluteus tertius, etc., not, however, necessarily implying that they are respectively homologous with the glutei of man.

gluteal (glŭ-tŭ-ŭl), a. and n. [< gluteus + -al.] 1. a. In anat., pertaining to the glutei or to the buttocks; nateal. Gluteal artery, a branch of the internal iliac artery, which supplies the gluteal muscles. Gluteal fold, same as gluteofemoral crease (which see, under gluteofemoral). Gluteal muscles, the glutei. See gluteus. Gluteal nerves, two nerves, superior and inferior, derived from the sacral plexus, and supplying the glutei and the tensor fascie late. Gluteal region, the region of the buttocks. Gluteal ridge, the outer lip or bifurcation of the linea aspera (rough line) of the femur below the great trochanter, rough and prominent for the attachment of the tendon of the gluteus maximus (largest gluteus). Also called glutal tuberosity. Gluteal vein, the vein accompanying the gluteal artery. Gluteal vessels, the gluteal arteries and veins.

II. n. A gluteal muscle, or gluteus: as, the great, middle, or least gluteal.

glutean (glŭ-tŭ-an), a. Same as gluteal. With nude statues, seen from the front, the true aspect is constantly veiled at the moment of eclipse of the glutean muscles behind the continuous line over the hip from trunk to thigh. The Portfolio, No. cxxvii, p. 222.

gluten (glŭ-tŭn), n. [= Sp. gluten = Pg. gluten = It. glutine, < L. gluten (glutin-), also glutinum, glue; see glue.] The nitrogenous part of the flour of wheat and other grains, which is insoluble in water. On kneading wheat flour in a stream of water to remove the starch, the gluten remains as a tough elastic substance, sometimes called cheat gum. On the physical and chemical character of the gluten the baking quality of flour largely depends. Gluten is a mixture of at least four different albuminoids: gluten casein (which is similar to the casein of milk), gluten-fibrin (which has some resemblance to animal fibrin), mucidin, and gliadin.

gluten-bread (glŭ-tŭn-bred), n. A kind of bread in which there is a large proportion of gluten. It is prescribed medicinally in cases of diabetes.

gluten-casein (glŭ-tŭn-kā'sē-in), n. The vegetable casein found in gluten.

gluten-fibrin (glŭ-tŭn-fī-brin), n. The vegetable fibrin found in gluten.

gluteofemoral (glŭ-tŭ-o-fem'ŭ-rŭl), a. [< NL. glutæus + L. femur, thigh.] Pertaining to the buttocks and the thigh. Gluteofemoral crease, the transverse fold or crease of the surface which bounds the buttock below on either side, separating the glutei from the posterior femoral region, and approximately corresponding to the lower border of the great gluteal muscle. Also called gluteal fold.

gluteus, n. See gluteus.

glut-herring (glŭt'her-ing), n. The blueback, Clupea eschscholtzi, an American clupeoid fish closely related to the alewife.

glutin (glŭ-tin), n. [< glut-on + -in.] Same as glutidin.

glutinate (glŭ-ti-nat), v. t. [< L. glutinatus, pp. of glutinare, glue, draw together, < gluten (glutin-), glue; see glue, glutin.] To unite with glue; cement. Bailey, 1731.

glutination (glŭ-ti-nā'shun), n. [= Pg. glutinación, < L. glutinatio (-n-), a drawing together (used of the closing of wounds), < glutinare, glue, draw together; see glutinate.] The act of glutinating or uniting with glue. Bailey, 1731. glutinativer (glŭ-ti-nā-tiv), a. [< L. glutinatus, serving to glue or to draw together, < glutinare, glue, draw together; see glutinate.] Having the quality of cementing; tenacious. Bailey, 1731.

glutining, a. [< L. gluten (glutin-), glue, + -ing.] Gluing.

These [the beams from the moon] clean contrary, refresh and moisten in a notable manner, leaving an aquatic and viscous glutining kind of sweat upon the glass. Sir K. Digby, Sympathetic Powder.

glutinous (glŭ-ti-nŭs), a. [< L. glutinosus, gluey, viscous; see glutinous.] Same as glutinous.

glutinosity (glŭ-ti-nŭs'i-ti), n. [= F. glutinosité = Sp. glutinosidad = It. glutinosità; as glutinosus, glutinous, + -ity.] The state or quality of being glutinous; glutinosiveness.

The mutual tempering of either toward a medium glutinosity or liquefaction. Silver Sunbeam, p. 67.

glutinous (glŭ-ti-nŭs), a. [< F. glutineux = Pr. glutinos = Sp. Pg. It. glutinoso, < L. glutinosus, gluey, viscous, < gluten (glutin-), glue; see gluten, glue, glutinose.] 1. Having the quality of glue; resembling glue; viscous; viscid; tenacious.

Next this marble venomed seat, smeared with gums of glutinous heat. Milton, Comus, l. 917.

All these threads, being newly spun, are glutinous, and therefore stick to each other wherever they happen to touch. Goldsmith, The Bee, No. 4.

2. Covered with a sticky exudation; viscid.

He [Genser] says this [pickered] weed and other glutinous matter, with the help of the sun's heat, in some particular months, and some ponds apted for it by nature, do become Pikes. I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 129.

Where God Bacchus drains his cups divine, stretch'd out, at ease, beneath a glutinous pine. Keats, Lamia, l.

Also glutinosus.

glutinosness (glŭ-ti-nŭs-nŭs), n. The state or quality of being glutinous; viscosity; viscid; tenacity; glutinosity.

There is a resistance in fluids, which may arise from their elasticity, glutinosness, and the friction of their parts. Cheyne.

glutition (glŭ-ti-sh'ŭn), n. [*< L. as if glutitōn-; < glutire, swallow; see glut, v.] The act of swallowing; deglutition. [Rare.]

This, however, does not, as a rule, prevent glutition, and in some instances does not even interfere with it. Woodcut News, LIII, 1868.

glutman (glŭt'man), n.; pl. glutmen (-men). In English custom-houses, an extra officer employed when a glut of work demands assistance.

gluts (glŭts), n. Same as glut, s.

glutton (glŭt'n), n. and a. [< ME. gloton, gloton, gluton, < OF. gloton, gloton, gluton, F. gloton = Pr. gloto = Sp. gloton = Pg. glotão = It. glottone, < L. glutō (n-), glutō (n-), a glutton, < glutire, glutire, devour; see glut, v. < F. glut, n., 2.] 1. n. One who indulges to excess in eating, or in eating and drinking; one who gorges himself with food; a gourmandizer.

Alas! the shorted throats, the toudie mouth, Maketh that Eat and West, and North and South, In earth, in air, in water, men to swike, To get a gloton deynote mete and drinke. Chaucer, Pardoner's Tale, l. 68.

The drunkard and the glutton shall come to poverty. Prov. xliii. 21.

2. One who indulges in anything to excess; a greedy person.

He dradde not that no glutoun Shoulde stole his rowse. Rom. of the Rose, l. 4307.

Gluttons in murder, wanton to destroy. Granville.

The older Pliny, the most indefatigable laborer, the most voracious literary glutton of ancient times. G. P. Marsh, Lects. on Eng. Lang., xxi.

3. In zool.: (a) A popular name of the wolverene, Gulo luscus or orecticus, the largest and most voracious species of the family Mustelidae. It belongs to the same subfamily, Mustelinae, as the martens and weasels, but is a much larger animal, exceeding a badger in size, thick-set and clumsy, and somewhat resembling a small bear. It is of circumpolar distribution inhabiting northerly parts of Europe, Asia, and America. The name has been more particularly used for the animal of Europe and Asia, from which the American species has sometimes been supposed to differ, and is usually called the canadensis. They are, however, specifically identical. (b) Some other animal likened to the above. Masked glutton, a book-name of one of the parakeets, Pyrrhura larrina, from the white streak on the head and the white eye-ring. South American glutton, a book-name of the grison or Galina marten. See Grison, s. syn. 1. See epicure.

II. a. Of or belonging to a glutton; gluttonous.

Whose glutton chaps each tooth so fat as smelt their eyes be seen. Burton, Fa. Indiv.

A glutton monastery in former ages makes a hungry ministry in our days. Fuller.

glutton (glŭt'n), v. [< glutton, n.] 1. intrans. To eat or indulge the appetite to excess; gourmandize.

Thus do I pine and surfeit day by day; Or gluttoning on all, or all away. Shak., Comets, lxxxv.

Whereon in Egypt gluttoning they fed. Drayton, Morte, li.

II. trans. To overfill, as with food; glut.

Then after all your footing, fat, and wine, Glutton'd at last, return, at home to pine. Loveless, Lucasta Posthuma, p. 21.

gluttoness, n. [< glutton + -ess.] A female glutton. Colgrave.

gluttonise, v. t. See gluttonize.

gluttonish (glŭt'n-ish), a. [< glutton, n., + -ish.] Gluttonous. [Rare.]

Having now framed their gluttonish stomachs to have for food the wild benefits of nature. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, iv.

gluttonize (glŭt'n-iz), v. t.; pret. and pp. gluttonized, pp. gluttonizing. [< glutton, n., + -ize.] To eat voraciously; indulge the appetite to excess; live luxuriously. Also spelled gluttonise. [Rare.]

For what reason can you allege why you should gluttonize and devour as much as would honestly suffice so many of your brethren? Marshall, Works, II, 328.

And again, οὐκ ἐστὶν τὰς ψυχῶν διαίτησις, . . . the material demons do strangely gluttonize upon the odours and blood of sacrifices. Hallywell, Melampus (1881), p. 102.

gluttonous (glŭt'n-us), a. [< ME. glotonous, glotonous, < OF. glotonous, < gloton, a glutton; see glutton, n.] 1. Given to excessive eating; greedy; voracious; hence, grasping.

Seke thou nat with a glotonous bond to stryne and preesse the stalkes of the vyne in the first summer season. Chaucer, Boethius, l. meter 8.

Then they could smile, and fawn upon his debts, And take down th' interest into their gluttonous maws. Shak., T. of A., III, 4.

Extravagance becomes gluttonous of marvels. Is. Taylor, Nat. Hist. Enthusiasm, p. 70.

2. Characterized by or consisting in excessive eating.

The exceeding luxuriousness of this gluttonous age, wherein we press nature with over-weighty burdens, and finding her strength defective, we take the work out of her hands, and commit it to the artificial help of strong waters. Sir W. Raleigh.

Rank abundance breeds, In gross and pampered cities, sloth, and lust And wantonness, and gluttonous excess. Cooper, Task, l. 688.

gluttonously (glŭt'n-us-li), adv. In a gluttonous manner; with the voracity of a glutton; with excessive eating.

gluttonousness (glŭt'n-us-nŭs), n. Gluttony. gluttony (glŭt'n-i), n.; pl. gluttonies (-iz). [< ME. glotonie, glotonie, glotonie, glotonie, etc. (also glotonie, glotonie), < OF. glotonie, glotonie (= Pr. OSp. glotonia = It. glottomia), gluttony, < gloton, a glutton; see glutton, n.] Excess in eating, or in eating and drinking; extravagant indulgence of the appetite for food; voracity; luxury of the table.

Thauh his glotonie be of good ale he goth to a cold bed-dying. And his heued vn-heled vnheylliche ywrye.

Piers Plowman (C), xvii. 74.

For swinish gluttony Ne or looks to Heaven amidst his gorgeous feast, But with besotted base ingratitude Crams, and blasphemes his feeder. Milton, Comus, l. 778.

gluy, a. See gluey.

glyc, glyco- (glŭ, etc., < Gr. γλυκός, sweet, γλυκύς, sweet, perhaps akin to L. dulcis, sweet; see dulce, douce.) An element in some words of Greek origin, meaning 'sweet.' In some recent words this element appears in the form gluc-, gluco-.

glycerium (gliŭ-sŭ-lŭ-um), n. [< Gr. γλυκός, sweet (in glycerin), + ἔλαιον, olive-oil.] A basis for ointment, composed of finely powdered almond-meal one part, glycerin two parts, and olive-oil six parts.

Glyceria (gliŭ-sŭ-rŭ-ŭ), n. [NL. (cf. L. glycera, < Gr. γλυκός, a fem. proper name), < Gr. γλυκύς, sweet, < γλυκός, sweet.] 1. The typical genus of the family Glyceride. G. capitata of the North Sea is an example. Sartory, 1817.—2. A genus of crustaceans. Hassell, 1872.

glycerate (gliŭ-sŭ-rŭt), n. [< glycer- + -ate.] Same as glycerite.

glycorin (gli'kō-rin), n. [NL., < Gr. γλυκύς, sweet, an extension of γλυκός, sweet.] A genus of grasses, closely allied to Poa and Festuca. There are about 20 species, widely distributed through temperate regions, mostly in wet or swampy ground, and of little agricultural importance. The manna-grass, G. autumnalis, grown in shallow water, its leaves often floating; its seeds are sometimes collected in Germany and used as an article of food under the name of manna-corn, furnishing a light nutritious aliment for invalids. The red-tailed-grass or tall quaking-grass, G. canadensis, and the tall or reed-meadow-grass, G. arundinacea, are tall and stout species of the United States.

glycoric (gli's'g-rik), a. [< glycer-in + -ic.] Derived from glycerin.—Glycoric acid, $C_3H_5O_4$, an acid obtained by the cautious oxidation of glycerol. It is a monobasic acid, not crystallizable, but yields crystallizable salts.

glycorid (gli's'g-rid), n. A worm of the family Glycoridae.

Glycoridae (gli-sur'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Glycera + -idae.] A family of errant chaetopodous annelids, of the order Polychaeta. They have a slender body composed of many ringed segments; the conical prostomium with two basal palps and four terminal tentacles; a protrusile proboscis with four teeth; and no special ventral system, the red hemal fluid being contained in the somatic cavity and branchial sacs.

glycoride (gli's'g-rid or -rid), n. [< glycer-in + -ide.] In chem., a compound either of the triatomic alcohol glycerol or glycerin. Some of the glycorides exist ready formed, as natural fats, in the bodies of plants and animals, and many more may be produced artificially by the action of acid upon glycerol.

glycorin, glycorine (gli's'g-rin), n. [< Gr. γλυκύς, sweet, + -in, -ine.] A transparent, colorless, hygroscopic liquid ($C_3H_5(OH)_3$), with a sweet taste and syrupy consistence. It occurs in natural fats combined with fatty acids, and is obtained from them by saponification with alkalis or by the action of superheated steam. It is a triatomic alcohol, and dissolves the alkalis, alkaline earths, and some metallic oxides, forming compounds analogous to the alcoholates. It is used in medicine as an emollient and protective dressing, with which, from its consistence and solvent properties, many substances can be incorporated; it absorbs watery discharges, and has some astringent action. The name is also applied to mixtures of glycerin with various substances, whether involving solution or not: as, glycerin of gallic acid; glycerin of starch. It is used in the arts for a great variety of purposes: for example, in soaps and cosmetics, for preserving animal and vegetable substances, in paper-making, and in the manufacture of nitroglycerin and dynamite. Also called glycerol, glyceride, glycorum, and glycorium.—Glycerin butyrate. See butyrate.—Glycerin oment. See cement.

glycorite (gli's'g-rit), n. [< glycer-in + -ite.] The general name of a class of preparations consisting of a medicinal substance dissolved or suspended in glycerol. Also glycerate, glycerol, glycerole.

glycorize (gli's'g-riz), v. t.; pret. and pp. glycorized, ppr. glycorizing. [< glycer-in + -ize.] To mix or treat with glycerin.

Pasteur's vials containing glycorized broth.

Medical News, LIII, 216.

glycorizin, n. An improper form of glycorine.

glycerol, glycerole (gli's'a-rol, -röl), n. [< glycer-in + -ol, -ole.] 1. Name as glycerin. Glyceria is the common form, but the termination -ol is preferable, denoting an alcohol, while -in is reserved for glycorides, glucosides, and proteids.

2. Same as glycorite.

glycerule (gli's'a-röl), n. [< glycer-in + -ule.] Same as glyceryl.

glyceryl (gli's'a-ryl), n. [< glycer-in + -yl.] The hypothetical triatomic radical of glycerol and the glycorides. Also called, more suitably, properyl.

Glycimerida, Glycimeris. See Glycymerida, Glycymeris.

glycin (gli's'in), n. [< Gr. γλυκός, sweet, + -in.] Same as glycocol.

glycocholate (gli'kō-kol-ät), n. [< glycochol-ic + -ate.] A salt formed by the union of glycocholic acid with a base.

glycocholic (gli'kō-kol'ik), a. [< Gr. γλυκός, sweet, + χολή, gall: see cholol, bile.] Derived from gall: used only in the following phrase.—Glycocholic acid, $C_{26}H_{42}NO_8$, the principal acid in ox-gall, occurring in combination with alkalis. It is a monobasic acid, forming crystalline needles soluble in water.

glycocol (gli'kō-sin), n. Same as glycocol.

glycocol (gli'kō-kol), n. [< Gr. γλυκός, sweet, + κόλλη, glue.] Amido-acetic acid (CH_2NH_2COOH), a substance having weak acid and also basic properties, formed when gelatin or various other animal substances are boiled with acids or alkalis. It is a crystalline solid having a sweetish taste. Also called glycin, glycocol, and gelatin sugar.

glycogen (gli'kō-jen), n. [< Gr. γλυκός, sweet, + γένος, producing: see -gen.] 1. A substance, $C_6H_{12}O_6$, belonging to the carbohydrates. When pure it is a white, amorphous, tasteless powder, insoluble in alcohol, soluble in water, and converted by boiling with acids into dextrine. Diastase converts it into dextrine, maltose, and dextrose. Iodine gives it a reddish-brown color. Glycogen is found in many animal tissues, both of vertebrates and invertebrates, as well as in certain fungi. It is especially abundant in the liver. It is largely if not wholly derived from the carbohydrates of the food, and appears to be a reserve material deposited in the liver, which is converted as required into sugar and so enters the circulation. Also called animal starch.

2. In mycol., same as epiphium.

glycogenosis (gli'kō-jen'e-sis), n. [< Gr. γλυκός, sweet, + γένος, generation.] In pathology, the formation of glycose.

glycogenetic (gli'kō-jē-net'ik), a. Pertaining to glycogenosis.

glycogenic (gli'kō-jen'ik), a. [< glycogen + -ic.] Of or pertaining to glycogen: as, the glycogenic function of the liver.

glycogen-mass (gli'kō-jen-mās), n. Same as epiphium.

glycogenous (gli'kō-jē-nus), a. [< glycogen + -ous.] Same as glycogenic.

Similar glycogenous cells are met with in the walls of the lacunar spaces and on the "mesenteries" of the snail. Huxley and Martin, Elementary Biology, p. 311, note.

glycohemis, glycohamia (gli'kō hē'mi-gi), n. Same as glucohemis.

glycol (gli'kol), n. [< glycer(in) + (alcohol).] The general name of a class of compounds intermediate in their properties and chemical relations between alcohol and glycerol, or the bodies of which these are the types. An alcohol contains but one hydroxyl group, OH, as C_2H_5OH , or ethyl alcohol; a glycol contains two hydroxyl groups united to different carbon atoms, as $C_2H_4(OH)_2$, ethyl glycol; a glycerol contains three hydroxyl groups united to three carbon atoms, as $C_3H_5(OH)_3$. Ethyl glycol is a liquid, inodorous, of a sweetish taste, and miscible with water and alcohol.

glycolic (gli'kol'ik), a. [< glycol + -ic.] Pertaining to or derived from glycol.

Glyconian (gli'kō-ni-an), a. Same as Glyconic.

Glyconic (gli'kon'ik), a. and n. [< L. Glyconius, < Gr. Γλυκωνίης, < Γλυκός, I. Glycon, the inventor of this meter.] 1. a. Of or pertaining to Glycon, an ancient Greek poet of uncertain date; with reference to a kind of verse or meter said to have been invented by him.—2. Pertaining to a particular verse or meter, consisting of four feet, one of which is a dactyl, the others being trochees; composed or consisting of such verses: as, a glyconic system. See II.

II. n. [t. c.] In anc. pros., a meter consisting in a series similar to a trochee tetrapody catalectic (— — | — — | — — | — —), but differing from it by the substitution of a dactyl for the second trochee; by an extension of meaning, any logarithmic tetrapody, catalectic or acatalectic, in which three of the feet are trochees and one is a dactyl. A glyconic is called by recent metricians a pre-second, or third glyconic, according as the dactyl is in the first, second, or third place. Glyconics seem to have been first used by Alcaeus and Sappho. Nothing certain is known of the poet Glycon from whom this meter takes its name.

glyconin (gli'kō-nin), n. [< glyconic + -in.] In phar., an emulsion of glycerol and yolk of egg.

glycone, glycoside, etc. See glucose, etc.

glycymerid (gli-sim'g-rid), n. A member of the Glycymerida.

Glycymerida (gli-si-mēr'i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Deshayes, 1839).] < Glycymeris + -idae.] A family of siphonate bivalve mollusks, consisting of the genera Glycymeris, Panopaea, and Pholadomya; same as Saxicavida. Also Glycymerida, Glycymerides.

Glycymeris (gli-sim'g-ri-si), n. [NL. (Lamarck, 1801), after Belloni, 1553], also Glycymeris (Klein, 1753), Glycymeris, Glycymeris; < Gr. γλυκός, sweet, + μέρος, a part, a portion of food, morsel, < μέρος, a part, < μέρος, part, divide.] A genus of bivalve mollusks, used in various applications by different authors, now giving name to the Glycymerida, and referred to the family Saxicavida. G. eliqua, a boreal clam, is the best-known species; the animal is larger than the shell, which is covered with a thick shining black epidermis, and roughened within with calcareous deposits.

Glycyrrhiza (gli-si-rī-zā), n. [NL., < Gr. γλυκύς, sweet, + ρίζα, root. The E. name licorice, also spelled liquorice, and ME. glycyrride, are ult. from the same source.] A genus of leguminous perennial herbs, nearly allied to Astragalus, and including a dozen species, which are widely distributed through temperate regions. G. glabra, a native of the Mediterranean region and eastward to China, yields the licorice-root of commerce, and is cultivated in various parts of Europe. The root has a sweet taste and demulcent laxative properties. One species, G. lepidota, is found in the United States.

glycyrrhizin (gli-si-rī-zin), n. [< Glycyrrhiza + -in.] A peculiar saccharine matter ($C_{44}H_{80}O_{16}$) obtained from the root of Glycyrrhiza glabra.

glyx, glynn (gli'n), n. [W. glyn, Ir. Gael. glenn (gen. glinne), a glen, a narrow valley: see glen.] An element in some Celtic place-names, meaning 'glen': as, Glyn-crug, Glyn-taf, in Wales; Glynn in Antrim, Ireland.

glyoxal (gli'ok-sal), n. [< Gr. γλυκύς, sweet, + Ε. oxal-ic.] A white, amorphous, deliquescent solid (CHO_2HO), soluble in water and alcohol. It is an aldehyde of oxalic acid.

glyoxalic (gli'ok-sal'ik), a. [< glyoxal + -ic.] Pertaining to or derived from glyoxal.

glyph (gli'f), n. [< Gr. γλύφω, carving, carved work, < γλύφω, cut in, carve, engrave.] In sculp. and arch., a groove or channel, usually vertical, intended as an ornament. See tri-glyph.

glyphic (gli'f'ik), a. and n. [< Gr. γλυφικός, of or for carving (γ γλύφω, the art of carving), < γλύφω, carving: see glyph.] I. a. Of or pertaining to a glyph or glyphs; pertaining to carving or sculpture.

II. n. A picture or figure by which a word is implied; a hieroglyphic.

Glyphides (gli-sid'ē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. γλῦψ, pl. γλῦψιδες, the notched end of an arrow, < γλῦφω, cut in, carve; see glyph.] A family of gymnocarpous lichens, containing one British genus, Chiodecton.

Glyphidodon (gli-sid'ō-don), n. [NL., < Gr. γλῦψ, the notched end of an arrow (see Glyphides), + δόν (δοντ-) = E. tooth.] A genus of fishes, typical of the family Glyphidodontidae. Also Glyphidodon.

Glyphidodontes (gli-sid'ō-don'tēs), n. pl. [NL., pl. of Glyphidodon.] A group of fishes: a name substituted for Glyphidoda, and an incorrect synonym of Pomacentrida. S. H. Scudler.

Glyphidodontidae (gli-sid'ō-don'ti-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Glyphidodon (I) + -idae.] A family of acanthopterygian fishes, typified by the genus Glyphidodon or Glyphodon: same as Pomacentrida.

Glyphipterygids (gli-fip'tē-ri-gi'dē), n. pl. [NL., < Glyphipteryx (q. v.) + -idae.] A family of thineid moths, taking name from the genus Glyphipteryx. The head is globular, with smooth, moderately arched front; there are no ocelli; the palpi are hair-like and moderately long; the proboscis is rolled, and the fore wings have the hind border oblique. The larvae are leaf miners, or live in the scales of grasses.

Glyphipteryx (gli-fip'tē-ri-ks), n. [NL. (Hübner, 1816).] < Gr. γλῦψ, the notched end of an arrow (see Glyphides), + πτερόν, wing.] A genus of thineids, typical of the family Glyphipterygidae, having the palpi laterally flattened. The larvae eat the seed-heads of grasses. Several European and three North American species are described.

Glyphisodia (gli-fis'ō-di-ā), n. pl. [NL., an erroneous formation, now displaced by the correct recent form Glyphidodontes, q. v.] A group of fishes: name as Glyphidodontes. C. S. Rafinesque, 1815.

Glyphisodon (gli-fis'-o-don), n. [NL., an erroneous formation, now displaced by the correct recent form Glyphodon.] Same as Glyphodon. Lacépède, 1802.

glyphoceratid (gli-f'-o-sor'-a-tid), n. A cephalopod of the family Glyphoceratidae.

Glyphoceratidae (gli-f'-o-sor'-a-ti-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. γλῡφω, carved, + κέρα (keras), horn, + -idae.] A family of Goniatitinae. "They have depressed whorls, semilunar in cross-section; the sutures with divided ventral lobes in the higher forms, but not in the lower; the first pair of lateral lobes pointed, and the large . . . saddles entire in some species and divided in others." Proc. Nat. Soc. Nat. Hist., 1893, p. 322. Also Glyphoceratidae.

Glyphodes (gli-f'-o-dēz), n. [NL. (Guenée, 1854), < Gr. γλῡφω, carving (engraving); see glyph.] A genus of pyralid moths, of the family Margariidae, composed of four beautiful East Indian species of striking coloration.

glyphograph (gli-f'-o-graf), n. [< Gr. γλῡφω, carving (engraving), + γραφω, write.] A plate formed by glyphotography, or an impression taken from such a plate.

glyphograph (gli-f'-o-graf), v. t. [< glyphograph, n.] To form plates by glyphotography.

glyphographer (gli-fog'-ra-fer), n. One versed in, or one who practices, glyphotography.

glyphographic (gli-f'-o-graf-ik), a. [< glyphography + -ic.] Of or pertaining to glyphotography.

glyphotography (gli-fog'-ra-fē), n. [As glyphograph + -y.] A kind of electrolysis by means of which plates engraved in relief are made, from which impressions can be taken. A copper plate is covered with a ground such as is employed in ordinary etching, but of considerable thickness, and this ground is cut away by etching or engraving tools so as to expose the metal plate. From this the electro cast is made, the recesses or incisions in the ground constituting the raised ridges which form the design of the glyphotograph.

Glypta (glipt'-a), n. [NL. (Gravenhorst, 1820), < Gr. γλῡπτός, carved; see glyptic.] An important genus of hymenopterous parasites, of the family Ichnumonidae and subfamily Pimplinae, of small size, usually infesting microlepidopterous larvae. There are about 40 European and 30 North American species.

glyptic (glipt'-ik), a. [< MGr. γλῡπτικός, < Gr. γλῡπτός, lit. for carving, carved (noun, γλῡπτον, a carved image), verbal adj. of γλῡφω, carve; see glyph.] 1. Pertaining to carving or engraving; as, the glyptic art. See glyptics.

It will be convenient after noticing sculpture in marble to take next in order Bronzes and Terracottas; we thus pass by a natural transition from Glyptic to Plastic Art. C. T. Newton, Art and Archaeol., p. 50.

2. In mineral, figured.

glyptics (glipt'-iks), n. [Pl. of glyptic; see -ics.] The art of carving or engraving. The word is applied especially to engraving on gems or hard stones, now performed with diamond-powder and diamond-pointed instruments; also to the cutting of designs upon such animal substances as shells, coral, and ivory, and such vegetable products as box, ebony, and other hard woods.

glyptodipterine (glipt'-o-dip'-to-rin), a. and n. I. a. Pertaining to the Glyptodipterini.

II. n. One of the Glyptodipterini.

Glyptodipterini (glipt'-o-dip'-to-ri-ni), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. γλῡπτός, carved, + διπτερος, having two wings; see dipterous.] In Huxley's system of classification, a group of Devonian ganoid fishes, of the suborder Crossopterygii. Its technical characters are: two dorsal fins placed far back opposite the two ventrals, acutely lobate pectorals, and dendroid dentition. It is divided into those with rhomboid and those with cycloid scales, respectively represented by such genera as Glyptodroma and Holoptichius.

Glyptodon (glipt'-o-don), n. [NL. (so named from its fluted teeth), < Gr. γλῡπτός, carved, + ὄνως (odon) = E. tooth.] 1. The typical and best-known genus of the family Glyptodontidae; the long-tailed fossil armadillo-like glyptodonts, with 6 toes on the hind feet and 4 on the fore, the fifth digit of which is wanting. Species are G. clavipes and G. reticulatus, from the Pleistocene of South America. — 2. [I. c.] An animal of the family Glyptodontidae or Hoplophoridae; one of the gigantic fossil armadillos of South America. They are all distinguished from the living armadillos not only by their superior size, but by having the carapace composed of a single solid piece without movable segments, and also by possessing a ventral shield or plastron. The superficial resemblance to tortoises is striking; the feet are like those of some turtles, and, as in chelonians, the head could be withdrawn into the shell, though the rest of the vertebral column is a solid tube. The genera are several and the species rather numerous.

glyptodont (glipt'-o-dont), a. and n. [< NL. glyptodont (t-).] I. a. Having fluted teeth; specifically, of or pertaining to the Glyptodontidae.

II. n. A glyptodon.

Also glyptodontine.

glyptodontid (glipt'-o-dont'id), n. One of the Glyptodontidae.

Glyptodontidae (glipt'-o-dont-i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Glyptodon (t-) + -idae.] A family of extinct armadillos of South America, represented by the genus Glyptodon. It formerly contained all those animals, but is now restricted to those of the single genus named, others being placed in Hoplophoridae. See cut under Glyptodon.

glyptodontine (glipt'-o-dont'in), a. and n. [< glyptodont + -ine.] Same as glyptodont.

glyptograph (glipt'-o-graf), n. [< Gr. γλῡπτός, carved, + γραφω, write.] An engraving on a gem or other small object. See gem-engraving.

glyptographer (glipt'-og'-ra-fer), n. An engraver on gems or the like.

glyptographic (glipt'-o-graf-ik), a. [< glyptography + -ic.] Of or pertaining to glyptography; describing the methods of engraving on precious stones or the like.

A particularly valuable part of this introduction is the glyptographic lithology. British Critic, Oct., 1797.

glyptography (glipt'-og'-ra-fē), n. [As glyptograph + -y.] 1. The art or process of carving or engraving, particularly of engraving on gems or the like. — 2. A description of the art of gem-engraving. — 3. The knowledge of engraved gems.

Glyptosauridae (glipt'-o-saur-i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Glyptosaurus + -idae.] A family of fossil saurians from the Tertiary, typified by the genus Glyptosaurus; so called from the sculptured scales.

Glyptosaurus (glipt'-o-saur-us), n. [NL., < Gr. γλῡπτός, carved, + σαῦρος, lizard.] The typical genus of Glyptosauridae. O. C. Marsh, 1871.

glyptotheca (glipt'-o-the'-ka), n. [pl. glyptotheca (-ae).] [NL., < Gr. γλῡπτός, a carved image, noun, of γλῡπτός, carved (see glyptic), + θεκα, a case, a repository; see theca.] A building or room for the preservation of works of sculpture.

glysteri (glist'-er), n. A variant of clyster.

G. M. An abbreviation of Grand Master.

Gmelina (mel'-i-nā), n. [NL., named after S. G. Gmelin, professor of natural history at St. Petersburg (died 1774).] A genus of verbenaaceous shrubs and trees, including 8 species of eastern Asia and Australia. G. Leichthii, known in Australia as the beech or camellia-tree, is a fine timber-tree, the wood of which has a close silvery grain and is much prized for flooring and the decks of vessels.

gmelinite (mel'-i-nit), n. [Named after Christian Gottlob Gmelin of Tübingen (1792-1860).] A zeolite mineral closely related to chabazite in form and composition, and like it often occurring in rhombohedral crystals. It varies in color from white to flesh-red. Ledererite is a variety from Nova Scotia.

gn- This initial combination, in which the g formerly pronounced, is now silent, occurs in (a) words of Anglo-Saxon origin, as *gnat*¹, gnar (and obs. gnarl, gnide, etc.); (b) words of Low German (rarely of High German) or Scandinavian origin, in which gn- is variable to or stands for kn-, as gnag, gnarl, *gnarl*², *gnarl*³, *gnarl*⁴, *gnarl*⁵, *gnarl*⁶, *gnarl*⁷, *gnarl*⁸, gnarled (nâr'led), a. [< gnarl + -ed.] 1. Full of gnarls or rough knots; gnarly.

With thy sharp and sulphurous bolt Split'st the unweagedable and gnarled oak.

Shak., M. fur M., II. 2.

The gnarled, veteran boles still send forth vigorous and blossoming boughs.

R. Taylor, Lands of the Saracen, p. 42.

Hence—2. Cross-grained; perverse.

gnarling (nâr'ling), n. [Verbal n. of gnarl, v.] Roughened ridging or mulling on the edge of a set-screw or other part of a machine. It is made with a gnarling-tool for the purpose of affording a firm hold. Also called gnarled work.

gnarling-tool (nâr'ling-tôl), n. A tool for making gnarled work like that on the edge of a thumb-screw. Also knarling-tool.

gnarly (nâr'li), a. [Prop. knarly; < gnarl, v. + -ly.] Having rough or distorted knots.

Till, by degrees, the tough and gnarly trunk Be divid in sunder. Morison, Antonio's Revenge.

gnarry, a. See knarry.

gnash (nash), v. [Early mod. E. gnashe (cf. ME. gnachen, gnachen, mod. E. as if gnach*, in part appar. a var. of knachen, mod. E. knack); a var. of earlier gnast: see gnast.] 1. trans. To snap, grate, or grind (the teeth) together, as in anger or pain.

The one in hand an yron whip did strayne,
The other brandished a bloody knife;
And both did gnash their teeth, and both did threaten life.

Spenser, F. Q., II. vii. 21.

All thine enemies have opened their mouth against thee: they hiss and gnash the teeth.

Lam. II. 10.

His looks and heard he tears, he beats his breast,
His teeth he gnasher, and his hands he wrings.

J. Beaumont, Psyché, III. 188.

II. intrans. To snap or grate the teeth together, as in rage or pain. [Rare.]

The Macedon perceiving hurt gan gnash,
But yet his mynde he bent in any wise
Him to forbear.

Diath of Zorua.

There they him laid
Gnashing for anguish, and despite, and shame.

Milton, P. L., VI. 360.

gnash (nash), n. [< gnash, v.] A snap; a sudden bite. [Rare.]

A beast in the hills that went biting every living thing, he appeared, . . . made his gnash, and was gone.

Geo. MacDonald, Warlock o' Glenwarlock, p. 28.

gnashing (nash'ing), n. [Verbal n. of gnash, v.] The act of snapping, grating, or grinding together (the teeth), as in anguish or despair.

There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

Mat. VIII. 12.

gnashingly (nash'ing-li), adv. In a gnashing manner; with gnashing.

gnasty, v. t. [Appar. a var. of gnast, with sense of gnap.] To gnash at with the teeth. [Paleo-graph.]

gnast, n. [ME., also knast; < AS. gnat (in comp. fyrgnat, 'fire-spark') = OHG. gnasta* (spelled ganeasta), gnesta, cnesta, f., ganesta*, gnesta, gnansta, m., MHG. ganesta, ganest, ganest, gnaneste, gnanest, f. and m., also OHG. ganestra, ganestra, ganestra, MHG. ganester, ganester, ganester, ganester, ganester, ganester, f., G. dial. ganster = leel. gnasti, neisti = Sw. gnista = Dan. gnist, a spark, sparkle. The OHG. MHG. forms in gan-, gn-, appar. indicate an orig. prefix ga-, ge- (= AS. ge-, etc.: see g-), to which in later use the accent receded, whence the later forms ganster, gnaster, and prob. the mod. dial. reduced form gan, a spark, in which, however, some etymologists have sought the root of the word. From the G. form is derived the E. term ganister, q. v.] A spark; a dying spark; a dead spark, as of a candle snuffed.

The root of him as a gnast shal be. Wydif, Isa. v. 24.
And goere strongthe shal ben as a deed sparke (var. deed gnasta, in earlier version gnast) of a fax top (as low, A. V.)
and goere work as a sparke. Wydif, Isa. I. 31.

Knast or gnasty of a kandel, emanetara.

Pympst, Parv., p. 278.

gnast, v. t. and i. [< ME. gnastica, gnastica = East Fris. gnastern, knastern = LG. knastern, more commonly gnastern, also gnastern = G. knastern, knastern, gnash = leel. gnasta (strong verb, pret. gnast), crack (> gnastan, a gnashing), = Dan. knaste, crush with the teeth, gnaste, eat noisily (cf. knast, crush with the teeth). Cf. MHG. gnastern, knastern = G. knastern = leel. gnastern, gnash the teeth, gnast as a dog, = D. knastern, knastern = G. knastern, gnash, etc.:

words regarded as imitative, and hence variable in form.] Same as gnash.

Good son, thy teethe be not playnge, gnyng, so gnast.

Robins Book (R. E. T. S.), p. 126.

The gnast shal walke the rightwa, and gnast upon hym with his teeth. Wydif, Pa. XXXVI. (XXXVII.) 12 (XII.).

gnasting, n. [< ME. gnastyn, gnasting, verbal n. of gnasten, gnash: see gnast.] Same as gnashing.

Ther endles gnasting is of toth.

Cursor Mundi (Fairfax MS.), l. 36700.

gnat (nat), n. [< ME. gnat (pl. gnatwes), < AS. gnat (pl. gnattas), a gnat (l. culer, cynipe). Appar. connected with ME. gnit: see gnit.] 1. A small two-winged fly, Culex pipiens, of the family Culicidae, suborder Nemocera, and order Diptera, called in American mosquito. The male has plumose antennae and does not bite, though having a kind of rostrum or beak. The female bites with a stinging proboscis, and her antennae are filiform and but slightly pilose. The larva and pupa are aquatic. According to Westwood the term gnat should be restricted to insects of the family Culicidae, and midge should be applied to the Chironomidae.

After thy text, ne after thy rubric he
I wol not wirche as muchel as a gnat.

Chaucer, Prologue to Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 347.

How hath she (nature) bestowed all the five senses in a gnat?

Holland, tr. of Pliny, xl. 2.

Gnats are unmoted whereoev'er they fly,
But eagles gaz'd upon with every eye.

Shak., Lucius, l. 1014.

2. Any other insect of the family Culicidae.—3. A nematoceros dipterous insect; a midge. There are several families. The Myzomphidae are known as fungus gnats or gnat gnats. The Ctenodomyzidae include the gall gnats. The buffalo gnat is a species of Simulium family Simuliidae (see cut under Simulium), other simuliids are known as black gnats and turkey gnats. Species of Bibionidae and Chironomidae are also called gnats. See the compounds and technical words.

gnat (nat), n. A bird: same as knut.
gnat-catcher (nat'kach'er), n. A bird of the genus Polyptila, of which there are about 12 American species. The blue-gray gnatcatcher, Polyptila corvina, is a very common migratory insectivorous bird inhabiting woodlands of the United States. It is 4½ inches long, bluish gray above and white below with black wings and tail edged with white, the male with a black forehead.

Blue-gray Gnatcatcher (Polyptila corvina).

gnat-flower (nat'flou'er), n. Same as bee-orchid.

gnath (nâ'thal), a. [< Gr. gnathos, jaw, + -al.] Same as gnathic.

Of these three primary segments (macrozonites) of the primitive body, the first corresponds to the sum of the jaw-bearing (gnathophorous) metameres—gnathal macrozonite; the second, the sum of the limb-bearing metameres—thoracic macrozonite, and finally the third to the abdomen—abdominal macrozonite.

Amer. Naturalist, XXII. 641.

Gnathaptera (nâ-thap'ter-â), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. gnathos, jaw, + NL. aptera, q. v.] In Latreille's system of classification, one of nine orders of Insecta, including a majority of the Linnean Aptera, divested of the crustaceans.

gnathapterous (nâ-thap'ter-us), a. [< NL. gnathapterus, < Gr. gnathos, jaw, + pteros, wing.] Of or pertaining to the Gnathaptera.

gnat-hawk (nat'hak), n. The night-jar or goat-sucker, Caprimulgus europæus: so called from its hawking for gnats on the wing. [Hampshire, Eng.]

Gnathia (nâ'thi-â), n. [NL. (Loach, 1818), < Gr. gnathos, jaw.] The typical genus of isopoda of the family (Gnathiidae). G. ovina is a New England species. This generic name covers both ovina and fronzo, the latter being the female of the former.

gnathic (nath'ik), a. [< Gr. gnathos, jaw, + -ic.] Of or pertaining to the jaws; specifically, in cranium, pertaining to the alveolar of the jaws; alveolar: as, the gnathic or alveolar index (which see, under craniometry). Also gnathal.

The mean gnathic index of the two skulls, 1.066, is therefore much higher than that of the Andanacanthus.

Jour. Anthropol. Inst., XVIII. 2.

gnathidium (nâ-thid'i-um), n.; pl. gnathidia (-ia). [NL., < Gr. gnathos, jaw, + dim. -idium.] The mandibular ramus of a bird's bill; either prong or fork of the lower mandible.

gnathid (nath'i-id), n. An isopod of the family Gnathiidae.

Gnathiidae (nâ-thi'i-dê), n. pl. [NL., < Gnathia + -idae.] A family of isopod crustaceans, having apparently but 3 thoracic somites and 6 pairs of legs of normal form, and notable for the great difference between the sexes. The family is also called Ancorida.

gnathite (nath'it), n. [< Gr. gnathos, the jaw, + -ite.] In zoöl., one of the appendages of the mouth of an arthropod or articulate animal, as a mandible, maxilla, maxilliped, gnathopod, etc. Such appendages are modified limbs, as is well seen in crustaceans, in which there are appendages partaking of the characters both of jaws and of legs between the true mandibles and the ambulatory limbs. See gnathopodite, and cut under Scalopendra.

In the Arachnida and the Foripalides the gnathites are completely pediform.

Quarry, Anat. Invert., p. 228.

The mandibles, . . . the maxillae, and the maxillipeds (of the crawfish) thus constitute six pairs of gnathites.

Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 208.

gnathitis (nâ-thi'tis), n. [< Gr. gnathos, jaw, + -itis.] In pathol., inflammation of the jaw.

Gnatho (nâ'thò), n. [NL., < Gr. gnathos, full-mouth (in later comedy, as a proper name of a parasite), < gnathos, jaw.] 1. A genus of tiger-beetles or Cicindelina: same as Megacephala. Illiger, 1807.—2. A genus of wasps, of the family Crabronidae. Klug, 1810.—3. A genus of hymenopterous parasites, of the family Chalcididae. Curtis, 1829.

Gnathocrinites (nath'ô-kri-ni'têz), n. [NL., < Gr. gnathos, jaw, + crinites, lily: see crinites and crinites, Encriintes.] A genus of fossil crinoids.

Gnathocrinoides (nath'ô-kri-ni-dô-ê), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. gnathos, jaw, + NL. crinoides, q. v.] A group of crininites, taking name from the genus Gnathocrinites.

Gnathodon (nath'ô-don), n. [NL., < Gr. gnathos, jaw, + odon (odon) = E. tooth.] 1. A genus of bivalve mollusks: same as Rangia. ti. cuneatus is the cuneate clam of Louisiana, etc. Rang, 1834.—2. A genus of tooth-billed pigeons: same as Didunculus. See cut under Didunculus.

Gnathodontina (nath'ô-don-ti'nâ), n. pl. [NL., < Gnathodon (-odon) + -ina.] A subfamily of tooth-billed pigeons: same as Didunculina. H. E. Strickland, 1848.

Gnathodus (nath'ô-dus), n. [NL. (cf. Gnathodus), < Gr. gnathos, jaw, + odus (odus) = E. tooth.] 1. A genus of fishes.—2. A genus of hemipterous insects, of the family Cicadellidae. Fisher, 1893.

gnathonic, gnathonical (nâ-than'ik, -i-kal), a. [< L. Gnathonicus, < Gr. gnathos, in comedy, the name of a parasite (as in Terence's play "Eunuchus"), < gnathos, full-mouth, < gnathos, jaw.] Fluttering; parasitical.

Admirably well spoken; angelical tongue!
Gnathonicall Calcutta!

Morison, What you Will, II. 1.

That Jack's is somewhat of a gnathonic and parasitic soul, or stomach, all Bideford apple women know.

Kingley, Westward Ho, p. 150.

gnathopod (nath'ô-pod), n. and n. [NL. gnathopus (-pod-), < Gr. γνῆθς, jaw, + παῖς (pod-) = E. foot.] 1. a. Jaw-footed; of or pertaining to the Gnathopoda, in any sense. Also gnathopodous.

II. n. A member of the Gnathopoda, of any kind.

Gnathopoda (nā-thop'ô-dā), n. pl. [NL., naut. pl. of gnathopus; see gnathopod.] 1. The xiphosures or horseshoe crabs regarded as an order of Arachnida. Straus-Durckheim, 1829.—2. In some systems of classification, a subclass or suborder of Crustacea, corresponding to Eutomstraca in a broad sense; the lower series of the crustaceans, contrasted with the malacostracans or Thoracopoda.

Instead of the terms Malacostraca and Eutomstraca the terms Thoracopoda and Gnathopoda, which embody the salient character in each subclass.

H. Woodward, Encyc. Brit., VI. 654.

3. An exact synonym of Arthropoda considered as a prime division of a phylum Appendiculata (which see). E. R. Lankester. [Little used.]

gnathopodite (nā-thop'ô-dit), n. [As gnathopod + -ite.] One of the limbs which in crustaceans and other arthropods are modified into mouth-parts; a mouth-foot, jaw-foot, or foot-jaw; a maxilliped; a gnathite.

gnathopodous (nā-thop'ô-dus), a. [As gnathopod + -ous.] Same as gnathopod and arthropodous.

gnathostegite (nā-thos'te-jit), n. [< Gr. γνάθος, jaw, + στεγῆ, roof, + -ite.] In Crustacea, a lamellar expansion of the ischiopodite and meropodite of the external maxilliped or third thoracic limb, which with its fellow covers the other mouth-parts. It may be terminated by a small jointed endognathal palp.

Gnathostoma (nā-thos'tô-mā), n. [NL., < Gr. γνάθος, jaw, + στόμα, mouth.] A genus of nematoid entozoic worms, found in the stomach of the Felidae or cat tribe. R. Owen. See Chracanthus, 2.

Gnathostomata (nath'ô-stô'mā-tā), n. pl. [NL., pl. of Gnathostoma, q. v.] 1. A group of entomozoa crustaceans, containing the phyllopods, copepods, and ostracodes, as a suborder of Eutomstraca.—2. A tribe of true copepods, having a completely segmented body and masticatory mouth-parts, and being for the most part not parasitic. It contains the families Cyclopidæ, Calanidæ, and Notodelphyidæ. Claus.

gnathostomatous (nath'ô-stom'â-tus), a. [< Gnathostoma + -ous.] Pertaining to the Gnathostomata. Also gnathostomous.

gnathostomi (nā-thos'tô-mi), n. pl. [NL., pl. of gnathostomus; see gnathostomous.] The jaw-mouthed series of skulled vertebrates, including all of these excepting the Cyclostomi or Mosnorhina (hags and lampreys). Like Amphibia, with which it is continuous, the term expresses rather an evolutionary series than a definite zoological group of animals.

gnathostomus (nā-thos'tô-mus), a. [< NL. gnathostomus, < Gr. γνάθος, jaw, + στόμα, mouth.] 1. Having an under jaw; specifically applied to the Gnathostomus.—2. Same as gnathostomatous.

gnathotheca (nath'ô-thô'kē), n. [NL., < Gr. γνάθος, the jaw, + θήκη, case.] In ornith., the integument of the gnathidium; the horny or bony investment of the under mandible. [Little used.]

Gnathoxys (nā-thok'sis), n. [NL. (Westwood, 1843), < Gr. γνάθος, jaw, + ξύς, sharp.] 1. A genus of caraboid ground-beetles of Australia, comprising about 12 large species, black, broadly convex, with irregularly foveolate elytra.—2. A genus of ichneumon-flies, with two European species. Westwood, 1844.

gnatling (nat'ling), n. [< gnat + -ling.] A little gnat; used contemptuously of a person.

But if some man more hardy than the rest
Shall dare attack these gnatlings in their nest
At once they rise with impotence of rage,
Whet their small stings, and buzz about the stage.

Churchill, Rivalry.

gnat-snapt, n. Same as gnat-snapper, 1.
The little gnat-snapt (worthy princes boards),
And the greenie parrot, falser of one word,
Wait on the phoebe, and admire her tresses
And gaze themselves in her blew golden plumes.

De Barrios (trans.)

gnat-snapper (nat'snap'er), n. 1. A bird that catches gnats for food; probably the bee-eater. Hakewill.—2. A stupid gaping fellow.

Grout-head gnat-snappers, lob-dotters, gaping change-lings.

Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, l. 25.

gnatter (nat'ôr), v. i. [E. dial.; cf. gnast, gnax.] 1. To gnaw.—2. To grumble. [Prov. Eng.] gnat-worm (nat'wôrm), n. The larva of a gnat.

gnaw (nā), v. [< ME. gnawen, gnügen (pret. gnaw, gnaw, pl. gnawen, pp. gnawen), < AS. gnagan (pret. gnôg*, pl. for-gnôgon, *pp. gnagen) = D. knagen, knaunen = East Fries. knagen = OLG. enagan = Lat. (Brem.) gnauen, with freq. gnawin, gnaggeln = OHG. gnagan, nagan, and chnagan, MHG. nagen, G. nagen = Iscl. gnaga, mod. naga = Sw. gnaga = Norw. gnaga and knaga = Dan. gnave and nage, gnaw. Hence gnag, nag, secondary forms, related to gnaw as drag is to drew.] I. trans. 1. To bite off little by little; bite or scrape away with the front teeth; erode or eat into.

His children wende that it for honger was That he his armes gnaw (var. gnue).

Chaucer, Monk's Tale, l. 458.

The Volaces have much corn; take these rats thither,
To gnaw their garners.

Shak., Cor., l. 1.

They were to eat their bread, not gnawing it after the manner of rustics, but curialiter, like gentlemen, after a courtly fashion.

Contemporary Rev., LIII. 60.

2. To bite upon, as in close thought, vexation, rage, etc.

Then gnaw'd his pen, then dash'd it on the ground.

Pope, Dunciad, l. 117.

At this he turn'd all red and paled his hall,
Now gnaw'd his under, now his upper lip.

Tennyson, Geraint.

3. To wear away as if by continued biting; consume; fret; waste.

Thou, in envy of him, gnaw'dst thyself.

B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, l. 1.

Some derive the word Rhodus (modern Rhodes) from the Latin word rodere, which signifies to gnaw, because in certain places it doth continually gnaw and eat his banks.

Coryat, Crudities, l. 62.

To bite or gnaw a file. See file.—Syn. 1. Chew. See rat.

II. intrans. 1. To act by or as if by continual biting away of small fragments or portions.

Take from my heart those thousand thousand Furies,
That restless gnaw upon my life, and gnaw me!

Fletcher (and another), False One, iv. 3.

If a serpent gnawing in our bowels be a representation of an insupportable misery here, what will that be of the Worm that never dies?

Stillington, Sermons, l. v.

Wretched hunger gnaweth at my heart.

William Morris, Earthly Paradise, II. 184.

2. To bite or nibble at the hook, as fish. [Fishermen's slang.] gnawt, n. [< gnaw, v.] A gnawing.

Nine days I struggled—think the cruel strife,
The gnaw of anguish, and the waste of life!

Boysie, Written in the Palace of Falkland.

gnawable (nā'q-bl), a. [< gnaw, v. + -able.] That may be gnawed.

Undisturbed, the rats played in wild riot through my hut during the day, and in the night gnawed everything gnawable.

H. O. Forbes, Eastern Archipelago, p. 484.

gnawed (nād), p. a. In bot., irregularly toothed, as if from gnawing; erose.

gnawer (nā'êr), n. 1. One who or that which gnaws or corrodes.

They [porcupines] are great gnawers, and will gnaw your house down if you are not watchful.

J. Burroughs, The Century, XXXVI. 617.

2. In zool.: (a) A rodent. (b) pl. The Rodentia, Romeres, or Glires.

gnawing (nā'ing), n. [< ME. gnawinge = D. knaging; verbal n. of gnaw, v.] The act of continued biting, consuming, or fretting.

Now therefore let us here rehearse the contention of familiar things, the gnawing at the heart, and the fretting of mind, & vows, promises and requests made of diabolic persons.

Hall, Hen. VII., an. 19.

gneiss (nīs), n. [< G. gneiss (as defined); said to be connected with OHG. gneista, etc., MHG. gneiste, etc., a spark; see gnast and ganster. Cf. the meaning of mica.] A rock which consists essentially of the same mineral elements as granite, namely orthoclase, quartz, and mica, but in which there is a more or less distinctly foliated arrangement of the constituent minerals, and especially of the mica. It appears in a great variety of forms, and shows all stages of passage from true granite to a perfectly schistose condition, in which case the bedding disappears, and the rock becomes a true mica-schist. Porphyritic gneiss is characterized by the presence of large distinct crystals or rounded kernel-like masses of feldspar. Gneiss often contains hornblende instead of or associated with mica, and then receives the name of hornblende or amphibolite. Some gneisses are undoubtedly of eruptive origin; other varieties are admitted by most geologists to be metamorphosed sedimentary masses. As is the case with granite, so in gneiss the orthoclase is sometimes associated with plagioclase. See granite.

gneissic (nī'sik), a. [< gneiss + -ic.] Of, pertaining to, or resembling gneiss; gneissose.

Gray dacite is abundant about the southern base of the mountain, in smooth cliffs and ledges, and has a remarkably gneissic appearance.

Science, III. 512.

gneissoid (nī'soid), a. [< gneiss + -oid.] Resembling gneiss in structure, especially with reference to the foliated arrangement of the constituents. Rocks are called gneissoid when they have the gneissic structure only imperfectly developed.

gneissose (nī'sôs), a. [< gneiss + -ous.] Having the qualities of, resembling, or exhibiting the texture or structure of gneiss.

Granite, but with gneissose aspect. Nature, XXX. 44.

Gnetaceæ (nē-tā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Gnetum + -aceæ.] A gymnospermous order of shrubs or small trees, usually jointed, with opposite leaves and monoclous or dioecious flowers. The perianth of the male flower is membranous and two-lobed, and that of the female flower utricular. The only genera are Gnetum, Ephedra, and Welwitschia.

gnetaceous (nē-tā'shius), a. [< Gnetaceæ + -ous.] Belonging to or resembling the Gnetaceæ.

In the Gnetaceous Ephedra altissima, a process of tall formation goes on in the osopore. Angew. Bot., II. 428.

Gnetum (nē'tum), n. [NL. (Rumphius, 1707), altered from Gnemon (Rumphius, 1741), < gnemon or gnemo, given as its name in the island of Ternate, Malay archipelago.] A genus of climbing shrubs, type of the order Gnetaceæ, including 15 species, natives of tropical regions. They have jointed stems, opposite dilated leaves, flowers verticillate in terminal spikes, and the fruit often drupeous. The fruit of G. gnemon and some other Asiatic species is edible, and the young leaves are used as a vegetable.

gnewt. An obsolete preterit of gnaw.

gnidet, v. t. [< ME. gniden, < AS. gniden (pret. gnat, pl. gnidon, pp. ge-gniden), rub, break to pieces, = OHG. gnitan, MHG. gniten = Iscl. gnidka = Sw. gnida = Dan. gnide, rub.] To rub; bruise; pound; break in pieces.

Herbes he sought and fond,

And gnideth hem bitwix his hond.

Arthur and Merlin, p. 94. (Halliwell.)

gnit, n. [ME. gnit, pl. gnyttas = LG. gnid = G. gnitz, a gnaw, = Iscl. gnit, mod. nitr = Norw. gnit = Sw. gnit = Dan. gnid, a nit. Cf. gnat.] The AS. hmit, E. nit, is appar. a different word; see nit.] A gnat.

gnodt, v. t. [ME. gnodden, gnudden, a var. of gnudlen, a secondary form of gniden, rub (cf. Iscl. gnudda (Jonsson, Ordbyg. p. 179), the usual Iscl. form being gnida, mod. nua, rub); see gnide.] To rub together; bruise; pound; break to pieces.

Corn up among unsowe of mannes hond,

The which they gnoddet, and set that half inow.

Chaucer, Former Age, l. 11.

gnoft, n. [< ME. gnof, usually explained as a miser, but rather a churl, a lout (cf. 2d quot.); origin unknown. Cf. Sc. gnaff, any small or stunted object.] A churl; a curmudgeon.

Whilom ther was dwellynge at Oxenford

A riche gnof, that gestes heeld to bord,

And of his craft he was a carpenter.

Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 2.

The country gnoofer, Hob, Dick, and Hick,

With clubbos and clouted shoon,

Shall fill up Dussyn dale

With slaughtered bodies soone.

Norfolk Purles (1825) (Halliwell.)

Gnoma (nō'mē), n. [NL. (Fabricius, 1801); so called in allusion to its dwelling in the earth; < gnome.] A genus of longicorn beetles, of the family Cerambycidae, containing about 20 species, confined to Australia and the Malay peninsula.

gnome (nôm; L. pron. nō'mē), n. [< L. gnomo, a sentence, maxim, < Gr. γνῶμη, thought, judgment, intelligence, a thought, a judgment, an opinion, a maxim, < γνῶμαι, γνῶμαι = L. asserere, know, = E. know; see know.] A brief reflection or maxim; an aphorism; a saying; a saw.

They [Mr. Lowell's English admirers] have most of them a certain acquaintance, not with his works—for in that respect a hackneyed gnome or two of Bird-o'-Freedom Pavin's constitutes their whole equipment—but with the high estimate in which he is held by all competent English critics.

Portnightly Rev., quoted in Littell's Living Age, CLXVI.

Looking at His method or style, we find that not a gnome of His teaching was in gnomes, or brief, pointed sentences, easy to be remembered.

G. P. Fisher, Begin. of Christianity, p. 422.

—Syn. See aphorism.

gnome (nôm), n. [= D. G. Dan. Sw. gnöm, < F. gnome = Sp. Pg. It. gnomo, a gnome, a fictitious name, (by Paracelsus?) applied taken < Gr. γνῶμη, thought, intelligence, or γνῶμαι, one that knows or examines, an inspector or guardian: see *gnome*¹, guardian.] 1. One of a race of imaginary beings, first conceived as spirits of the earth, inhabiting its interior and that of everything earthly, animal, vegetable, or mineral. The gnomes ultimately came to be regarded as the special guardians of mines and minerals, malicious in all other relations, and extremely ugly and misshapen; while the females of the race, called gnomes, not more than a foot high, were endowed with supreme beauty and goodness, and, being the special guardians of diamonds, were chiefly known in the countries that produced them.

Swift on his sooty pinions sits the gnome,
And in a vapour reach'd the dismal dome.
Pope, R. of the L., iv. 17.

Pope has made admirable use in this fine poem ("Rape of the Lock") of the fabulous race of gnomes. Warburton. Hence—2. A grotesque dwarf; a goblin-like person of small stature and misshapen figure.—3. A name of sundry humming-birds: as, the giant gnome (Patagona gigas).—Syn. 1. Goblin, etc. See gnome.

gnomed (nōm'd), a. [*gnome*² + -ed.] Haunted or inhabited by a gnome or gnomes. [Poetical.]

The haunted air and gnomed mine. Keats, Lamia, ll.

gnome-owl (nōm'oul), n. A small owl of the genus Glaucidium (which see).

gnomic (nō'mik), a. [Gr. γνομικός, dealing in maxims, sententious, < γνῶμη, a maxim; see *gnome*¹.] 1. Containing or dealing in maxims; sententious.

There is a really gnomic force in the use to which he (Maywood) puts his power in the few serious words at the close of this introduction.

A. W. Ward, Eng. Dram. Lit., I. 186.

The sententious, satiric song, to be met with in the 14th, 15th, and 16th Psalms, . . . this Ewald calls gnomic poetry. Oldman, Words of the Bible, p. 63.

The Ballad of Arabella is one of those familiar pieces of satire indulged in more frequently by newspaper wags than by gnomic poets. N. A. Rev., XLVI. 184.

2. In gram., used in maxims or general statements; applied to express a universal truth: as, a gnomic axiom.

gnomic² (nō'mik), a. A contracted form of gnomonic.

gnomical¹ (nō'mi-kal), a. [*gnomic*¹ + -al.] Name as gnomic.

gnomical² (nō'mi-kal), a. [*gnomic*² + -al.] Same as gnomonic.

He may have given him a dial furnished with a magnetic needle, rather than an ordinary gnomical dial. Book, Works, V. 47.

gnomically (nō'mi-kal-i), adv. In a sententious manner; sententiously.

gnomide (nō'mid), n. [*gnome*² + -ide.] A female gnome. See *gnome*², 1.

gnomologic (nō-mō-lōj'ik), a. [Gr. γνομολογικός, sententious, < γνῶμη, a speaking in maxims; see gnomology.] Of or pertaining to gnomology.

gnomological (nō-mō-lōj'i-kal), a. Same as gnomologic.

gnomology (nō-mō-lōj-i), n. [Gr. γνομολογία, a speaking in maxims, a collection of maxims, < γνῶμη, a maxim, + λογία, < λέγω, speak; see -ology.] A collection of or treatise on maxims or sententious and pithy reflections. [Rare.]

gnomon (nō'mon), n. [Early mod. E. also gnomon, gnomon (simulating *gnome*¹ + man); = F. gnomon = Sp. gnomon = Pg. gnomon = It. gnomone, < L. gnomon, < Gr. γνῶμων, one that knows or examines, a judge, interpreter, a carpenter's square, the index of a sun-dial, a gnomon in geometry, etc., < γνῶμαιν, γνῶναι, know; see *gnome*¹.] 1. On a sun-dial, the triangular projecting piece which by its shadow shows the hour of the day; also, any index to a sun-dial or to a meridian-mark, especially a very large one. The early gnomons used for astronomical purposes were vertical pillars or obelisks.

Gnomons [ll.], the gnom-man or gnom-mon of a Hall, the shadow whereof pointed out the hours. Florus.

The shadow of the style in the dial, which they call the gnomon, in Egypt, at noon, in the equinoctial day, is little more in length than half the gnomon.

Holland, Tr. of Pliny, II. 72.

I do not say there is such difficulty to conceive a Rock standing still when the Waves run by it, or the Gnomon of a Dial when the shadow passes from one Figure to another. Stillingfleet, Sermons, III. vi.

2. The index of the hour-circle of a globe.—3. A piece of a parallelogram left after a similar parallelogram has been removed from a corner of it. Thus, in the figure, EFGH is a gnomon.—

4. An odd number; one of the terms of an arithmetical series by which polygonal numbers are found. Also called gnomonic number.

gnomonic (nō-mon'ik), a. [Gr. γνομωνικός, < Gr. γνῶμων, of or for sun-dials, < γνῶμαιν, a gnomon; see gnomon.] 1. Pertaining to the art of dialing.

One of those curious gnomonic instruments, that show at once the place of the sun in the zodiac, his declination from the equator, the day of the month, the length of the day, etc. Boyle, Works, V. 208.

2. In bot., bent at right angles.

Also gnomic, gnomical.

Gnomonic column. See column, 1. Gnomonic number. See number, 4.—Gnomonic projection, a projection of the circles of the sphere in which the point of sight is taken at the center of the sphere. In this projection all great circles appear as straight lines.

gnomonical (nō-mon'i-kal), a. Same as gnomonic.

gnomonically (nō-mon'i-kal-i), adv. In a gnomonic manner; according to the principles of the gnomonic projection.

gnomonics (nō-mon'iks), n. [Pl. of gnomonic; see -ics.] 1. Gr. γνομονικά and gnomonics, < Gr. γνῶμων (see gnōmōn), the art of dialing, fem. of γνῶμωνικός; see gnomonic.] The art or science of dialing, or of constructing instruments to show the hour of the day or to aid in making astronomical observations by the shadow of a gnomon.

By making it afford him the elevations of the pole, and the azimuths, sun-dials of all sorts, enough to make up an art called gnomonics. Boyle, Works, VI. 726.

gnomonist (nō'mōn-ist), n. [gnomon + -ist.] One versed in gnomonics.

The sun enables the gnomonist to make accurate dials, to know exactly how the time passes.

Boyle, Works, VI. 476.

gnomonology (nō-mō-nol'ō-j-i), n. [Gr. γνομολογία, a gnomon, + λογία, < λέγω, speak; see -ology.] A treatise on dialing.

gnōmōn. See gnōmōn.

Gnophria (nōf'ri-ā), n. [NL. (Stephens), irreg. < Gr. γνῶφρῆ for γνῶφρῆ, dark, murky.] A genus of horned flycatchers, of the family Troglodytidae, containing such species as G. rubricollis, known as the black foolman moth.

Gnorinus (nōr'i-nus), n. [NL. (Serville, 1825), < Gr. γνῶρις, known, < γνῶμαιν, γνῶναι, know; see *gnome*¹.] A genus of ectoparasitic lamellicorn beetles, containing a few large species, chiefly of Europe and Asia, which live on flowers. One, G. maculicornis, is North American.

gnoseology (nō-se-ol'ō-j-i), n. [Gr. γνῶσεολογία, knowledge (see gnosis), + λογία, < λέγω, speak; see -ology.] The nomological science of the cognitive faculties in general. Also called gnoseology.

Baumgarten, to whom the honor of having projected this science belongs, defines it as "the theory of the liberal arts inferior to gnoseology, the art of beautiful thought, . . . the science of cognition." New Princeton Rev., II. 26.

gnosis (nō'sis), n. [Gr. γνῶσις, knowledge, < γνῶμαιν, γνῶναι, know; = L. gnoscere; see *gnome*¹, and cf. *gnome*¹, gnostic.] Science; knowledge; knowledge of the highest kind; specifically, mystical knowledge. See gnostic.

The designation of mystery or vidding is applied to it (the occult or mystic system), as having been veiled from all except the initiated. The doctrines that were denominated gnosis or knowledge, and Sophia, or wisdom, and were accounted too sacred for profane or vulgar inspection.

J. F. W. Knight's Anc. Art and Myth, (1876), p. 4. His [Origen's] gnosis neutralizes all that is empirical and historical, if not always as to its actuality, at least absolutely in respect of its value. Engle. Brit., XVII. 462.

According as Gnosticism adopted one or other of these modes of explaining the existence of the present world, it fell into the two great divisions which, from their places of origin, have received the respective names of the Alexandrian and Syrian Gnosis. Engle. Brit., X. 704.

The common Christian lives by faith but the more advanced believer has gnosis, or philosophic insight of Christianity, as the eternal law of the soul.

J. F. Clarke, Ten Great Religions, vi. § 7.

gnostic (nōst'ik), a. and n. [Gr. γνῶστικός, knowing (as a noun, γνῶστικός, < L. Gnosticus, a Gnostic; usually in pl.); fem. ἡ γνῶστική, or neut. τὸ γνῶστικόν, the power or faculty of knowing (used with reference to γνῶναι, knowledge, esp. higher or deeper knowledge); < γνῶναι, collateral form of γνῶμαιν, verbal adj. of γνῶμαιν, γνῶναι = L. gnoscere = E. know; see *gnome*¹, and cf. gnosis, agnostic, etc.] 1. a. 1. Having knowledge; possessing mystic or esoteric knowledge of spiritual things.

Idealism is not necessarily either gnostic or agnostic, but is more apt to be the former than the latter.

R. Phil., Mind, XIII. 566.

2. Worldly-wise; knowing; clever or smart. [Humorous.]

I said you were a d—d gnostic fellow, and I laid a bet you have not been always professional — that a lie. Scott, St. Roman's Well, v.

3. [cap.] Pertaining to the Gnostics or to Gnosticism; eschatistic; theosophic.

Marion distinguished himself by his extreme opposition to Judaism, and generally by a gnostic attitude at variance with the Old Testament. Engle. Brit., X. 704.

II. n. [cap.] A member of one of certain rationalistic sects which arose in the Christian church in the first century, flourished in the second, and had almost entirely disappeared by the sixth. The Gnostics held that knowledge rather than faith was the road to heaven, and professed to have a peculiar knowledge of religious mysteries. They rejected the literal interpretation of the Scriptures, and attempted to combine their teachings with those of the Greek and Oriental philosophies and religions. They held that God was the unknowable and the unapproachable; that from him proceeded, by emanation, subordinate deities termed aeons, from whom again proceeded other still inferior spirits. The Gnostics were in general agreed in believing in the principles of dualism and Docetism, and in the existence of a demiurge or world creator. Christ they regarded as a superior son, who had descended from the Infinite God in order to subdue the god or eon of this world. Their chief seats were in Syria and Egypt, but their doctrines were taught everywhere, and at an early date they separated into a variety of sects.

After Christianity began to be settled in the world, the greatest corruption of it was the pretensions to divine inspiration, as the false Apostles, the Gnostics, the Montanists, and many others. Stillingfleet, Sermons, II. 11. Setting out from this principle, all the Gnostics agree in regarding this world as not proceeding immediately from the Supreme Being. Engle. Brit., X. 704.

Gnostical (nōst'i-kal), a. [Gnostic + -al.] Same as Gnostic.

Lipinus, one of the most recent and careful writers on the subject, arranges the gnostical systems in a threefold order. Engle. Brit., X. 702.

gnostically (nōst'i-kal-i), adv. 1. In a gnostic or knowing manner; cleverly; knowingly. [Humorous.]

"I say, little Mr. Bingo," said the Squire, "this is the very fellow that we saw down at the Willow slack on Saturday — he was told gnostically enough, and eat twelve yards of line with one hand — the fly fell like a thistle down on the water." Scott, St. Roman's Well, iv.

2. According to Gnosticism; after the method or manner of the Gnostics.

Gnosticism (nōst'i-sizm), n. [Gnostic + -ism.] The religious and metaphysical system of the Gnostics; belief in or tendency toward Gnostic doctrines.

Gnosticize (nōst'i-siz), v. t.; pret. and pp. gnosticized, pp. gnosticizing. [Gnostic + -ize.] To interpret as a Gnostic; give a Gnostic coloring to.

He [Bernardine] sought ingeniously to gnosticize the whole book [the fourth Gospel] from beginning to end. E. H. Sears, The Fourth Gospel (the Heart of Christ), p. 156.

Attempts to Christianize paganism, to conciliate Judaism, or to gnosticize Christianity. Engle. Brit., XI. 464.

Gnostids (nōst'idz), n. pl. [NL. < Gnostus + -ids.] A family of chalcidid beetles, taking name from the genus Gnostus, having three genera, of one tropical species each.

gnostology (nōst'ol'ō-j-i), n. [Gr. γνῶστικός, known, + λογία, < λέγω, speak; see -ology.] Same as gnoseology.

Gnostus (nōst'us), n. [NL. (Westwood, 1855), < Gr. γνῶστος, collateral form of γνῶναι, known, to be known, < γνῶμαιν, γνῶναι, know; see *gnome*¹, gnostic.] 1. The typical genus of beetles of the family Gnostidae. The sole species is G. formicicola of Bezzi, which lives in ants' nests. It has normal eyes, but is notable in its antennae, trochantal legs, venation, and number of abdominal segments.

2. A genus of bugs, of the family Capidae. Fieber, 1854.

gnost. A Middle English preterit of gnaw.

gnu (nū), n. [Also written gnou; < Hottentot gnu or nju.] An African animal of the genus Catoblepas (or Gnomochoerus), belonging to the antelope division of the family Bovidae; a wildebeest. The gnu has little of the appearance of an ordinary antelope, being a creature of singular shape, strangely combining characters which recall at once horse, ass, and ox. There are two very distinct species, the common gnu, C. gnu, and the brindled gnu, C. goryon, sometimes generically separated under the name Goryopsis. The former stands about 4 feet high at the withers, and is about 6½ feet long, the shoulders are hunched; the neck is maned like an ass's, the tail is long and flowing like a horse's; the head is like a buffalo's, with a broad muzzle, and beset with long bristly hairs; other long hairs hang from the dewlap and between the fore legs, there are horns in both sexes, in the male massive, meeting over the poll, then curving downward and outward and again turned up at the tip, like a muskox's, the color is brownish or blackish, with much white in the tail and mane. The brindled gnu is a larger animal, striped on the fore quarters, with black tail and more copious mane, it is known as the blue wildebeest, and by the Bechuan name kokoni or koboni. Both species inhabit southern parts of Africa, in company with zebra and quagga, and usually go in herds like other antelopes.

Common or White-necked Gnu (Catoblepas gnu)

go (gō), v.; pret. went, pp. gone, ppr. going. (See also gac; < ME. go, gou, goon, earlier gān (pret. code, gedē, yede, yode; also wente (prop. the pret. of wenden: see wend), ppr. go-ande, goonde, pp. gom, gan), < AS. gān (pret. code, ppr. not found, pp. ge-gān) = OE. gān = OFries. gān = D. gaan = MLG. gān = OHG. gan, gēn, MHG. gen, G. gehen (= mod. Icel. gá = Sw. gå = Dan. gaa, of IAI. origin); not in Goth. (except in the pret. idifa) nor in early Scand.; a defective verb, generally regarded as a contraction of the equiv. AS. gangan = Goth. gaggan, etc., E. gang, with which it has been long confused (see gang); but such a contraction is otherwise unexampled (the contraction in AS. fōn, take, hōn, hang, from the fuller form represented by the E. fang, hang, q. v., being different), and is, on phonetic and other grounds, improbable. The form of the appar. root (Taut. √ gā), the form of the pret. (AS. code, Goth. idifa), and the fact that the profligate and widespread Indo-Eur. √ i, go, is otherwise scarcely represented in Taut. (unless in OHG. sten, (f. stōn = Dan. ste = Sw. stā, hasten; AS. ste = OFries. ste = Icel. stá, the sole of the foot), give some probability to the conjecture that the Taut. √ gā stands for ga-i*, being the generalizing prefix, Goth. ga-, AS. ge- (see i-1), + √ i, go. The AS. pres. ind. 1 gā, 2 gāst, 3 gāth = Goth. as if 1 ga-im*, 2 ga-as*, 3 ga-ith*, equiv. to the simple forms 1 im*, 2 as*, 3 ith* (discussed perhaps because of possible confusion with similar forms of the verb be, namely, 1 im, 2 is, 3 ist = E. 1 am, 2 art, 3 is) = L. ire (pres. ind. 1 eo, 2 is, 3 it) = Gr. irai (pres. ind. 1 irai, 2 irai, etc. irai) = Skt. √ i (pres. ind. 1 emi, 2 eshi, 3 ethi, etc.) = Lith. iti = Oulg. iti, go. In this view, the pret., AS. code, Goth. idifa, etc. (in comp. ga-eoda, ME. geode, gedē, gode, E. obs. yede, yule, with occas. pres. yede, yend), appar. from a different root, is formed from the same root √ i, without the prefix. I. intrans. 1. To move; pass; proceed; be in motion or pass from one point to another by any means or in any manner, as by walking, running, or other action of the limbs, by riding, etc.

To the horse he goth him faire and wel.

goal¹ (gōl), n. [Early mod. E. gale, gale; < OF. gale, earlier waile, a pole, a rod, F. gale, a pole, of OLat. origin. < OFries. wale (in comp.), North Fries. wale = leel, roir = Sw. dial. val = Goth. walus, a staff, stick, = AS. wale, a mark made by the blow of a rod, E. wale; see wale.] 1. A pole, post, or other object set up to mark the point determined for the end of a race, or for both its beginning and end, whether in one course or several courses; a mark or point to be reached in a race or other contest; the limit of a race.

As in the rennynges passyng the gale is accounted but rashness, so rennynges half way is reproved for shewness. Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, III, 32.

Part curb their fiery steeds, or shun the goal With rapid wheels. Milton, P. L., II, 581.

So self starts nothing but what tends apace Home to the goal, where it began the race. Cowper, Charity, I, 505.

2. In athletic games and plays, the mark, point, or line toward which effort is directed. In football, lacrosse, and similar games the goal consists of two upright posts placed in the ground a short distance from each other, and generally connected by a cross-beam or string, through or over which the players try to throw or kick the ball.

They pluck two bushes in the ground, . . . which they terme goales, where some indifferent person throweth up a ball, the which whosoever can catch and carry through his adversaries goale hath wonne the game. R. Cawen, quoted in Strutt's Sports and Pastimes, p. 167.

A safe and well-kept goal is the foundation of all good play. T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, I, 6.

Hence—3. In football, etc., the act of throwing or kicking the ball through or over the goal; as, to make a goal.—4. The end or termination; the finish.

Still, as we nearer draw to life's dark goal, Be hopeful Spring the favorite of the soul! Wordsworth, To Liza.

Goad-spur, 16th or 17th century. (From Voltaire's Dictionnaire de Mabilais.)

goal

A. The end or final purpose; the end to which a design or a course of action tends, or which a person aims to reach or accomplish.

Then honour be but a goal to my will,
This day I'll rise, or else add ill to ill.

Shak., Pericles, II. 1.

Each individual seeks a several goal.

Pope, Essay on Man, II. 237.

O yet we trust that somehow good
Will be the final goal of ill.

Tennyson, In Memoriam, II.

goatish, a. [Perhaps < goat, goat, a piece inserted, + -ish (and thus equiv. to 'patched'); or an orig. misprint (for boarish! boarish!)] A doubtful word, found only in the following passage:

May they know no language but that gibberish they prattle to their parcels, unless it be the goatish Latin they write in their bond.

Beau. and Fl., Philaster, v. 1.

goat¹, n. An obsolete spelling of ghost.

Goa stone (gō'ā stōn), (a) Same as Goa ball, 1.

The Goa stone was in the 16th and 17th centuries as much in repute as the bezoar, and for similar virtues. So precious was it esteemed that the great gaily carried it about with them in a casket of gold filigree.

C. W. King, Nat. Hist. of Goa, p. 286.

(b) Same as bezoar-stone. See bezoar.

goat¹ (gōt), n. [ME. goat, goat, got, gut, pl. got, get, get, get, etc., < AS. gōt (pl. gōt, gē), form (or common — the name, word being bucca or gāt-bucca; see huck), = D. gāt, gēt, MLA, gote (rare) = OHG. gatz, MHG. gatz, G. griss = Icel. göt = Sw. göt = Dan. gøt = Goth. gauts, f., a goat, dim. gautin, n., a kid, = L. hædus, f., a kid. Cf. Capra (caper) and Hircus.] 1. A horned ruminant quadruped of the genus Capra (or Hircus). The horns are hollow, erect, turned back ward, annular, scabrous, and anteriorly ridged. The male is generally bearded under the chin. Goats are nearly of the size of sheep, but stronger, less timid, and more agile. They frequent rocks and mountains, and subsist on scanty coarse food. They are sprightly, capricious, and wanton, and their strong odor (technically called hircine) is proverbial. Their milk is sweet, nourishing, and medicinal, and their flesh furnishes food. Goats are of several species, and it is not certainly known from which the domestic goat (C. hircus) is descended, though opinion favors the Persian pasang, C. asinus. (See cut under asinus.) It is quite likely that more than this one feral stock has contributed to the domestic breeds. Goats are all indigenous to the eastern hemisphere, though now raised in all parts of the world, and many varieties are valued for their hair or wool, as the Cashmere goat, the Angora goat, the dwarf or Guilan goat, the Egyptian or Nubian, the Maltese, the Segal, the Syrian, etc. Some of them are hornless. The nearest wild relative of the goat is the ibex. The so-called Rocky Mountain goat belongs to a different group (see below). The name goat is often extended to some goat-like antelopes, as the ibex. The male of the goat is called a goat, and the young a kid. The sexes are distinguished as he-goats and she-goats, or colloquially as hilly-goats and nanny-goats.

2. pl. In zool., the Caprinae as a subfamily of Bovidae or Antilopidae. There are several genera and species. See Asperus, Capra, Hemitragus, Komus.—3. Same as goatskin, 2.—4. A stepping-stone. [Prov. Eng.]—Angora goat, a variety of goat, Capra angorica native to the district surrounding Angora in Asia Minor, distinguished for its long and beautiful silky hair. The yarn is known as Turkey yarn or angora-yarn. See Angora wool, under wool. Sometimes incorrectly called Angora goat.—Goat's-hair cloth, cloth made of goat's hair, or of the finer wool that is mingled with the long hair of some species of goats. See cashmere, hair, reynow.—Goat's-hair gloss, the beautiful luster peculiar to certain pile-carpet of India and northern Persia, supposed to be a property of the soft goat's hair of which the pile is made.—Rocky Mountain goat, Haploceros montanus, a kind of antelope inhabiting the higher mountain-ranges of western North America, with a thick fleece of long white hair or wool, and short, sharp, and smooth black horns, like those of the ibex, of which it is a near relative. It is the only American representative of its kind, and not a goat in any proper sense. See Haploceros.—Yellow goat, same as ibex.

goat² (gōt), n. Another spelling of goat.

goat-antelope (gōt'an'tē-lōp), n. A goat-like antelope of the genus Nemorhedus, as the goral, goaves, n. Plural of goaf.

gob¹ (gob), n. [Also dial. gab; < Gael. gab, the beak or bill of a bird, the mouth, = Ir. gab, gab, the beak, snout, mouth; cf. W. gwp, the head and neck of a bird. Cf. gob¹, which is an assimilated form of gob¹.] The mouth. [Provincial.]

gob² (gob), n. [An abbr. of the older gobbet, q. v., which is ult., as gob¹ is directly, of Celtic origin.] A mouthful; hence, a little mass or collection; a dab; a lump. [Colloq.]

It were a grove gob would not down with him.

Chapman, All Fools, III. 1.

Lardy maany, these are young uns! There a niver no contentin on ear; ye tell em one story, and they jest swallows it as a dog does a gob a meat; and they're all ready for another.

H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 6.

gob³ (gob), n. [Perhaps a particular use of gob², but cf. goaf, gob².] In coal-mining, the refuse or waste material from the workings in a mine; attle. It is used to pack the goaves, so as to support the roof.

gob⁴ (gob), v. t.; pret. and pp. gobbed, ppr. gobbing. [< gob³, n.] In coal-mining, to pack away refuse so as to get rid of it and at the same time to help to keep the workings from caving in.—To gob up, to become choked in working, said of a blast furnace when it becomes obstructed by the chilling or in sufficient fluxing of the contents, or the peculiar quality of the coal used. Gobbling up in the blast furnaces of South Wales, where anthracite is used is due to the running together of the slag and the decalcified part of the coal into unfusible masses. (See beard, 1, gobbling and slip.)

gobang (gō bang'), n. [Jap. goban, Chinese k'ī p'ün, chess or checker-board.] A game played on a checker-board with different-colored counters or beads, the object being to get five counters in a row. It is called by the Japanese go moku narae, or 'five eyes in a row', the counters being placed on the intersections of the lines forming the squares and not on the squares.

gobbe (gob), n. A name given in Surinam to the Lonchocarpus subterranus, a leguminous plant which ripens its pods underground, like the peanut, Arachis hypogaea, and is extensively cultivated in Africa and South America.

gobber-tooth, n. [Also gobber-tooth, cf. gub-tooth, gub tooth.] A projecting tooth. Durley.

Buke his hard was low in stature, crook-backed, with one shoulder higher than the other, having a prominent gobber-tooth, and a war-like countenance which well enough became a soldier.

Fuller, Ch. Hist., IV. III. 2.

gobbet (gob'et), n. [< ME. gobette, gobet, a small piece, a lump, fragment, < OF. gobet, gobet, F. gobet, a morsel of food, dim. of OF. gob, a gulp, gobbet, gobber, gulp, devour, feed greed-Wyclif, 2 Mac. xv. 33 (Oxf.).

He slew Hamon nere to a haun of the sea, and threw him gobbet meale thereon.

Stee, Chron., The Romayne, an. 21.

gobbing, gobbin (gob'ing, -in), n. [Verbal n. of gob, v.] In coal-mining, the refuse thrown back into the excavations remaining after the removal of the coal.

Gobbin, or gobbin-stuff, is stone or rubbish taken away from the coal, pavement or roof, to fill up that excavation as much as possible, in order to prevent the crush of superincumbent strata from causing heavy falls, or following the workmen too fast in their descent.

Ure, Dict., III. 880.

gobbin-stitch (gob'in-stich), n. In embroidery, same as pearl-stitch.

gobble (gob'li), v. t.; pret. and pp. gobbled, ppr. gobbling. [Freq. of gob, q. v.] 1. To swallow in large pieces; swallow hastily; often with up or down.

The time too precious now to waste,
And supper gobbled up in haste,
Again afresh to cards they run.

Sir Gt. Lady's Journal.

2. To seize upon with greed; appropriate graspingly; capture; often with up or down. [Slang, U. S.]

Nearly four hundred prisoners were gobbled up after the fight, and any quantity of ammunition and provisions.

Chicago Evening Post, July, 1861.

I happen to know — how I obtained my knowledge isn't important — that the moment Mr. Pringle should propose to his daughter she would gobble him down.

H. James, Jr., Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 314.

—Syn. 1. To devour, etc. (see eat); bolt; gulp.

gobble (gob'li), v. i.; pret. and pp. gobbled, ppr. gobbling. [Approximately imitative, the form being suggested by gobblet.] To make the loud noise in the throat peculiar to the turkey-cock.

Pat Turkeys gobbling at the door. Prior, The Ladies.

gobble (gob'li), n. [gobble, v.] The loud rattling noise in the throat made by the turkey-cock; sometimes used of the dissimilar vocal sounds of other fowls.

Flocks of ducks and geese . . . set up a discordant gobble.

Mrs. Gore.

The turkeys added their best gobbles in happy proclamation of the warm time coming.

The Century, XXXVI. 118.

Roscoe, Adventures in the West, p. 347.

gobelin (gô-bé-lan'), n. and a. [So called from the Gobelins, a national establishment in Paris for decorative manufactures, especially celebrated for its tapestry and upholstery, founded as a dye-house in 1450 by a family named Gobelin, and bought by the government about 1662.] 1. n. A variety of damask used for upholstery, made of silk and wool or silk and cotton.

II. a. Pertaining to the French national factory called the Gobelins, or resembling what is done there. — Gobelin stitch, in embroidery, a short stitch used in very fine work and requiring great care, as all the stitches must be of the same length and height. It is intended to resemble the stitch of tapestry, and is sometimes called tapestry-stitch. — Gobelin tapestry, (a) Tapestry made at the Gobelins in Paris. See tapestry. (b) A kind of fancy work made in imitation of such tapestry. It is worked from the back with silk or Berlin wool.

gobett, n. A Middle English form of gobbet.
go-between (gô-bé-twen'), n. 1. One who passes from one to another of different persons or parties as an agent or assistant in negotiation or intrigue; one who serves another or others as an intermediary.

I shall be with her (I may tell you), by her own appointment; even as you came in to me, her assistant, or go-between, parted from me.

Shak., M. W. of W., II. 2.

She had a maid who was at work near her that was a slattern, because her mistress was careless, which I take to be another argument of your security in her; for the go-betweens of women of intrigue are rewarded too well to be dirty.

Steele, Spectator, No. 502.

2. A servant who assists in the duties of two positions. See the extract. [Eng.]

A girl seeks a situation as a go-between. I am told it is a not uncommon term for a servant who assists, equally, both housemaid and cook.

N. and Q., 7th ser., VI. 37.

gob-fire (gob'fir), n. In coal-mining, a spontaneous combustion of the gob or refuse.

Gobiesocidae (gô-bi-ô-sô-i-dê), n. pl. [NL., < Gobiesox (-sôx) + -idae.] A family of teleostean fishes, typified by the genus Gobiesox, alone representing the superfamily Gobiesociformes or the suborder Acanthopterygii. They have spinous fins and a complicated suctorial apparatus, developed chiefly from the skin of the pectoral region and only partly formed by the ventral fins. They are chiefly small fishes of oblong or elongated conical figure, have no scales, a depressed head, one posterior dorsal fin, with an anal opposite it, and pectorals extended around the front of the snout.

Gobiesociform (gô-bi-ô-sô-i-fôr-m), a. [Gobiesox + L. forma, form.] Having the characters of the Gobiesocidae or the Gobiesociformes.

Gobiesociformes (gô-bi-ô-sô-i-fôr-méz), n. pl. [NL., < Gobiesox (-sôx) + forma, shape.] In Günther's system of classification, the fourteenth division of Acanthopterygii.

Gobiesox (gô-bi-ô-sôx), n. [NL., < L. gobio, gobius, a gudgeon, a goby, + sôx, a kind of pike.] The typical genus of Gobiesocidae: no

Gobiesox reticulatus called from combining the extended snout of a pike and the ventral sucker of a goby. The commonest American species is G. reticulatus of California, about 6 inches long.

goblid (gô-bi-id), a. and n. I. a. Pertaining to the family Gobiidae.

II. n. One of the gobies or Gobiidae.

On the Californian coast is a goblid (with thys mirabilis) remarkable for the great extension backward of the jaws and [for its] singular habits.

Stand. Nat. Hist., III. 257.

Gobiidae (gô-bi-i-dê), n. pl. [NL., < Gobius + -idae.] A family of acanthopterygian fishes, containing most of the Gobioidae; the gobies proper, or gobiids. It was formerly equivalent to that group, but is now restricted to the species with usually a stout body regularly tapering from head to tail, sometimes more elongated, or ovate and compressed, scales diversified, cycloid, cycloid, or wanting; no lateral line; generally two spinigerous dorsal fins, sometimes united in one; thoracic ventral fins, mostly 1-spined and 5-rayed, usually contributing to form a ventral sucker, and an anal papilla. The genera are numerous and the species several hundred, mostly small or even of minute size, few reaching a length of a foot. Also Gobiadæ, Gobiidæ, Gobioidæ.

gobiiform (gô-bi-i-fôr-m), a. [NL., < Gobiiformis, < Gobius + L. forma, form.] Having the characters of the Gobiidae; pertaining to the Gobiiformes: gobioid.

Gobiiformes (gô-bi-i-fôr-méz), n. pl. [NL., pl. of Gobiiformis: see Gobiiformis.] In Günther's system of classification, the ninth division of Acanthopterygii.

Goblina (gô-bi-lin'), n. pl. [NL., < Gobius + -ina.] In Günther's system of classification, a group of Gobiidae, including species with the ventrals united or close together and two dorsal fins. It embraces the subfamilies Gobioninae, Eleotrinae, and Periophthalminae of other authors.

Gobio (gô-bi-ô), n. [NL., (Cuvier, 1817), < L. gobio, a gudgeon; see Gobius and Gudgeon.] A Cuvierian genus of cyprinoid fishes, of the family

Cyprinidae; the gudgeons proper, related to the carp, bream, bleak, roach, tench, etc., but not to the gobies (Gobiidae). The common European gudgeon is Gobio fluviatilis.

Gobio fluviatilis

gobioid (gô-bi-oid), a. and n. I. a. Pertaining to the characters of the Gobioidae; like a goby, in a broad sense.

II. n. One of the Gobioidae; a goby or goby-like fish.

Gobioidæ (gô-bi-ô-i-dê), n. pl. Same as Gobiidae.

Gobioides (gô-bi-ô-i-dê), n. pl. [NL., < Gobius + -oides.] A superfamily of fishes, containing the gobies and goby-like fishes. It includes the families Gobiada, Callionymidae, Platypharidae, and Oryziatidae.

Gobioides (gô-bi-ô-i-dêz), n. [NL., < Gobius + -oides.] 1. A genus of fishes. Lacépède, 1800. — 2. pl. In Cuvier's system of classification, the twelfth family of Acanthopterygii, characterized by the length and tenacity of the dorsal spines, the presence of a large siphonal intestinal canal without caeca, and the absence of a swim-bladder.

Gobius (gô-bi-us), n. [NL. (Linnaeus), < L. gobius, also cobius and gobio (-n-)] ult. E. gad-gron, q. v., the gudgeon, < Gr. κοβίος, a kind of fish, gudgeon, tench.] A Linnaean genus of fishes, typical or representative, in its modern acceptance, of the Gobiidae or Gobioides. G. saporator is found from tropical seas to North Carolina.

goblet (gob'let), n. [Early mod. E. also goblette (= MLA. goblet, koblet); < OF. goblet, goblet, a goblet, bowl, or wide-mouthed cup, F. goblet, dial. goblet t (OF. also goblet, dial. goblet) (= Fr. goblet = Sp. cubilete), a goblet, dim. of OF. goblet, goblet, goblet, m., gobelle, f., a goblet, < ML. cupellus, a cup (cf. cupella, f., a vat), dim. of cupa, a tub, cask, vat: see cup, coop.] A crater-shaped drinking-vessel of glass or other material, without a handle. (a) A large drinking vessel for wine, especially one used in festivities or on ceremonious occasions.

Ye that drinke wyne out of goblettes.

Bible of 1581, Amos vi. 4.

goblet-cell (gob'let-sel), n. An epithelial cell of crateriform shape. See cell.

gobletty (gob'let-i-ti), n. [goblet + -ity; formed in imitation of Gr. κοβίτης, the abstract nature of a cup or goblet (< κόβη, cup, goblet), used by Plato in the passage referred to in the following quotation. So tablety or menality, in the same quotation, translates Plato's Gr. term τραπέζιτης, < τραπέζα, a table.] The quality or abstract nature of a goblet. See etymology and quotation.

Plato was talking about ideas, and spoke of menality (= tablety) and gobletty. "I can see a table and a goblet," said the cynic, "but I can see no such things as tablety and gobletty." "Quite so," answered Plato, "because you have the eyes to see a goblet and a table, but you have not the brains to understand tablety and gobletty."

O. W. Holmes, Emerson, p. 291.

goblet-shaped (gob'let-shápt), a. Crateriform.
goblin (gob'lin), n. [ME. goblign, < OF. gobelin, a goblin, hobgoblin, Robin Goodfellow (cf. ML. gobelinus, a goblin, Bret. goblin, will-o'-the-wisp), < ML. cobalus, covalus, a goblin, demon, < Gr. κόβαλος, an impudent rogue, an arrogant knave, pl. κόβαλοι, a set of mischievous goblins, invoked by rogues. ernours. Sp. Gauden, Tears of the Church, p. 821.

go-cart (gō'kurt), n. 1. A small framework with casters or rollers, and without a bottom, in which children learn to walk without danger of falling.

Another taught their Babes to talk,
Ere they cou'd yet in Go-carts walk.

Prior, Alma, II.

My grandmother appears as if she stood in a large drum, whereas the ladies now walk as if they were in a go-cart.

Steele, Spectator, No. 109.

2. A cabriolet formerly in use in England.

Old Chariot bodies were cut down, and numberless transformations made, and the truth is, they all more or less bear a strong resemblance to the vehicles called Go- carts, which ply for hire, as a sort of two-wheeled stage, in the neighborhood of Lambeth, the deep-cracked axle being the principal distinction.

Adams, English Pleasure Carriages, p. 275.

The Sultan Algal, being violently afflicted with a spee-nema, came six hundred leagues to meet me in a go-cart, a Character of a Quack Doctor, quoted in Strutt's [Sports and Pastimes, p. 317.

3. A light form of village-cart. — 4. A small vehicle such as a child can draw.

Goelenian (gō-lēn'i-an), a. [Goelenius (see def.) + -an.] Pertaining to the German lucician Rudolf Goelenius (1647-1628). — Goelenian scriptura, a chain-syllogram in which the premises are arranged as in the following example: An animal is a substance; a quadruped is an animal; a horse is a quadruped; Bucephalus is a horse; therefore Bucephalus is a substance.

god (god or gōd), n. [ME. god, godd, pl. godes, goides, < AS. god, m. (pl. godas), also god, u.
(pl. gode), rarely goda* (in gon, pl. godena), m., = OS. OFries. D. god = MLat. got, Lat. got = OHG. got, cot, MHG. got, G. Gott = Leel. godh, neut. pl., later godh, m. (pl. godhr), = Sw. Dan. gud = Goth. guth, m., gutha, guda, neut.
pl., a god; God: a word common to all Teut.
languages, in which it has numerous derivatives, but not identified outside of Teut. It was originally, and generally in the plural, being applied to the heathen deities, and elevated to the Christian sense upon the conversion of the Teutonic peoples. Popular etymology has long derived God from good; but a comparison of the forms (see good) shows this to be an error.
Moreover, the notion of goodness is not conspicuous in the heathen conception of deity, and in good itself the ethical sense is comparatively late.] 1. [cap.] The one Supreme or Absolute Being. The conceptions of God are various, differing widely in different systems of religion and metaphysics; but they fall, in general, under two heads, theism, which is most fully developed in Christianity, and in which God is regarded as a personal moral being, distinct from the universe, of which he is the author and ruler; and panteism, in which God is conceived as not personal, and as identified with the universe. See theism, panteism.
(In this sense used only in the singular.)

There fore is a side a proverb, that god will have saured, no man may destroye. Martin (E. E. T. S.), III. 521.

God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. 1 John I. 5.

God is a spirit, infinite, eternal, and unchangeable in his being, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness and truth.
Shorter Catechism, ans. to qn. 4.

By the name God, I understand a substance infinite eternal, immutable, independent, all knowing, all powerful, and by which I myself, and every other thing that exists, if any such there be, were created.

Descartes, Meditations (tr. by Veitch), III.

For an original and infinite power does not of itself constitute a God, neither is a God constituted by intelligence and virtue unless intelligence and goodness be themselves conjoined with this original and infinite power.

St. W. Hamilton.

His [Spinoza's] philosophy, therefore, begins with the idea of God as the substance of all things, as the infinite unity, which is necessarily presupposed in all consciousness of multitude and difference.

R. Cord, Philos. of Kant, p. 47.

By God we understand the one absolutely and infinitely perfect spirit who is the creator of all. Cath. Dict., p. 377.

2. In myth., a being regarded as superior to nature, or as presiding over some department of it; a superior intelligence supposed to possess supernatural or divine powers and attributes, either general or special and considered worthy of worship or other religious service; a divinity; a deity; as, the gods of the heathen;
the god of the thunder or of riches; the sun-god; a fish-god.

Suche fayned goddes night is to cal on,
Thing agayne our felth and but fantast;
No help ne secur to our thraldom vpon;
I lay them apart and fully denye.

Ann. of Partney (E. E. T. S.), Int., I. 57.

For none shall move the most high gods
Who are most sad, being cruel. Southey, Pellam.

3. Figuratively, a person or thing that is made an object of extreme devotion or sought after above all other things; any object of supreme interest or admiration.

The old man's god, his gold, has won upon her.
Pletcher and Shirley, Night Walker, I. 1.

Mr. Aylmer Aylmer, that slightly man,
The county God. Templeton, Aylmer's Field.

4. An image of a deity; an idol.

Thou shalt make thee no molten gods. Ex. xxxiv. 17.
He buys for Topham drawings and designs;
For Pembroke, statues, dirty gods, and coins.
Pope, Moral Essays, iv. 8.

5. One of the audience in the upper gallery of a theater; so called from the elevated position, in allusion to the gods of Olympus. [Slang.]

Hear him yell like an Indian, or eat call like a gallery
god. Christian Union, July 28, 1867.

go-devil (gō-dēv'el), n. 1. A device for exploding a dynamite cartridge in an oil-well. See the extract. [U. S.]

A queer-looking, pointed piece of iron, called the go-devil, is dropped down the well, and, striking a cap on the top of the torpedo, causes a terrific explosion at the bottom of the well.

St. Nicholas, XIV, 48.

2. A movable-jointed contractible apparatus, with interior springs secured to iron plates in overlapping sections, something like an elongated cartridge in shape and about three feet long, introduced into a pipe-line for the purpose of freeing it from obstructions. The motion of the oil carries it along, and its flexibility allows of its turning sharp angles and going through narrow spaces.

3. A rough sled used for holding one end of a log in hauling it out of the woods, etc., the other end dragging on the snow or ice. Also called tieboy. [Northwestern U. S.]

two godfathers and one godmother; and for every Female, two godmothers and one godfather.

Book of Common Prayer.

2. A jurymen, as jeocularly held to be godfather to the prisoner.

In christening, thou shalt have two godfathers:

Had I been judge, thou shouldst have had ten more.

To bring thee to the gallows, not to the font.

Shak., M. of V., IV, 1.

I had rather see him remitted to the jail, and have his twelve godfathers, good men and true, condemn him to the gallows.

Randolph, Muzzle Looking glass.

God-fearing (god'fēr'ing), a. Reverencing and obeying God.

Enoch as a brave that fears no man

Bow'd himself down, and . . .

Pray'd for a blessing on his wife and babes,

Whatever came to him.

Pennington, Lincoln Arden.

God-forsaken (god'fōr-sā'kn), a. 1. Seeming as if forsaken by God; hence, forlorn; desolate; miserable.

I have rarely seen anything quite so bleak and god forsaken as this village. A few low bar-k huts in a desert of snow—that was all. B. Taylor, Northern Travel, p. 117.

2. Cast out or abandoned by God; supremely wicked; utterly reprobate; as, a God-forsaken community or band of pirates.

godful (god'fūl), a. [< god + -ful.] 1. Inspired. Darwin.

Hence gild, gilt, golden, and ult. golden, golden.] L. n. 1. Chemical symbol, Au; atomic weight, 197.3. A precious metal remarkable on account of its unique and beautiful yellow color, luster, high specific gravity, and freedom from liability to rust or tarnish when exposed to the air. The specific gravity of pure gold is 19.3. Gold stands first among the metals in point of ductility and malleability. Its tenacity is almost equal to that of silver, two thirds that of copper, and twelve times that of lead. It may be beaten into leaves thin enough to transmit a greenish light. It stands next to silver and copper as a conductor of heat and electricity; its melting-point is about 1,063° C. (or 2,000° F.); it is not attacked by any of the ordinary acids, but combines readily with chlorine; and it is dissolved by a mixture of hydrochloric and nitric acids. The crystalline form of gold is isometric, but crystallized gold is a rarity, and it is extremely uncommon to find crystals with smooth faces and sharp edges. Neither have any very large crystals ever been noticed, nor one so much as an inch in diameter. Arborescent masses, showing irregularly developed crystalline planes, are occasionally found, and such forms are sometimes aggregated into large masses; but much the larger part of the native gold found is entirely destitute of any appearance of crystallization, being usually in the form of small grains, which are often so minute as to be almost invisible to the naked eye. Larger rounded masses, called nuggets, are occasionally met with, and these are sometimes many pounds in weight. A specimen from the Ural preserved in the collection of the mining school at St. Petersburg weighs nearly a hundred pounds. The largest nugget of which there is any record was found in Australia, and was called the "Welcome." It weighed over 184 pounds, contained by assay 92.3 per cent. of gold, and netted a value when melted of $66,000. Gold is a widely disseminated metal, but does not occur anywhere in large quantities, as compared with the ordinary useful metals. There is no proper ore of gold, this metal being never, so far as known, mineralized by sulphur or oxygen. Although gold is disseminated in fine and usually invisible particles through various ores of the other metals, and in many cases in quantity great enough to be separated with profit, most of the gold of the world is obtained either in the form of native gold, from washing the superficial detritus (sand and gravel), or by separating it from quartz, with which mineral it is almost invariably associated when occurring in veins or segregations in the solid rocks. Native gold is, however, in fact, an alloy of gold with silver, and traces of copper and iron are often associated with it. No native gold entirely free from silver has ever been found. The amount of the latter metal present in the gold varies greatly in different regions. The gold of California usually contains from 10 to 12 per cent. of silver; that of Australia rather less than half as much. The native gold of Mount Morgan, Queensland, approaches more nearly to chemical purity than any hitherto discovered, since it contains 99.7 per cent. of gold, and only a minute trace of silver. Pure gold is very rarely used in the arts. All gold coin and gold ornaments in use are alloys of gold with copper, or with copper and silver. The alloy is used, in the case of coin, because pure gold is too soft to bear rough usage, and for the same reason, as well as to diminish the cost, in the case of gold used for personal ornaments. The coin of England is composed of 11 parts of gold and 1 of copper; that of France and the United States of 9 of gold and 1 of copper. The so-called gold used for jewelry and watch-cases varies from 8 or 9 to 18 carats fine. (See carat, s.) The alloys of gold with copper and silver are given various shades of color by treatment with chemicals, according to fashion or fancy. Gold has been in use for ornamental purposes from the earliest times. The world's output of gold during recent years, according to the reports of the United States mint, has been as follows: 1890, $115,840,000; 1891, $130,630,000; 1892, $146,207,000; 1893, $157,228,000; 1894, $181,410,000; 1895, $200,285,000; 1896, $202,082,000; 1897, $227,604,000; 1898, $260,000,000; 1899, $300,394,000. In the United States the output has increased from over $25,000,000 in 1880 to $46,000,000 in 1899 and $60,210,000 in 1900. The total amount of gold coin in circulation in the United States at the end of 1900 was estimated as about $1,090,000,000. See gold standard.

The rule for finding it is to add 1 to the number of the year after Christ, according to the ordinary reckoning, and divide by 19, when the remainder will be the golden number. The name is said to be derived from the fact that, on the discovery of the Metonic cycle, about 432 B. C., an inscription in letters of gold was set up in Athens, and others in other cities of Greece; the numbers were also marked in gold in the ancient calendars. The golden numbers are used in ecclesiastical computations, with the exact, to determine the day on which the Easter full moon occurs, the date by which all the movable feasts in the church year are determined. See Easter. — Golden pheasant. plover, robin. See the noun. — Golden rose. a rose made of pure gold, blessed by the Pope on Lent Sunday, the fourth Sunday of Lent, used by him in blessing the people, and occasionally sent as a mark of especial honor to Catholic sovereigns and other notable persons, to churches, cities, etc. Originally it consisted of a single rose of wrought gold; the form finally adopted is a thorny branch with flowers and leaves, surmounted by one principal rose. — Golden rule. (a) The rule of conduct: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." Mat. vii. 12. (b) In arithmetic, the rule of three. See rule.

Golden sapphire. sarifrage, shiner, etc. See the noun. — Golden section. the division of a line in extreme and mean ratio, which is solved by Euclid II. 11. — Golden Spur. a papal order existing since the sixteenth century. It consists of two classes, commanders and knights. The present name is Order of St. Saviour. — Golden star. a form of monasticism in which during the papal mass on Easter day the bread is exhibited to the people for adoration. Walcott. — Golden sulphid. a sulphid of antimony, prepared by precipitating a sulphuric monobasic salt with sulphuric acid. — Golden thistle. wedding, wrasse, etc. See the noun. — Golden warblers. several species of the genus Dendroica, which resemble the common summer warbler of the United States, D. aestiva, in being almost entirely of a bright yellow color. See yellow bird. — Golden wasp. See goldwasp. — Knights of the Golden Circle. See knights. — Order of the Golden Fleece. See fleece.

My brother Jacques he keeps at school, and report speaks goldenly of his profit. Shak., As you like it, I. 1.

goldenmaid (gôl'dn-mäd), n. A fish, the conner or gilthead, Crenilabrus melops.

During this frost [the great frost of 1814, in England] a great number of the fish called golden maids were picked up on Brighton beach. Hone's Every-day Book, II. 106.

goldenpert (gôl'dn-pért), a. The Gratiola aurea, a low scrophulariaceous herb of the Atlantic States, with golden-yellow flowers.

goldenrod (gôl'dn-rod), n. [golden + rod.] A plant of the genus Solidago, the species of which have numerous small golden heads; these in the original species, S. virgaurea of Europe, are arranged in a wand-like spike. See Solidago.

But on the hills the golden-rod, and the aster in the wood,
And the yellow sun flower by the brook, in autumn beauty stood.

Bryant, Death of the Flowers.

False goldenrod. Brachyactis cordata, a plant of the Alleghenies, closely resembling Solidago. — West India goldenrod. the Neuroloma lobata, a tall composite with a panicle of yellow flowers.

goldenrod-tree (gôl'dn-rod-tré), n. The Rosa ferramora, a peculiar chenopodiaceous shrub of the Canary islands.

goldenseal (gôl'dn-sel), n. The yellowroot or yellow puccoon, Hydrastis Canadensis, a ranunculaceous plant of the United States.

golden-slopt (gôl'dn-slopt), a. Wearing slope or rather garments embroidered or adorned with gold.

Some shy golden-slopt Castallo. Marston.

golden-spoon (gôl'dn-spôn), n. In Jamaica, the Tigrauma cinerea, a small malpighiaceae tree, named from the shape and color of the petals.

golden-swift (gôl'dn-swift), n. The hepialid moth Hepialus humuli.

golden-winged (gôl'dn-wingd), a. Having yellow wings, or wings marked with yellow; applied to sundry birds; as, the golden-winged woodpecker, Colaptes auratus; the golden-winged warbler, Helminthophila chrysoptera.

golfer, n. See golfer.

gold-fern (gôl'dn-férn), n. A fern in which the under surface of the frond is covered with bright-yellow powder, giving a golden color. This occurs in many species of Gymnogramme and Nodoloma. When the powder is white the fern is called silver-fern. Different fronds of the same species may have either color, as in the California gold- and silver-fern, Gymnogramme triangularis.

gold-field (gôl'd-féld), n. A district or region where gold-mining is carried on.

Auriferous materials from our gold-fields.
Ure, Dict., IV. 413.

goldfinch (gôl'd-fínch), n. [ME. goldfinch, a. goldfinch (= Olden. goldfinch = G. goldfinch), a. gold, gold, + finch.] 1. An elegant European siskin or thistle-bird, Carduelis elegans, of the family Fringillidae, having wings conspicuously marked with yellow, and a crimson face.

Canary birds come in to heave the ball,
And Goldfinches do hope to get the gold.

Gauevine, Philomela,
II. 34.

Two goldfinches, whose sprightly song
Had been their mutual solace long,
Lied happy prisoners
there.

Cosper, Faithful Bird.

2. The American thistle-bird, Chrysomitris tristis, of the family Fringillidae, having a yellow body, with black cap, wings, and tail, the latter marked also with American Goldfinch (Chrysomitris tristis).

golet² (gō'let), n. [Origin obscure.] A Calliformian trout: named as Dolly Varden, 2.
golf (golf or gōf), n. [Dial. goff, gic, also gouff; prob. < D. kolf = ME. coler = OHG. colho, colho, a club, MHG. kolbe, G. kolbe, a club, knob, butt-end of a gun, a retort, = lecl, kölfr, the clapper of a bell, a bulb, a bolt, kyf, a club, = Sw. kolf, a butt-end, bolt, retort, = Dan. kole, a bolt, shaft, arrow (kolbe, the butt-end of a weapon, < G.). There may be a remote connection with club and clump, q. v.] A game played over an extensive stretch of ground in which holes about 4 inches in diameter are placed at distances from 100 to 500 yards apart. It is played by one or two on a side, with special implements called clubs, and with balls of gutta-percha weighing 1 1/2 oz. on a little less. The object is to drive the ball from each hole toward the next, and the hole or side that accomplishes this in the fewest strokes. A considerable variety of clubs is used (the driver, spoon, clerk, nickel, putter, etc.), according to the exigencies of the game. Golf had its birth on the grass-covered sandy downs or "links" of the seaboard of Scotland, but is now extensively played in England and in the United States.
 That in no place of the realm their be valt fat-balls, golf, or other do unpittabill sports.
Acts James IV., 1401, c. 53 (ed. 1560, c. 32, Murray).
 (Jamieson.)

golf (gōlf), v. i. [< golf, n.] To play at golf.
 Excellent golfing sport is to be had.
Encyc. Brit., X. 702.

golf-club (gōlf'klub), n. 1. An implement for a, long spoon (wood); b, balling iron (iron); c, niblick (iron); d, putter (wood); e, mashie (iron); f, driver (play club (wood)); g, chik (iron); h, brassy niblick (wood); i, putter (iron).

driving the ball in golf.—2. A club or company of golfers.

golfer (gōl'fēr), n. One who plays golf.

golia (gō'li-ā), n. [E. Ind.] A bracelet of lacquered work, richly colored, and decorated with tin-foil, worn by women in India. S. K. Handbook Indian Arts.

goliard (gō'li-ārd), n. [OF. goliard, goliard, goliard, goliard, a buffoon, jester, glutton (< ME. goliardus), < gole, golle, goule, the gullet, mouth, F. goulle, the mouth, jaws: see gole, gullet.] 1. A buffoon or jester; specifically, one of an order or class of inferior monks who attended on the tables of the richer ecclesiastics as professional jesters or buffoons. "They appear to have been in the clerical order somewhat the same as the jongleurs and minstrels among the laity, riotous and unorthodox scholars who attended on the tables of the richer ecclesiastics and gained their living and cloth by practising the profession of buffoons and jesters. The name appears to have originated towards the end of the twelfth century; and, in the documents of that time, and of the next century, is always connected with the clerical order." Wright, Walter Mapes, Pref. p. v. (Harvard). 2. One of the writers of the satirical poems collectively known as goliardery.

goliardist, n. [ME., also goliardous, < goliard: see goliard.] Same as goliard.

He was a jangler and a goliardist.
Chaucer, Gen. Prolog. l. 1, l. 567.

Thaune greued him a goliardist, a glutton of wordes.
Piers Plowman (B), Prolog. l. 130.

goliardery (gō'li-ār-dēr-ē), n. [< goliard + -ery.] A series of Latin poems written in the thirteenth century, satirizing the abuses of the church. Milman.

goliardic (gō'li-ār-dik), a. [< goliard + -ic.] Pertaining to the goliards or to goliardery.

Goliardic poetry is further curious as showing how the claustral even at that early period were a fountainhead of pagan inspiration.
Encyc. Brit., XX. 553.

goliath (gō'li-ath), n. [< Goliath, the Philistine giant (1 Sam. xvii.).] 1. Same as goliath-beetle.—2. In ornith., the giant heron, Ardea goliath, of Africa.—3. In mech., a form of crane of exceptional power.

goliath-beetle (gō'li-ath bē'th), n. A huge cetonian lamellicorn beetle of the genus Golia- thus, such as G. giganteus of Africa, or some other member of the Goliathidae.

Goliathidae (gō'li-ath-i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Goliathus + -idae.] A family of lamellicorn beetles; taking name from the genus Goliathus; the goliath-beetles.

Goliathus (gō'li-ā-thus), n. [NL., < Goliath, the Philistine giant: see goliath.] A genus of African cetonian lamellicorn beetles of enormous size; the goliath-beetles. G. giganteus is some 4 inches long and 2 inches broad, being thus one of the largest coleoptera known. The species are African, but other related genera contain species also called goliath-beetles.

golliat, gollillet, n. [Sp. gollita, dim. of gola, neck, throat, gula, throat: see gole.] A little starched band sticking out under the chin, like a ruff. Darwin.

Oh, I had rather put on the English pillory than that Spanish gollia.
Wycherley, Gentleman Dancing Master, iv. 1.

gollion, n. [< ME. gollion, gollione, gollion, < OF. gollion, aug. of goule, gole, orig. a collar, a particular use of goule, gole, the throat: see gole, gullet.] A cloak, cape, or wrap.

gollit, n. [Origin obscure.] A hand; a fist. [Old cant.]

Fie, master constable, what gollit you have? Is Justice so blind you cannot see to wash your hands?
Beau. and Fl., Coxcomb, l. 6.

gollach (gōl'ach), n. [See, also written golach, golach; < Gcel. gobhlach, forked, < gobhal, also gabhal, a fork: see gabhl.] The common earwig, Forficula auricularis, so called from the forked tail. The name is also given to some similar insects.

goloe-shoes, n. pl. [An accoust. form, like goloshoes, simulating shoe, of goloshes, galoshes: see galosh.] Galoshes. See galosh.

goloret (gō-lōr'), adv. Same as galore.

golosh (gō-losh'), n. and v. Same as galosh.

golph, golpe (gōlp), n. [Origin obscure.] In her., a roundel of a purple color.

"Wounds," i. e. "wounds." Roundels purple are so called by Boswell, the derivation being obvious. Most heralds prefer the name "golpe".
Book of Præcedence (E. L. T. S., extra ser.), l. 104.

golt (gōlt), n. Same as gull.

Gomit, n. See gomm.

Gomarist (gō-mar-ist), n. [< Gomarus (see def.) + -ist.] A follower of Francis Gomarus (1543-1641), a Dutch disciple of Calvin. The Gomarists, otherwise called Supralapsarians and Antinomians, very strongly opposed the doctrines of Arminius, adhering as rigidly to those of Calvin. Also Gomarite.

gomarita (gō-mar-i-tā), n. [E. Ind.] The Indian garden-wagtail, Nemorinella indica.

Gomarite (gō-mar-it), n. [< Gomarus (see Gomarist) + -ite.] Same as Gomarist.

gombeeniam (gōm-bēn-iam), n. The practice of resorting to or depending on money-lenders.

gombeen-man (gōm-bēn-man), n. [Ir.] A usurious money-lender.

gombo, n. See gumbol.

gome¹, n. See *gum*¹.

gome², n. See *gomm*².

gomer¹ (gō'mēr), n. Same as homer.

We will no more murmur, good Lord, but . . . fill up our gomers daily, till we come into the land of promise.
J. Bradford, Works (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 316.

gomer² (gō'mēr), n. [Named after its inventor, Gomer.] A particular form of chamber in ordnance, consisting in a conical narrowing of the bore toward its inner end. It was devised for the service of mortars in the wars of the first Napoleon.

Gomera (gō-mā'rā), n. A wine made in the Canary Islands, of which the best closely resembles Madeira.

gomerel (gōm-ēr-el), n. and v. [See, also written gomerell, gomerel, gomerell; origin obscure. Cf. gump.] 1. n. A stupid or senseless person; a blockhead.

Ye was right to refuse that claverling gomerel, Sir John.
Sutton and Guel, III. 73. (Jamieson)

II. v. Stupid; foolish.

gomlah (gōm'li), n. [Cf. Hind. gomla, a flower-pot.] In India, a water-jug or ewer, usually of earthenware. Also gamla.

gommet, n. An obsolete form of *gum*². Chaucer.

gommeline (gōm-el-in), n. [Cf. gummer.] Same as derstene.

gommer (gōm'er), n. [G. dial.] Amel-corn (Triculus amylenus) deprived of its husks by the action of millstones, much esteemed, especially in Darmstadt, in the preparation of soups.

gomphi, n. Plural of gompus, 2.

gomphiastis (gōm-fī-ā-sis), n. [NL., < Gr. gomphias, toothache or gnashing of the teeth, < gomphos, a grinder-tooth, molar; cf. gomphos, a bolt, nail, bond, fastening: see Gomphus.] In pathol., looseness of the teeth (particularly the molars) in their sockets.

Gomphinae (gōm-fī-nē), n. pl. [NL., < Gomphus + -inae.] A subfamily of Ascedina, typified by the genus Gomphus.

Gomphocarpus (gōm-fō-kār-pus), n. [NL., < Gr. gomphos, a bolt, nail, & καρπός, fruit.] A genus of asclepiadaceous herbs, distinguished from Asclepias merely by the absence of a horn or crest on the hood. The species are chiefly African, though two are found in California. Several are used medicinally, and G. frutescens is frequently cultivated in greenhouses.

gomphodont (gōm-fō-dont), a. [< Gr. gomphos, a bolt, nail, & δόντις (dōnti-) = E. tooth; cf. gomphosis.] In zool., having the teeth inserted by gomphosis; socketed, as teeth.

gompholite (gōm-fō-lit), n. [< Gr. gomphos, a bolt, nail, & λίθος, stone.] A name suggested by Brongniart as the equivalent of sagoflask.

Gompholobium (gōm-fō-lō'bi-um), n. [NL., < Gr. gomphos, a bolt, nail, & λόβος, the pod or capsule of legumes, a lobe of the ear: see lobe.] A genus of leguminous shrubs, with terminal red or yellow flowers and club- or wedge-shaped pods, all natives of Australia, several of which have been in cultivation as ornamental plants. G. uncinatum is said to be poisonous to sheep.

gomphosis (gōm-fō-sis), n. [NL., < Gr. gomphos, a bolting together, a mode of articulation, < gomphos, fasten with bolts or nails, < gomphos, a bolt, a nail.] A kind of synarthrosis or immovable articulation in which one part enters into another like a peg or nail. The socketing of the teeth in the jaws is an example. It is also called gomphosis and articulation by implantation.

Gomphrena (gōm-frē-nā), n. [NL., a corrupt form of L. gromphena (Pliny), a kind of amarantus. Cf. L. gromphena (Pliny), a Sardinian bird of the crane species.] A genus of herbs or undershrubs, of the order Amarantaceae, including about 80 species, especially abundant in the warmer parts of America, but found also in southern Asia and Australia. The small flowers are crowded with their firm scarious colored bracts into usually globose heads which retain their form and color after drying. The globe amarantus or bachelor's-button, G. globosa, a native of India, with round heads of a white, rose, or crimson color, is common in gardens.

Gomphus (gōm'fus), n. [NL., < L. gomphus, < Gr. gomphos, a bolt, nail, bond, fastening; cf. gomphos, a grinder, molar; Skt. jambha, the teeth.] 1. The typical genus of Gomphinae, having the eyes remote and the ocelli in a line. G. fraterculus is a dragon-fly, yellow, spotted with black, and having black feet.—2. [i. e.; pl. gomphi (-fi).] A kind of sponge-spicule.

The dermal spicules (of Boasellidae) are gomphi, stanni, and oxoni.
Sollas, Encyc. Brit., XXII. 432.

gomuti, gomuto (gō-mū'ti, -tō), n. [Malay.] 1. The sago-palm, Arenga saccharifera.—2. The black fiber obtained from the sago-palm, remarkable for its power of resisting decay in water. This fiber is manufactured into cordage, plaited into ornaments, employed for thatching, and put to various other similar uses.

goni, v. A Middle English form of the infinitive go and of the past participle gone.

gonad (gōn'ad), n. [< NL. gonas (gonad-) (see pl. gonades), < Gr. gonē or gonis, generation, seed, < γεννέω, γεννέω, he produced, = L. gignere, O. L. generare, produce, beget: see genus, generate, etc.] In biol., a germ-gland; a germinal or reproductive gland or organ, in the widest sense, producing sperm-cells or egg-cells; an ovary or a spermary, of whatever kind, in a primitive or an indifferent state.

The generative products, detached, as is usual in Coelomata, from definite gonads developed on its (the coelom's) lining membrane.
E. R. Lankester, Encyc. Brit., XIX. 482.

gonad-duct (gōn'ad-duct), n. See gonaduct.

gonades (gōn'a-dēs), n. pl. [NL., pl. of gonas: see gonad.] In physiol., the essential sexual organs of either sex, as distinguished from the accessory genitals; the sexual glands, whether ovary or testis or both together.

gonaduct (gōn'a-duct), n. [Contr. of gonad-duct, < gonad + duct.] The duct of a gonad; the special tube which conveys the product of generation in either sex from the place where it is generated to the exterior. The oviducts and sperm-ducts are both gonaducts. Preferably gonad-duct.

They possess a well-developed cation, blood-vessels with red blood, a segmental series of nephridia (modified in some as gonadact). Eucypr. Brit., XXIV, 132.

gonagra (gō-nag'ra), n. [NL., < Gr. γονα, = E. knee, + αγρα, a taking (used for 'gout,' as in podagra).] In pathol., an affection of the knee; gout or rheumatism in the knee.

gonakia (gon'g-kō), n. [African.] The Acacia Arabica, which yields a hard and durable wood.

gonal (gō'nāl), a. [gon-ax + -al.] Of or pertaining to the gony of a bird's bill; gonydeal; as, the gonal angle. Cours.

gonalgia (gō-nāl'jī-ā), n. Same as gonalgia.

gonangia, n. Plural of gonangium.

gonangial (gō-nan'jī-āl), a. [gonangium + -al.] Of, pertaining to, or of the nature of a gonangium; gonothelial.

gonangium (gō-nan'jī-um), n.; pl. gonangia (-ā). [NL., < Gr. γονα, generation, seed, + αγγιον, a vessel.] In zool., an organ of some Hydrozoa. It is formed upon the blastostyle by the spitting of the ectoderm into an inner layer, which invests the central axis formed by the endoderm with the prolongation of the somatic cavity, and an outer layer, chiefly or entirely chitinous. Budding gonophores project into or emerge from the interspace between these layers. See cut under Campanularia.

In Dicoryne conferta, the gonophore contained in a gonangium . . . is set free as a ciliated blastostyle body. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 120.

gonapophyses, n. Plural of gonapophysis.

gonapophysial (gon-a-pō-fis'ī-āl), a. Pertaining to or of the nature of a gonapophysis.

gonapophysis (gon-a-pō-fis'ī-sis), n.; pl. gonapophyses (-ēz). [gon-, generation, + apophysis, an outgrowth, process; see apophysis.] One of the paired pieces forming the external genital organs of insects. In the female they are appendages of the eighth and ninth ventral abdominal segments, which form the ovipositor or sting in the male they are attached to the ninth or tenth segment and become the clamping organs.

In the female (cockroach), . . . on the sternal region behind the vulva, between it and the anus, arises a pair of elongated processes, divided into two portions . . . They embrace and partly enclose two other processes having somewhat the shape of knife blades . . . Of these, which may be termed gonapophyses, the study of their development shows that the posterior (bifid) pair belong to the ninth somite, while the anterior pair belong to the eighth . . . These plates and bristles (of the male cockroach) terminate processes of the sternal region of the tenth somite, on each side of the aperture of the vas deferens, and therefore though they are of the same nature as the gonapophyses of the female, they are not their exact homologues. Huxley, Anat. Invert., pp. 246, 247.

gonarthritia (gon-ār-thrit'is), n. [NL., < Gr. γονα, = E. knee, + αρθριον, a joint, + ιτις, In pathol., inflammation of the knee-joint.

gonarthrosis (gon-ār-throk'is), n. [NL., < Gr. γονα, = E. knee, + αρθρον, a joint, + ωσις, badness; see arthrosis.] In pathol., cancerous condition or necrosis of the knee-joint.

Gonatopides (gon-a-top'ī-dēz), n. pl. [NL., < Gonatopus + -ides.] A group of parasitic hymenopterous insects, of the family Proctotrupidae, taking name from the genus Gonatopus; same as Dryininae. Hewitson, 1840.

Gonatopus (gō-nat'ō-pus), n. [NL., (Ljungb. 1810), < Gr. γονα, = E. knee, + ποτις, = E. foot.] A genus of lebanon-flies of the family Proctotrupidae and subfamily Dryininae, having raptorial fore tarsi and no wings. They are parasitic on leaf-hoppers. There are several European and North American species, as G. confertus of Connecticut.

Gonatopus confertus. (1) ovipositor, natural size. (2) right fore leg, highly magnified.

gondole (gon'de-lō), n. See gondola, 2.

gondola (gon'dō-lā), n. [Early mod. E. and E. and U. S. dial. gondola, gondolo, gondolo, etc.; = D. G. gondel = Dan. Sw. gondel = F. gondole = Sp. gondola = Pg. gondola, < It. gondola, dim. of gonda, formerly used in the same sense of M.L. gaddia, a kind of boat), prob. < Gr. γονα, a drinking-vessel: said to be a Pers. word: prob. < Pers. bandā, an earthen vessel, a butt, vat.]

1. A flat-bottomed boat, very long and narrow, formerly almost the exclusive means of conveyance in Venice, on the canals, but now superseded in part on the chief canals by small omnibus-steamers. A gondola of middle size is about 30 feet long and 6 feet broad, terminating at each end in a sharp elevated point or prow, and is usually propelled by a single rower. [See gondolier.] Toward the center there is in some a curtained cabin for the passengers. Gondolas are now always black throughout in consequence of an old law against extravagance in ornamentation.

Venetian gondola.

He saw where he did swim
Along the shore, as swift as glance of eye,
A little Gondolier. Spenser, F. Q., II, vi, 2.

A gondola with two oars at Venice is as insignificant as a coach and six horses with a large equipage to another country. Addison, Remarks on Italy (ed. Bohn), I, 387.

Didst ever see a Gondola? for fear
You should not, I'll describe it you exactly Tis a long covered boat that's common here, Carved at the prow, built lightly but compactly
Rowed by two rowers, each with a Gondolier
It glides along the water looking blackly
Just like a coffin clapt in a canoe,
Where none can make out what you say or do.
Byron, Beppo, st. 10.

2. A lighter or large flat-bottomed boat on the rivers of New England. In this use also gondolo, gundolo.—3. A small boat used to transport the passengers or crew of a ship to and from the shore.

They found that the captain, his wife, and principal passengers had forsaken the bark, and were gone ashore in the gondola. J. Barron, Sh. F. Drake, p. 60.

4. On a railroad, a gondola car. See below. [U. S.]—5. A vase or bowl of decorative character having a wide mouth, and usually of greater breadth than height; a term applied especially to carved vessels in crystal, agate, and similar materials. —6. [gō-, < NL.] In conch., a genus of gastropods: same as Cymatium, L. Férussac, 1821. Gondola car, a railroad freight car with low sides secured by stanchions to a platform body. Sometimes the sides are hinged to the body. [U. S.]

gondole, n. [gō-, < NL., < It. gondola, a gondola: see gondola.] Same as gondola.

Boating upon the water in a gondola.

gondolier (gon'dō-ler'), n. [gō-, < NL., < It. gondoliera, dim. of gondola, a gondola: see gondola.] A small gondola.

That grand Canale, where (stately) moves a young
A fleet of bridal gondoliers appear.
Decker, London's Temples

gondolier (gon'dō-ler'), n. [Formerly also gondolier; = F. gondolier, < It. gondoliera, < gondola, a gondola: see gondola.] A man who rows a gondola. When there is but one he stands at the stern, there is sometimes a second at the bow. Gondoliers were formerly celebrated for their songs, and are noted for the dexterity with which they manage their craft.

I mean those seducing and tempting gondoliers of the Rialto bridge.

In Venice Tasso's heroes are no more;
And silent rows the wretched gondolier.
Byron, Childs Harold, iv, 2.

gondolo (gon'dō-lō), n. See gondola.

Gondula (gon'dū-lā), n. [NL., < It. gondola, a boat: see gondola.] A genus of pennatulid polyps, typical of the family Gonulidae. The type is G. mirabilis, which is obtained by dredging off the Norwegian coast at a depth of 160 fathoms.

Gonulidae (gon-dū-lī-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Gondula + -idae.] A family of Pennatulida, with a fixed stalkless bilateral polypoid, having a rachis with a hollow canal divided by four convergent longitudinal septa, and on each side subapical polygynous ridges strengthened with calcareous spicules.

gone (gōn), p. a. [See go.] 1. Lapsed; lost; hopeless; beyond recovery: in a gone case and similar phrases.

When it is come to that, it is commonly a gone case with persons [backsliders] as to these convictions. J. Edwards, Works (1846), IV, 411.

2. Characterized by a sinking sensation, as if about to faint; weak and faint: as, a gone feeling.—3. In archery, wide of the mark or beyond bounds: said of an arrow.

Eachwing short, or gone, or cyther ayde wyde.
Ascham, Turphillius, p. 18 (reprint).

An arrow is said to be gone when it may from its slight be judged to fall wide of, or far from, the mark.

Eucypr. Brit., II, 375.

An arrow is said to be gone when it will fly beyond the target.

M. and W. Thompson, Archery, p. 26.

A gone case. See def. 1.—A gone oom. See oom.

goneness (gōn'nes), n. [gone + -ness.] A faint or sinking sensation; faintness: as, a feeling of goneness. [Colloq.]

I . . . excused myself upon the plea that I had no appetite so early in the morning. 'Ah,' said Mrs. Best, 'just like you was, cousin Andy Jane—a goneness.' Atlantic Monthly, LIII, 222.

Gonepteryx (gō-nep'ty-rīks), n. [NL., badly formed, more correctly Gonipteryx, and prop. Gonipteryx, < Gr. γονα, an angle, + πτερυξ, wing.] A genus of pierian butterfly, of the family Papilionidae: so called from the angulation of the wings. G. chameris is the common European brimstone butterfly, of a yellow color, expanding about 2½ inches. Its larva feeds on the buckthorn. G. cleopatra is a widely diffused old world species. G. cleopatra and G. merula are two large Mexican forms. Also written Gonipteryx. See cut of brimstone-butterfly, under brimstone.

goner (gōn'ēr), n. One who or that which is lost, ruined, or past recovery. [Colloq.]

gonfalon (gon'fā-lon), n. [A corruption of the earlier gonfalon, q. v.] Originally, a banner or small pennant attached to a lance or spear; an ensign or standard, especially one having two or three streamers or tails, fixed on a frame made to turn like a ship's vane, or suspended from a cross-yard, as in the case of the papal or ecclesiastical gonfalon. See labarum. The person intrusted with the gonfalon in the medieval republican cities of Italy was often the chief person in the state.

Ten thousand thousand ensigns high advanced,
Standard and gonfalon, twist van and rear Stream in the air, and for distinction serve
Of hierarchies, of orders, and degrees.
Milton, P. L., v, 200.

There came an image in Life's retinue
That had Love's whig and bore his gonfalon.
D. O. Rossetti, Sonnets, Death in Love.

gonfalonier (gon'fā-lō-nēr'), n. [A corruption of the earlier gonfalonier, q. v.] The bearer of a gonfalon; a chief standard-bearer.—2. In the middle ages, the title of the chief magistrate of Florence and other Italian republics, elected by the people. In some Italian cities the title continued in use till modern times, the gonfaloniers being in some instances mayors and in others officers of police. The dukes of Parma and of some other cities bore the title of "gonfaloniers of the church."

Had also [Florence] not her private counsils debating, her great council resolving, and her magistrates executing? Was not the rotation, too, provided for by the annual election of her gonfalonier?

Wm. Wren, Monarchy Asserted, 2.

It was enacted that the gonfalonier should always reside with the signior, and have four thousand armed men under his command. J. Adams, Works, V, 21.

gonfanon (gon'fā-non), n. [ME. gonfanon, gonfanon, gonfaynan, etc., < OF. gonfanon, gonfanon, F. gonfanon, Pr. gonfano, gonfano, gonfano, etc., = Sp. gonfalon, = It. gonfallo = It. gonfalone, < ML. gonfano(n), gonfano(n), a banner, < OHG. gonfano (= AS. guthfann = Icel. gunnfann), a battle-standard, < gunt, gunt (= AS. guth = Icel. gunnr, guthr), battle, + fano, rano, MHG. G. fahne (= AS. fana), a banner: see fane, rane. Now gonfalon, q. v.] The earlier form of gonfalon.

And that was he that bare the ensigne
Of worship, and the gonfanon, read gonfanon.
R. M. of the Rose, l. 1201.

The fallen gonfanon of Hurold on which the skill of English hands had so vainly wrought the golden form of the Fighting Man.
E. J. Freeman, Norman Conquest IV, 40.

gonfanonier, n. [OF. gonfanonier, < OH. gonfanon, later OH. gonfannier, gonfannier, < gonfanon, a banner: see gonfanon.] The earlier form of gonfalonier.

gong, n. An obsolete form of gong.

gong (gong), n. [Many gong or gong, a gong.] 1. A musical instrument, of Asiatic origin, consisting of a large shallow metallic bowl, made of an alloy of copper and tin, which is struck with a stick having a stuffed leather head. The tone produced is compound, and useful only for emphasis or for an over-coming note; and the gong has been much used as an instrument of call where a far-reaching sound is required, as in hotels and steamships. Also called gong-gong.

2. A stationary bell in the form of a shallow bowl, which is struck with a hammer.

gong-bell (gong'bel), n. Same as gong², 2.
gong-gong (gong'gong), n. Same as gong², 1.
gong-hammer (gong'ham'er), n. The hammer by which a gong is struck.

gong-metal (gong'met'al), n. The metal of which gongs are made: an alloy consisting of about four parts of copper and one of tin.

Gongora (gong'go-rä), n. [In honor of Don A. Caballero y Gongora, a viceroy of New Granada.] A singular genus of epiphytic orchids of tropical America, including about 20 species, several of which are in cultivation. They have large plaited leaves and drooping racemes of rather large flowers.

Gongoresque (gong'go-res'k'), a. [Góngora (see def.) + -esque.] Resembling Góngora, a Spanish poet, or his style. See Gongorism.

He is Gongoresque in his style, as in Quintana.
 Ticknor, Span. Lit., III, 92.

Gongorism (gong'go-riz'm), n. [Góngorismo, Góngora (see def.) + -ismo, f. -ism.] A kind of affected elegance of style introduced into Spanish literature in imitation of that of the Spanish poet Góngora y Argote (1561-1627).

A folio volume, with numerous plates, . . . not without standing the Gongorism of its style, is a book to be read for the history of Spanish art. Ticknor, Span. Lit., I, 32.

Tales . . . told in that euphuistic language which more or less corresponded in date or character with gongorism in Spain. Quarterly Rev., CLXIII, 30.

gong-stand (gong'stand), n. An open frame used for suspending a Chinese gong, so that it can be sounded with convenience.

gongyli, n. Plural of gongylus, 1.

Gongylospores (gon'ji-lo-spér'mô-s), n. pl. [NL., G. gongylus, round, + spora, seed.] In the systems of classification of Agardh and Harvey, a division of the cryptogamete order Floridæ, in which the spores are heaped together without order; distinguished from the Dendrospores, in which the spores are arranged in a definite manner. The distinction has less value than was formerly supposed.

gongylus (gon'ji-lus), n. [NL., G. gongylus, round.] 1. Pl. gongylus (-li). In bot.: (a) A name given to a spore of certain fungi. Imp. Dict. (b) A round, hard, deciduous body connected with the reproduction of certain sea weeds. Imp. Dict.—2. [cap.] In zool.: (a) A genus of orthopterous insects. Thunberg, 1812. (b) A genus of lizards, of the family Sepidae. Wagler, 1830.

Gonia (gô'ni-ä), n. [NL. (Meigen, 1826), so called from the angled antennal bristle, G. gonia, a corner, an angle.] 1. A genus of flies, of the family Tachinidae. They are rather large black or blackish-brown species, with the abdomen usually reddish yellow. They occur in Europe and America, and are parasitic. G. fasciata of Europe is found in humblebee nests, while other species infest the larvae of lepidopterous insects. 2. A genus of tineid moths, of the family Gelechiidae. The sole species is the German G. pudorina. Heinemann, 1870.—3. [i. e.] Plural of gonion.

Goniaster (gô'ni-as'tér), n. [NL., G. gonia, a corner, angle, + aster, a star; see aster.] A genus of starfishes, giving name to the family Goniasteridae. L. Agassiz.

Goniasteridae (gô'ni-as'tér-i-dé), n. pl. [NL., Goniaster + -idae.] A family of starfishes, of the order Asteroidea, of pentagonal shape, with slightly projecting arms, two rows of suckers, usually two rows of comparatively large marginal plates, and the skeleton at least in part formed of rounded or polygonal ossicles. It includes some particularly large and handsome species, known as cushion-stars.

goniatite (gô'ni-ä-tit), n. [G. Ni. Goniatites.] A fossil cephalopod of the family Goniatitidae.

Goniatites (gô'ni-ä-tit'és), n. [NL. (Haan, 1825), apparently an error for Goniatites, irreg. G. gonia, an angle, + ites, a stone (see -ite).] A genus of fossil ammonites, giving name to the family Goniatitidae, having a discoid shell with angulated lobed sutures.

Until some twelve years ago, Goniatites had not been found lower than the Devonian rocks, but now in Bohemia, they have been found in rocks assigned as Silurian. H. Spence, Universal Progress, p. 241.

goniatitic (gô'ni-ä-tit'ik), a. Resembling or related to the goniatites.

goniatitid (gô'ni-ä-tit'id), n. A member of the Goniatitidae.

Goniatitidae (gô'ni-ä-tit'id-é), n. pl. [NL., Goniatites + -idae.] A family of fossil cephalopods, typified by the genus Goniatites.

goniatitinnula (gô'ni-ä-tit-in'u-lä), n. pl. goniatitinnula (-lä). [NL., Goniatites + -inna + -ula.] The larval stage of development among ammonoids in which they resemble the adults of the Goniatitidae. Hyatt, Proc. Bost. Soc. Nat. Hist., 1887.

gonidangium (gon-i-dan'ji-um), n. pl. gonidangia (-ji). [NL., G. gonidium + Gr. angion, a vessel, receptacle, angion, a vessel.] In mycol., a sporangium within which asexual spores (gonidia, conidia) are produced, as in Mucor.

gonidia, n. Plural of gonidium.

gonidial (gô'ni-dial), a. [G. gonidium + -al.] Pertaining to, of the nature of, or containing a gonidium: as, the gonidial grooves of a sea-anemone, serving to convey ova.

The spores produced from the ostensible fructification in this class are all non-sexual or gonidial. W. R. Carpenter, Micros., § 818.

Gonidial layer or stratum, in heteromorous lichens, the layer or stratum in which the gonidia are situated, next beneath the upper cortical layer.

The colourable material in the Parmellia is found underneath the gonidial layer. W. L. Lindsay, Chemical Reaction in Lichens.

gonidic (gô'ni-dik), a. Same as gonidial.

gonidium (gon-i-dim'i-um), n. pl. gonidia (-di). [NL., G. gonidium + gonium.] A gonidoid cell that is smaller than a gonidium proper, and intermediate between a gonidium and a gonimium. Gonidia occur in Peltigera and some other genera of lichens. To these also belong hymenial gonidia, which are often very minute, and are present in the thallium. Also called epigonidium. See gonimium.

Green cells gonidia rather than gonimia, but Nylander takes them for intermediate between the two sorts. Gonidium, Nyl. E. Tuckerm., N. A. Lichens, I, 108.

gonidiogenous (gô'ni-dî-ô-jî-ous), a. [G. gonidium + Gr. -gēnos, producing; see -gēnos.] Producing or having the power to produce gonidia.

The origin of the first cortical gonidiogenous cellulae. Fries, Brit., XIV, 557.

gonidioid (gô'ni-dî-oid), a. [G. gonidium + -oid.] Resembling the gonidia of lichens: said of certain algae.

Many of these forms are more or less similar to gonidioid algae. Fries, Brit., XIV, 558.

gonidiophore (gô'ni-dî-ô-for), n. [G. gonidium + Gr. -phoros, phoros = E. bear.] In mycol., a conidiophore.

The Basidiomycetes are wholly asexual forms, they are called fruit representing a complex gonidiophore. Nature, XXXV, 578.

gonidiouse (gô'ni-dî-ô-s), a. [G. gonidium + -ous.] Containing or provided with gonidia.

Plants of some lower tribes, e. g., Graphidæ and Verrucariæ, in which the thallus is but sparingly gonidiouse, and the life consequently is shorter. Kütz., Brit., XIV, 558.

gonidium (gô'ni-dî-um), n. pl. gonidia (-di). [NL., G. gonia, generation, seed, + dim. term. -idium.] 1. In algal., a reproductive body produced asexually, as a tetraspore or zoospore.

By some authors the term is made to include also the asexual reproductive bodies of fungi and other cryptogams being in this sense synonymous with conidium.

2. In bryol., a cell filled with granules. Brattström.

3. One of the green or chlorophyll-bearing elements of lichens, usually occurring in the thallus in a distinct layer, but sometimes not definitely arranged. They are usually variously rounded cells, distinct or in chains or filaments, and multiply by fission. They were formerly supposed to be produced by the hyphae of the thallus at their tips, but some recent observers hold that they are formed endogenously in all parts of the lichen and its fruit; others believe that they originate entirely outside and independently of the lichen.

The various forms of gonidia are found to resemble closely various forms of fresh-water algae. The Schwendenerian hypothesis asserts that the gonidia are algae, and that the fungoid part of the lichen is a fungus parasitic upon them. Several forms have been named, as follows: (a) Eugonidia, or gonidia proper, those having a paracarpophyll green color. They are subdivided into (1) haplogonidia, resembling Volvox; (2) polygonidia, depressed and variously membraneously connected gonidia; (3) trigonidia, or ekyrgonidia, which contain orange granules; (4) conferogonidia, resembling Conferva; (5) trigonidia, smaller than gonidia proper, and intermediate between them and gonimia. They include hymenial gonidia; (6) Gonimia, which are glaucous green or whitish. They include varieties named and characterized as follows: (1) haplogonimia, large, simple, or in small groups; (2) trigonimia, which are spheroidal or spherophoidal, and are characteristic of Phyllopori; (3) trigonimia, the commonest form, which are smaller in moniliform chains, are contained in syngonimia, and occur in Collopori; (4) syngonimia, like the preceding, but not moniliform, and in globose syngonimia. Also called ekyrgonidia.

The primordial cell should be favorable either to hyphae or gonidia. E. Tuckerm., N. A. Lichens, I, 108.

But after this confusion and the non-reproductive character of Wallruth's gonidia had long been recognized, the expression was still retained in an altered sense for the Algae of the Lichen-thallus, and with it the terms gonidial layer or gonimic layer (stratum gonimicum), hymenial gonidia, and others of the same kind. De Bary, Fungi (trans.), p. 417.

Hymenial gonidia, which are often very minute, and are present in the thallium (destitute of paraphyses) of various Pyrenocarpel. Encyc. Brit., XIV, 558.

gonimia, n. Plural of gonimium.

gonimic (gô'ni-mik), a. [G. gonimium + -ic.] Relating to gonimia; containing gonimia: as, the gonimic tissue of Collema. Also gonimous.

Thallus not gelatinous, with a gonidial, rarely gonimic stratum. Encyc. Brit., XIV, 558.

Gonimic layer, a gonidial layer in which the alveol cells are gonimia.

gonimium (gô'ni-mi-um), n. pl. gonimia (-ji). [NL., G. gonia, able to produce (cf. gonia, generation, seed), G. gonimium, gonimium, generate, produce; see gonad. Cf. gonidium.] In lichenology, a gonidium that is not grass-green, but usually bluish-green. Gonimia are often arranged in moniliform chains, and resemble algae of the family Nostocaceae, with which they are believed by some lichenologists to be identical. Also called pleurogonidium. See gonidium.

Gonimia (or the gonidial granules already mentioned), which are naked, pale greenish, glaucous greenish or bluish. Encyc. Brit., XIV, 558.

gonimous (gon'i-mus), a. [G. gonimium + -ous.] Same as gonimic. E. Tuckerm.

gonioautocious (gô'ni-ô-ä-tê'shîus), a. [G. gonia, an angle, + auto, same, + chous, house.] In bryology, having both male and female inflorescence on the same plant, the former bud-like and axillary on a female branch.

Goniobasis (gô'ni-ô-bâ'sis), n. [NL., G. gonia, a corner, an angle, + basis, base.] A large genus of tenuiglossate holostomatous postinbranchiate gastropods, of the family Melaniidae and subfamily Streptomatinae, containing most of the species of the latter. G. impressa is an example.

Goniodes (gô'ni-ô-dez), n. [NL., G. gonia, angular, G. gonia, an angle, + ides, form.] 1. A genus of mallophagous insects, of the family Armada (or Phlebotomidae), containing bird-lice. G. numidensis infests the guinea-fowl; G. stylus, the turkey; G. fulvicornis, the peacock; G. ordalii, the pheasant; G. gus and G. dissimilis are found on the common hen. Nitzsch, 1818.

2. A genus of staphylinid beetles. Kirby.

goniodont (gô'ni-ô-dont), a. and n. I. a. Pertaining to or having the characters of the goniodontidae. II. n. One of the Goniodontidae; a loricearid.

Goniodontes (gô'ni-ô-dont'és), n. pl. [NL., G. gonia, an angle, + odont (odont) = E. tooth.] A family of nematognathous fishes having slender angulated teeth: same as Loricariidae. Agassiz, 1829.

Goniodontidae (gô'ni-ô-dont'i-dé), n. pl. [NL., Goniodontes + -idae.] A family of nematognathous fishes: same as Loricariidae.

Goniodorididae (gô'ni-ô-dô-rid'i-dé), n. pl. [NL., G. goniodoris (G. gonia, an angle; Doris, a generic name) + -idae.] A family of nudibranchiate gastropods, typified by the genus Goniodoris, having a sessile or petiolated suctorial pharyngeal bulb.

Goniognatha (gô'ni-ô-gnâ-thâ), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of goniognathus; see goniognathous.] A section of terrestrial pulmonate gastropods, having the jaw composed of several pieces obliquely joined together side by side. It includes the family Orthaticidae.

goniognathous (gô'ni-ô-gnâ-thus), a. [G. goniognathus, G. gonia, an angle, + gnâthos, jaw.] In conch., having a jaw composed of separate contiguous plates: specifically, of or pertaining to the Goniognatha.

Goniopodoti (gô'ni-ô-pô-dô'ti), n. pl. [NL., G. gonia, an angle, + podotus, scaly, also the name of a fish, G. podotus (podotus), a scale.] An order of fishes: an alternative name of the Gonioidae. Agassiz.

goniometer (gô'ni-om'ê-tér), n. [G. gonia, an angle, + metron, a measure.] An instrument for measuring solid angles, or the inclination of planes, particularly the angles formed by the faces of crystals. A contact or hand goniometer consists of a graduated circle or half-circle, with two arms movable about a center and either attached or free. The edges of these arms are brought in close contact with the two surfaces, and the angle is then read off on the graduated arc. A reflecting goniometer consists of a graduated circle supported in either a vertical or a horizontal position upon a stand, and provided, first, with a more or less elaborate arrangement for adjusting and centering the crystal to be measured, so that the intersection edge shall be exactly in the axis of rotation of the circle, and, second, with one or (better) two telescopes. In the latter case one serves to project a signal, as a hair cross upon the surface to be measured, and the other to observe this signal as reflected. The angle through which the graduated circle has revolved to make the signal visible, first from one plane and then from the other, is the supplement of the true internal angle between the two faces. A contact-level goniometer is provided with a graduated circle, like the last form, but a point connected with a delicate lever-system takes the place of the telescope and eye to fix the position first of one and then of the other plane.

the signal visible, first from one plane and then from the other, is the supplement of the true internal angle between the two faces. A contact-level goniometer is provided with a graduated circle, like the last form, but a point connected with a delicate lever-system takes the place of the telescope and eye to fix the position first of one and then of the other plane.

goniometric, goniometrical (gō-ni-ō-met'rik, -ri-kal), a. [As goniometer + -ic.] Relating to the measurement of angles. — Goniometrical line, the value of a trigonometrical function expressed by a line of suitable length relative to an assumed radius. — Goniometrical problem, a problem in trigonometry, to be solved analytically or synthetically. — Goniometric function. See function.

goniometry (gō-ni-ō-met'ri), n. [As goniometer + -y.] The art of measuring solid angles. — gonion (gō-ni-on), n.; pl. gonia (-i). [NL., < Gr. gonia, an angle, corner.] The angle of the lower jaw; the mandibular angle; chiefly used in craniology. See craniometry.

Goniopholididae (gō-ni-ō-fō-lid'i-de), n. pl. [NL., < Goniopholis (-id-) + -idae.] A family of amphicercous crocodilians, typified by the genus Goniopholis. The species are extinct.

Goniopholis (gō-ni-ō-fō-lis), n. [NL. (R. Owen), < Gr. gonia, an angle, + pholis, a horny scale, as of reptiles.] A genus of fossil crocodiles with amphicercous vertebrae; so called from the angular scales. G. crassus is the Swanage crocodile, found in the parish of Swanage in England.

Goniocoma (gō-ni-ō-sō-mā), n. [NL., < Gr. gonia, an angle, + coma, body.] 1. A genus of colubrine serpents, of the family Dendrophidion, or tree-snakes. G. naryphalus is a large Bornean species, which attains a length of nearly 7 feet. — 2. A genus of arachnids.

goniostat (gō-ni-ō-stat), n. [< Gr. gonia, angle, + statē, verbal adj. of istatō, stand; see static.] A device for cutting the facets of diamonds.

Goniostomata (gō-ni-ō-stō-mā-tā), n. pl. [NL., pl. of Goniostoma, < Gr. gonia, an angle, + stoma, mouth.] In the Blainville classification (1825), one of five families of Paracephala, composed of the genera Solarium and Trachus, in a broad sense.

goniotheca (gō-ni-ō-thē-kā), n.; pl. goniothecae (-ē). [NL., < Gr. gonia, an angle, + theca, a case.] In the botanical genus Belaguetia and its allies, same as macropterangium.

goniotropous (gō-ni-ō-trop-us), a. [< Gr. gonia, an angle, + trōpō, turn.] In bot., quadrangular, with two of the angles anterior and posterior, and the others lateral, in distinction from pleurotropous, where the sides occupy corresponding positions; applied to the stems of Belaguetia, etc.

goniorygomatic (gō-ni-ō-ri-gō-mat'ik), a. [< NL. gonion + zygomatic (-i-) + -ic.] Pertaining to the gonion and to the zygoma. See craniometry.

The gonio-epistoma index . . . is 73.4 and 73.8 respectively in the Yakuza skulls.

Anthropol. Jour., XVIII, 24.

gonitis (gō-ni'tis), n. [NL., < Gr. gonis, = E. knee, + -itis.] In pathol., inflammation of the knee-joint.

gonnet, gonnet. Middle English preterite plural of gyn.

gonne, n. A Middle English form of gyn.

gonoblast (gon'ō-blast), n. [NL., < Gr. gonos, generation, seed, sex (see gonad), + blastos, germ.] In biol., any cell which takes part in reproduction.

gonoblastic (gon'ō-blas'tik), a. [< gonoblast + -ic.] Having the character of a gonoblast; pertaining to a gonoblast.

gonoblastidia, n. Plural of gonoblastidium.

gonoblastidial (gon'ō-blas'tid'ial), a. [< gonoblastidium + -al.] Pertaining to a gonoblastidium; blastostylar.

gonoblastidium (gon'ō-blas'tid'i-on), n.; pl. gonoblastidia (-i). Same as gonoblastidium.

gonoblastidium (gon'ō-blas'tid-i-on), n.; pl. gonoblastidia (-i). [NL., < Gr. gonos, generation, seed, + blastos, germ, + dim. term. -idium.] In Hydrozoa, an offshoot or a process which bears the reproductive receptacles or gonophores, and the bunch of gonophores so borne. When it is branched, and the male and female gonophores are borne upon different branches, those bearing the former are called androgonophores, those bearing the latter gonophores. The gonoblastidium is called by Albinus blastostyle.

Gonoblastidium of Atherya bearing three types of gonophores: a gonoblastidium, a gonoblastidium, and two gonophores. Enlarged.

The groups of male and female gonophores are borne upon separate branches of the gonoblastidium (androgonophores and gonophores). Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 120.

gonocalyxes, n. Latin plural of gonocalyx.

gonocalyxine (gon'ō-kal'is-in), a. [< gonocalyx + -ine.] Having the character of a gonocalyx; pertaining to a gonocalyx.

gonocalyx (gon'ō-kal'iks), n. pl. gonocalyxes, gonocalyces (-ik-ses, -kal'ses). [NL., < Gr. gonos, generation, seed, + kalos, beautiful.] In zool., the swimming-bell in a medusiform gonophore which is not detached.

gonochrome (gon'ō-krom), n. [< Gr. gonos, generation, seed, + chroma, color, < chroma, carry, hold, sustain, freq. of chromō, hold, have; see chroma.] Albinus's name of those medusae of Hydrozoa which produce genitalia, as distinguished from blastochromes, which produce buds.

gonochorismal (gon'ō-kō-riz'mal), a. [< gonochorismus + -al.] Pertaining to gonochorismus.

gonochorismus (gon'ō-kō-riz'mus), n. [NL., < Gr. gonos, generation, sex, + choros, separation, < choros, separate; see chorism.] 1. In biol., separation of sex; sexual distinction. — 2. In ontology, the assumption by a primitively indifferently generative organ of the characters of the male or female. — 3. In physiology, the acquisition of distinct sex by different individuals of a group or species of animals which were before hermaphrodite or of neither sex.

gonococcus (gon'ō-kō-kus), n. pl. gonococci (-i). [NL., < Gr. gonos, generation, seed, + NL. coccus, q. v.] A cell (coccus) of the micrococcus found in and among the pus-cells of the gonorrheal discharge.

Gonodactylus (gon'ō-dak'til-us), n. [NL. (Latreille), < Gr. gonos, L. gonos, + dactylus, finger; see dactyl.] A notable genus of stomatopodous crustaceans, related to Squilla, but having the subchelate claw without teeth or spines. G. chelata is an example. Their larvae are among those called glass-shrimps.

gonof, gonoph (gon'ōf), n. [Said to be < Heb. gonah, a thief, as used by German Jews in London. Regarded as a humorous term for gonococcus, with an allusion similar to that in the name of the "Arthur Barker" in Lockhart's story of "Oliver Twist." A thief or an amateur pick-pocket. [Slang.]

I am obliged to take him into custody. He's as delicate as a young gonococcus as I know, however. — Lockhart, Black House, etc.

Gonoleptes (gon'ō-lep'tēs), n. Same as Gonyoleptes.

Gonolobus (gō-nol'ō-bus), n. [NL., < Gr. gonos, seed, + lobos, the capsule or pod of leguminous plants; see lob.] An acrolopidaceous genus of twining or trailing perennial herbs or woody plants, including about 70 species, all of tropical and northern America. They have mostly cordate opposite leaves and dull or dark colored flowers, followed by foliaceous like those of Asclepias. Some tropical species referred to this genus have been used in medicine.

Thomas earl of Kent, 1387, willed his body to be buried as soon as it godly may in the abbey of Brune.

Test. Valence, p. 130. (Nares.)

goodman (gûd'man or, in sense 1, gûd'man'), n. 1. pl. goodmen (-men). [Common in E. dial. use, also contr. gumman (cf. gummer for gumwater, gummer, gaffer for grandmother, grandfather).] < ME. gode-man (tr. L. paterfamilias): < god + man; lit. the worthy or excellent man, the adj. having become conventional and merged with the noun. [The supposition that goodman is an acronym of AS. godesman, a man (a once-occurring poet. word, < gode, a man, = L. homo, + man, a man, L. vir), is quite groundless. Cf. goodwife.] 1. The man of the house; master; husband; head of a family. [Now obsolete, or only in rustic use as two words.]

If the goodman of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up.

Mat. xiv, 28.

Bell my wife she loves not strife,

Yet she will lead me if she can,

And oft, to live a quiet life,

I am forced to yield, though I me good-man.

Take thy Old Clerk about Thee.

How can her old Good-man

With Honour take her back again?

Prior, Alma, II.

2. A familiar appellation of civility; a term of respect, frequently used to or of a person before his surname: nearly equivalent to Mr. or sometimes to gaffer. It was sometimes used ironically. [Obsolescent.]

With you, goodman boy, if you please.

Shak., Lea, II, 2.

Goodman coxcomb the citizen, who would you speak withal?

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, v, 2.

Our neighbor Cole and goodman Newton have been sick, but somewhat amended again.

Winstrop, Hist. New England, I, 422.

After this saluting, the commendation of Athens, which had afore condemned him, were suddenly stricken again in love with him, and asked that he was an honest man again and loved the city, and many gave good-mornings.

Udall, tr. of Apophthegms of Erasmus, p. 270.

She spoke of the domestic kind of captivity and drudgeries that women are put unto, with many such good-mornings.

Hemmel, Parly of Beasts, p. 67.

good-natured (gûd'nâ'türd), a. Having a good disposition; naturally mild in temper; easily acquiescent.

A man who is commonly called good-natured is hardly to be thanked for anything he does, because half that is acted about him is done rather by sufferance than approbation.

Taylor, No. 70.

In that same village . . . there lived many years since . . . a simple good-natured fellow, of the name of Rip Van Winkle.

Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 46.

The most good-natured host began to repent of his eagerness to serve a man of genius in distress when he heard his guest roaring for fresh punch at five o'clock in the morning.

Macaulay, Boswell's Johnson.

Did not goodwife Keesch, the butcher's wife, come in then, and call me gossip quickly?
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., II. 1.

When the goodwife a shuttle merrily Goes flashing thro' the loom.
Macaulay, Horatius.

The pleasant good-wife put our potatoes upon the fire to boil.
H. Taylor, Northern Travel, p. 420.

good-will (gud'wil'), n. [= MLA. gutwille (cf. OHG. gutwillig) = Lat. gutwille, gutwille = Oldan. godswille, good will.] 1. Benevolence; friendly disposition; cheerful acquiescence; now usually, and properly, as two words. See will.

The praise of an ignorant man is only good will.
Scott, Spectator, No. 188.

He (James II.) set himself, therefore, to labour, with real good will, but with the good will of a coarse, stern, and arbitrary mind, for the conversion of his kinsman.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., VI.

A Eula slays an ox to secure the goodwill of his dead relative's ghost, who complains to him in a dream that he has not been fed.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Soc. Sci., § 573.

2. The degree of favor enjoyed by a particular shop or trade as indicated by its custom. Specifically—(a) In law, the advantage or benefit which is acquired by an establishment, beyond the mere value of the capital, stock funds, or property employed therein, in consequence of the general public patronage and encouragement which it receives from constant or habitual custom, on account of its local position or common celebrity, or reputation for skill, or abundance, or purity, or from other accidental circumstances or necessities, or even from ancient partialities or prejudices. Story, J. (b) Friendly influence exerted with the view of transferring the custom of any shop or trade to a successor, the right and title to take up a trade or business connection, purchased of an outgoing tenant or occupier.

goody (gud'i), a. and n. [< good + dim. -y.] 1. a. Weakly good in morals or religion; characterized by good intentions or pious phrasings without vital force; pious but futile; namby-pamby; often reduplicated, goody-good, goody-goody.

One can't help in his presence rather trying to justify his good opinion; and it does so fire one to be goody and talk sense.
Charlotte Brontë, Villette, IX.

The art did a? consist either of the water-color studies of the children, or of goody engravings.
The Century, XXXVI. 122.

II. n.; pl. goodies (-iz). A sweetmeat; a bon-bon; most frequently used in the plural.

It was in rhyme, even, that the young Charles should learn his lessons. . . . At this rate, all knowledge is to be had in a goody, and the end of it is an old song.
R. L. Stevenson, Charles of Orleans.

Goodyer, an early English botanist.] A genus of low terrestrial orchids, with a creeping root-stock and a tuft of basal leaves, the stem bearing a spike of small white flowers. There are 23 species, distributed through the northern hemisphere, 3 of which are North American. They usually have the leaves pinnately reticulated with white veins. G. repens, the rathensake plantain, is found in moist woods through northern Europe, Asia, and America.

goody-good, goody-goody (gud'i-gud, gud'i-gud'i), a. Same as goody.

Goethe used to exclaim of goody goody persons, "Oh! if they had but the heart to commit an absurdity!" This was when he thought they waited heartiness and nature.
S. Smiles, Character, p. 232.

His recorded answer to the life assurance official who talked goody-goody to him seems to me the result of a wise-take on both sides.

the dominant race in the kingdom of Nepal.
The Goorkhas are of Hindu descent, and speak a Sanskrit dialect. They were driven out of Rajputana by the early Mohammedan invaders, and gradually approached Nepal, which they conquered in 1768, after a long struggle. Some of the best troops in the Anglo-Indian army are recruited from the Goorkhas.

gooroo (gö'rö), n. An English spelling of guru.

goosander (gö-san'der), n. [Spelled goosander in Drayton; artificially formed, < goose + (g) sander,

The s
seems to be merely formative, the stem gan- appearing in the related words gander and gan-net, q. v. As to the use of goose for a tailor's smoothing-iron, cf. G. gans, a lump of melted iron, the term being used like the equiv. E. pig and cow; the equiv. F. gousse (whence *appar.
Sw. gös*, or perhaps < Sw. gösf) is a different word. Ill-judged attempts have been made to derive goose, in the sense of 'a silly person', from another source, on the ground that the popular notion as to the stupidity of the bird is erroneous, "it being only ignorance of the darkest hue that ventures to portray the goose as deficient in sagacity or intelligence" (Cornhill Mag., VIII. 203); but popular notions are often based on ignorance. Hence gooseling, goosling, goosetick.] 1. Any bird of the family Anatidae and subfamily Anserinae, of which there are about 40 species of several genera, as well as different varieties of the domesticated bird.
See phrases below. Geese are technically distinguished from swans and from ducks by the combination of feathered legs, reticulate tars, stout bill high at the base, and simple hind toe. The neck is shorter than in swans, and usually longer than in ducks; the sexes are usually similar, contrary to the rule among ducks. Geese stand higher and walk better than ducks; as a rule they are less decidedly aquatic and more herbivorous, the ones being more highly developed in consequence. Geese have a peculiar cry of call known as honking, and also utter a hissing sound. The flesh of most geese is highly esteemed.
The tame goose in all its varieties is supposed to be descended from the grayling or common wild geese of Europe, A. ferus; but some other related species may have contributed to the domestic stock. The pure white variety is entirely artificial, and not related to the snow-geese of the genus Chen. The male of the goose is called gander, and the young of either sex gosling.

The tame goose . . . basketh in flange, greed at their mets, & diligent to their rest.

Shakespeare, As you like it, III. 1.

We say in English, As wise as a goose, or as wise as her mother a speckled string.

Udall, tr. of Apophthegms of Erasmus, p. 118.

Observing from the goose on the table, and the audit-ale which was circling in the loving cup, that it was a feast.

Sir J. Lubbock, Orig. of Civilization, p. 169.

2. A silly, foolish person; a simpleton; in allusion to the supposed stupidity of the domestic goose, inferred from its somewhat clumsy appearance and motions.

A puny feller, that spurs his horse but on one side, breaks his staff like a noble goose.

Shak., As you like it, III. 1.

Letty P. (to Hotspur): Oh, ye giddy goose.

Shak., 1 Hen. IV., III. 1.

Called herself a little goose in the simplest manner possible.

Thackeray.

Some people thought him a goose, and some only a bore.

J. N. Le Fanu, Tomcats of Wulstey, p. 11.

3. A tailor's smoothing-iron: so called from the resemblance of its handle to the neck of a goose.

Come in, tailor; here you may meet your goose.

Shak., Macbeth, II. 2.

You

Will carry your goose about you still, your planing-iron!

H. James, New Inn, IV. 2.

They had an ancient goose, it was an heirloom

From some remote tailor of our race.

O. W. Holmes, Evening, by a Tailor.

4. A game of chance formerly common in England. It was played on a card divided into small compartments numbered from 1 to 62, arranged in a spiral figure around a central open space, on which at the beginning of the game, the stakes were laid, and during the game any forfeits paid. It was played by two or more persons with two dice, and the numbers that turned up to each designated the number of the compartment by which he might advance his mark or counter. It was called the game of goose because at every fourth and fifth compartment in succession a goose was depicted on the card, and if the throw of the dice carried the counter of the player on a goose, he might move forward double the actual number thrown. Strutt

The twelve good rules, the royal game of goose.
Goldsmith, Dea. VII, l. 232.

5. A piece used in the game of fox and goose.

To play this game (fox and goose) there are seventeen pieces, called goose, . . . and the fox in the middle. . . . The business of the game is to shut the fox up, so that he cannot move. Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 418.

goosebeak (gōs'bēk), n. A dolphin: so called from the shape of the snout.

gooseberry (gōs'-or gōz'ber'i), n. and a. (Early mod. E. gooseberrie, goosberic; not found earlier than 1570 (Levin); [< goose + berry]; prob. so called according to the common custom of naming plants, often without any obvious reason, after familiar birds and beasts; cf. goose-bill, goose-corn, goose-foot, goose-gog, goose-grass, goose-laney, goose-tonque, duckweed, crook-foot, cowberry, cowberry, cow-grass, cow-pea, etc.) In another view, there is an allusion to the rough bristly surface of the berry, the comparison being similar to that in goose-flesh, goose-skin. According to Skeat, gooseberry is prob. an acronym of an assumed goosberry*, [*< goose, represented by E. dial. graser, Se. growet, grassart, graset, grozet (see graser), + berry]. There is no evidence to support the conjecture that gooseberry is an acronym of an assumed goosberry*, [< goose, a dial. form of goose (in allusion to the bristly hairs of the fruit, or to the prickles on the bush itself); cf. the G. name stachelbeere, lit. 'prickleberry'], + berry]. I, n.; pl. gooseberries (-iz). 1. The berry or fruit of a plant of the genus Ribes, or the plant itself; in bot., a general term for the species of the genus Ribes which belong to the section Grassularia, as the name currant is applied to those of the section Ribes. They are thorny or prickly shrubs, and the fruit is usually hairy. The common cultivated gooseberry Ribes Grossularia, bearing the fruit of the same name, is a native of Europe and Asia. It is cultivated extensively in northern Europe, but succeeds only moderately in America, and many varieties have been produced, the fruit differing in size, color, and quality, as well as in hairiness. The wild gooseberries of North America include several species, the fruit of which is rarely eaten.

All the other gifts appertinent to man, as the malice of this age shapes them, are not worth a gooseberry.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., l. 2.

2. A silly person; a goosecap. Goldsmith.—American gooseberry, of Jamaica, the Heterotrichum usneum, a multicauleous shrub bearing a black hairy berry. Barbados or West Indian gooseberry, the Pereskia aculeata, a caulescent shrub bearing an edible berry. Cape gooseberry, the Physalis Peruviana, a native of tropical America, cultivated in India and elsewhere for the fruit, which is sometimes made into a preserve. Gooseberry fruit-worm. See fruit-worm. Old gooseberry, a phrase of no definite meaning, used in humorous emphasis or comparison, and probably originating as a substitute for a profane expression, as, to play old gooseberry (that is, to play the devil, to create great confusion); to lay on like old gooseberry. (Slang.)

She took to drinking, left off working, sold the furniture, pawned the clothes, and played old gooseberry.
Dickens.

You should have a tea-stick, and take them (dogs) by the tail . . . and lay on like old gooseberry.
H. Kinsley, Billys and Burtons, lxi.

Otabelle gooseberry, the Phyllanthus Dutcheri, a euphorbiaceous shrub of Java, cultivated in the tropics, its acid fruit being used for pickling. To play gooseberry, to accompany other persons, as lovers, for the sake of propriety. (Colloq.)

Gordian (gōr'di-an), a. and n. [L. Gordius, a. (necus Gordius, the Gordian knot), < Gordius, < Gr. Gordios, a king of Phrygia.] 1. a. Pertaining to Gordius, the first king of Phrygia (father of Midas, called by some the first king), or to an inextricable knot tied by him.—Gordian knot. (a) In the legend, a knot tied by Gordius in the yoke that connected the pole and the yoke of the ox-cart in which he was riding when he or his son Midas was chosen king of Phrygia. It was so intricate as to defy all attempts to untie it; and the oracle of the temple in which the cart was preserved declared that whoever should succeed in undoing it would become master of Asia. Alexander of Macedon solved the difficulty by cutting the knot with his sword, and the oracle was fulfilled. Hence the phrase is applied to any inextricable difficulty; and to cut the Gordian knot, or the knot, is to overcome a difficulty in a bold, trenchant, or violent way.

sin and shame are ever tied together With Gordian knots, of such a strong thread spun, They cannot without violence be undone. Webster, Devil's Law Case, II. 4.

The knot which you thought a Gordian one will untie itself before you. Jefferson, Correspondence, I. 302.

gordii, n. Plural of Gordius, 2.

Gordidae (gōr'di-ā-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Gordius + -idae.] A family of nematoid worms; the hairworms. They have an elongated filiform body with a ventral cord and without oral papillae, the mouth and anterior part of the alimentary canal obliterated in the adult, the paired ovaries and testes opening with the anus at the posterior end of the body; the tail of the male is forked, without apophysis. Also Gordidae, Gordias.

In the young stage they live in the body cavity of predatory insects, and are provided with a mouth. At the pairing time they pass into the water, where they become sexually mature. The embryos, which are provided with a chelic of spines bore through the egg membrane, migrate into insect larvae, and there encyst. Water beetles and other predatory aquatic insects eat . . . the encysted young forms, which then develop in the body cavity of their new and larger host to young Gordidae. Claus, Zoology (trans.), I. 322.

Gordius (gōr'di-us), n. [NL., < L. Gordius (see nodus), the Gordian knot, in allusion to the complex knots into which these animals twist themselves; see Gordian.]

1. The typical genus of thread-worms of the family Gordidae; the hairworms or hair-cods. A common species is called G. aquaticus. These creatures are so slender that they are popularly supposed to be animated horse hairs, or to be produced from horse hairs which fall into the water.

is used to some extent in cabinet-work. G. pubescens (also known as Franklinia), originally from near the Altamaha river, Georgia, is now known only in cultivation.

goré¹ (gôr), n. [ME. gorr, gorre, mud, filth, < AS. gor, dung, dirt, = OLG. MUG. gor, mud, = Icel. Norw. D. Dan. gor, gore, the end in animals, the chyme in men, = Sw. gorr, dirt, matter, pus, Sw. dial. gôr, dirt, the contents of the intestines (cf. D. goor, dirty, nasty, rusty, sour, etc.); prob. akin to Icel. gorn, pl. garnar, garnir, guts, and further to E. garn, L. kira, gut, hernia, hernia, (Gr. γαστήρ, a string of gut, a cord; see garn, hernia, chord, cord).] 1. Dirt; mud. [Prov. Eng.]—2. Blood that is shed or drawn from the body; thick or clotted blood.

They will be all on a goré of blood, most sad and grievous to behold.

N. Morton, New England's Memorial, p. 175.

Altars grew marble then, and rock d with goré.
Pope, Essay on Man, III. 264.

goré² (gôr), n. [Formerly also gour; = *Se. gar, garr, < ME. goro, gure, a gore of cloth, also a garment, < AS. gura, a projecting point of land, = OFries. gure, a gore of cloth, a garment, = D. geer, a gusset, gore, = M.D. gerr, a point of land, a gusset, = OLG. goro, M.D. gerr, a wedge-shaped piece of cloth, a promontory, G. gerr, a wedge, a gusset, gore, = Icel. geiri = Norw. geira = D. Dan. gore, a gore of cloth or of land, < AS. gâr, etc., a spear; see gar¹; cf. gar², v.] 1. A relatively long and narrow triangular strip or slip; a projecting point. Specifically—2. A triangular piece or tapering strip of land. A gore is often a small tract which, commonly by error in description of the boundaries or in their location in surveying, fails to be included in the possession, maps, or monuments of two or more tracts, or either of them, which would otherwise be adjacent. Gores may also be produced by various other exigencies in the surveying or division of land, as the diagonal crossing of streets in a city, the divisional lines or variations of soil on a farm, etc.*

I wasn't born in any town whatever, but in what New Englanders call a goré, a triangular strip of land that gets left out somehow when the towns are surveyed.

G. W. Sears, Forest Runes, p. vii.

Corners of the fields which, from their shape, could not be cut up into the usual acre or half-acre strips, were sometimes divided into tapering strips pointed at one end, and called "gorés," or "gored acres."

Seaborn, Eng. VII. Community, p. 6.

3. In Maine and Vermont, and formerly in Massachusetts, an unorganized and thinly settled subdivision of a county.—4. A triangular piece or strip of material inserted to make something, as a garment or a sail, wider in one part than in another; especially, in dressmaking, a long triangle introduced to make a skirt wider at the bottom or hem than at the waist. See goring.

The balloon shall consist of a specific number of gorés, or sections.
Workshop Receipts, 1st ser., p. 138.

5. A part of the dress; hence, the dress itself; a garment.

An old-queene shad my leman be,
And slepe under my goré.
Chaucer, Sir Thopas, l. 78.

6. An angular plank used in fitting a vessel's skin to the frames.—7. In her., a charge consisting of two curved lines, one from the sinister chief point, the other from the base middle point, meeting in an acute angle in the middle of the fesse-point. Also called gusset. Under goré, under the clothing, inwardly.

Geynest under goré [= fairest of form], Harkne to my roon.
Attoun (Lyric Songs), l. 37.

Glad under goré.
Wright, Lyric Poetry, p. 26.

goré³ (gôr), v. t.; pret. and pp. goréd, ppr. goring. [Shape like a gore; cut or treat so as to form a gore.]—2. To furnish with a gore or gores, as a dress-skirt or a sail.

goré³ (gôr), v. t.; pret. and pp. goréd, ppr. goring. [Not found in ME. or AS., and perhaps formed directly from *goré*², a projecting point, and only ult. < AS. gâr, early ME. gar, a spear; see *goré*², *gar*¹.] 1. To pierce; penetrate with a pointed instrument, as a spear or a horn; wound deeply.

If an ox goré a man or a woman, that they die.
Ex. xxi. 28.

Doth any hid sin goré your conscience?
Beau. and FL., Knight of Malta, l. 3.
He's like Giles Heathertop's wild boar; ye need but shake a clout at him to make him turn and goré.
Scott, Rob Roy, xxi.

2. To scoop; dig. Darwin.
Mountains being only the product of Noah's flood, where the violence of the waters agitated the earth poured out of the hollow valleys.
Fuller, Ch. Hist., IX. 106.

goré (go-râ), a. [*goré*² + -é.] In her., same as *goré*².

gorebill (gôr'bil), n. [Not found in ME. or AS.; < *goré*², ult. AS. gâr, a spear, + bill.] The garfish. [Local, Eng.] gored (gôr), a. In her.: (a) Composed of convex curves larger than in inverted. (b) Bounded by a line as in (a). Also gored, goré, gory.—Posses gored. Sinus as fons arundinis. Née fons.

gore-strake (gôr'strâk), n. Naut., a strake which does not reach as far as the stern or stern-post.

gorge (gôrj), n. [ME. gorgre, the throat, < OF. gorge, the throat, gullet, F. gorge, the throat, a narrow pass, a gorge, = Pr. It. gorga, gorja = Sp. Pg. gorja = It. gorgia, gorgia, the throat, gullet (ML. gorgia, the throat, a narrow pass, ML. gorgia, gurgu, a whirlpool), < L. gurgus, a whirlpool, an abyss. Cf. L. gurgulio, the gullet; Skt. gurgura, a whirlpool, a redupl. form < gar, swallow. Cf. gurgyle, gurgyle, gurgyle, etc.] 1. The throat; the gullet.

He with him elod, and, having mightie hold Upon his throte, did gripe his gorge so fast,
That wanting breath him downe to ground he cast.
Spenser, F. Q., VI. iv. 22.

They have certaine Sea-Crowes or Cormorants, where-with they fish, tying their gorge; that they cannot swallow the fishes which they take. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 487.

The golden gorge of dragons spouted forth
A flood of fountain foam.
Tennyson, Palace of Art.

Hence—2. That which is swallowed or is provided for swallowing; the material of a meal.

What though? because the Vulturs had then but small pickings, shall we therefore go and fling them a full gorge?
Milton, Apology for Smeectymnus.

3. The act of gorging; inordinate eating; a heavy meal; as, to indulge in a gorge after long abstinence. [Colloq.]—4. A jam; a mass which chokes up a passage; as, a gorge of logs in a river; an ice-gorge.—5. A feeling of disgust, indignation, resentment, or the like: from the sympathetic influence of such emotions, when extreme in degree, upon the muscles of the throat.

So insolent and malicious a request would have been enough to have roused the gorge of the tranquil Van Twell himself.
Tennyson, Knickerbocker, p. 443.

6. In arch.: (a) The narrow part of the Tuscan and Roman Doric capitals, between the astragal above the shaft of the column and the echinus; the necking or hypophyge. It is found also in some provincial Greek Doric, as at Paestum. See cut under column. (b) A cavetto or hollow molding.—7. A narrow passage between steep rocky walls; a ravine or defile with precipitous sides.

Downward from his mountain gorge
Stept the long-hair'd lion bearded solitary.
Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

8. The entrance into a bastion or other outwork of a fort. See cut under bastion.—9. In masonry, a little channel or up-cut on the lower side of the coping, to keep the drip from reaching the wall; a throat.—10. The groove in the circumference of a pulley.—11. A pitcher of earthenware or stoneware. Also gorge.

In the year 1684 Mr. John Dwight established a manufactory of earthenware known under the name of white gorge.
Faulkner, Hist. Acot. of the Parish of Fulham (Martyat).

To bear full gorge, in falconry, said of a hawk when she was full fed, and refused the lure. Nares.

No gonke provales, shee will not yeeld to might,
No lure will cause her stoop, shee beares full gorge.
T. Watson, Sonnets, xlvii.

To have the gorge rise, to be filled with disgust or indignation.

Now how abhorred my imagination is; my gorge rises at it.
Shak., Hamlet, v. 1.

And now at last our gorge was risen and our hearts in tumult.
R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, lxx.

To heave the gorge, to retch, as from nausea or disgust; hence, to take a strong dislike.

Her delicate tenderness will find itself abused, begin to heave the gorge, disrelish and abhor the Moor.
Shak., Othello, II. 1.

=Syn. 7. Ravine, Defile. See valley.

gorge (gôrj), v.; pret. and pp. gorjed, ppr. gorging. [ME. gorgien, intra, gorgie, < OF. (also F.) gorgier, devour greedily, < gorge, the gullet; see gorge, n.] 1. Trans. 1. To swallow; especially, to swallow with greediness or by gulps.

So he be eaten with a reformed mouth, with sobriety, and humbleness; not gorged in with gluttony or greediness.
R. Jansen, Bartholomew Fair, l. 1.

You must fish for him (trout) with a strong line, and not a little hook; and let him have time to gorge your hook, for he does not usually break it, as he oft will in the day fishing.
J. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 117.

Hence—2. To glut; fill the throat or stomach of; satiate.

He gorjed himself habitually at table, which made him bilious, and gave him a dim and bleared eye and fatty cheeks.
Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, I.

That old man, now lord of the broad estate and the Hall, Dropt off gorjed from a scheme that had left as blood and drain'd.
Tennyson, Maud, l. 4.

II. Intrans. To feed greedily; stuff one's self.

He saw the lean dogs beneath the wall
Hold o'er the dead their carnival,
Gorging and growling o'er carcasses and limbs.
Byron, Siege of Corinth, xvi.

gorgeaunt, n. [F. gorgeant, ppr. of gorgier, gorge; see gorge, v.] In hunting, a boar in the second year.

gorge-curtain (gôrj'kér'tân), n. In fort., the defensive wall of a gorge or entrance, as between the faces of a bastion, redoubt, etc. See cut under bastion.

The blindages over the casemates of the gorge-curtain [were] splintered and shivered.
New York Tribune, April 19, 1862.

gorged (gôrjd), a. 1. Having a gorge or throat; throatful. [Rare.]

From the dread summit of this chalky bourn
Look up a-height; the shrill gorg'd lark so far Cannot be seen or heard.
Shak., Lear, iv. 6.

2. In her., bearing something around its neck; especially and more accurately, having a crown or coronet round its neck; as, a swan duceally gorged. Also collared.—3. Glutted; over-fed; stuffed.

As the full-fed bound or gorged hawk,
Unapt for tender snell or speedy flight,
Make slow pursuit.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 684.

gorge-hook (gôrj'hûk), n. A leaded fish-hook with two barbs, to the upper end of which a twisted wire is fastened. The small end of the wire is run into the mouth and through the whole body of the minnow used as bait, which is worked along the hook until the leaded part occupies the belly of the little fish.

gorgelet (gôrj'let), n. [OF. gorgelette, dim. of gorge, throat; see gorge, n., and cf. gorget.] Name as gorget, 4.

The exquisite gorgelets . . . of humming-birds.
Coues, Key to N. A. Birds, p. 99.

gorgeous (gôr'jus), a. [Formerly also gorgious; with accom. term. -ous, < OF. gorgias, gorgias, gorgeous, gaudy, flaunting, gallant, gay, fine; appar. from or connected with gorget, a gorget, a ruff for the neck, < gorge, the throat, the upper part of the breast; see gorge. Cf. F. se renorgier, G. mich brüsten, lit. 'breast oneself,' bridle up, assume airs of importance.] 1. Sumptuously adorned; superbly showy; resplendent; magnificent.

The houses be curiously builded after a gorgeous [gorgeous, ed. 1661] and gallant sort, with three stories one over another. Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), II. 2.

Like gorgeous hangings on the wall
Of some rich princely room.
Drayton, Description of Elysiun.

As full of spirit as the month of May,
And gorgeous as the sun at midsummer.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iv. 1.

2. Inclined to splendor; given to gorgeousness.

His taste was gorgeous, but it still was taste.
Crabbe, Works, IV. 52.

=Syn. 1. Superb, brilliant, dazzling; rich, costly.

gorgeously (gôr'jus-ly), adv. In a gorgeous manner; with showy magnificence; splendidly.

They will rule and apparel themselves gorgeously, and some of them far above their degrees, whether their husbands will or no. Latimer, Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1560.

Who can be more gorgeously and splendidly apparelled than the flowers of the field? Shak., Works, IV. 1.

gorgeousness (gôr'jus-nês), s. The condition or quality of being gorgeous; splendor of dress, adornment, or decoration; magnificence.

It seem'd to outvie whatever had been seen before of gallantry and riches, and gorgeousness of apparel.
Baker, Charles II., an. 1661.

Its false appearance of richness and solidity, and flaunting gorgeousness, is in fact one of the charms of Indian jewelry, especially in an admiring but poor purchaser's eyes.
G. C. M. Birdwood, Indian Arts, II. 24.

gorger¹, n. [ME. gorgier, gorgere, < OF. gorgiere, gorgere, gorgere (= Pr. It. gorgiera), a gorget, wimple, also the throat; cf. gorgier, the throat; < gorge, the throat, the upper part of the breast; see gorge, n., and cf. the dim. gorgieret.] 1. Same as gorget, 1.

2. A gorget or wimple.

That other [dame] with a gorger walk gored over the swyre [throat].
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (R. B. T. E.), l. 357.

The gorger or wimple is stated first to have appeared in Edward the First's reign, and an example is found on the monument of Aveline, Countess of Lancaster, who died in 12th. From the poem, however, it would seem that the gorger was confined to elderly ladies.

See F. Medusa, quoted in St. Augustine and the Green Knight (K. R. T. S.), notes, p. 82.

gorger (gôr-jer), n. [< gorge + -er. Cf. OF. gorgier, a glutton.] One who or that which gorges; specifically (naut.), a big haul or heavy deck of fish.

gorgeret (gôr-jer-et), n. [< OF. gorgieret, gorgieret, m., gorgierette, f., a ruff, gorget, dim. of gorgier, gorgere, etc., a gorger: see gorger.] In surg., same as gorget, s.

And now, over the probe I pass a little gorgeret: . . . this has its hind directed upward.

Medical News, XLIX, 316.

gorgerette (gôr-jô-ret'), n. [OF., < gorge, throat: see gorger.] In armor: (a) Same as the standard of chain-mail. (b) A variety of the plate gorget of which the haussée-col was the latest form.

gorgerin (gôr-jér-in), n. [< F. gorgierin, < gorge, the throat: see gorger, n., gorger.] 1. In arch., the neck of a capital, or more commonly a feature forming the junction between the shaft and the capital; a necking.—2. A name for the gorget, plastron, or haussée-col—that is, for any piece of armor covering the throat; especially, a second thickness bolted upon the cuirass of tilting-armor at the throat.

gorget (gôr-jet), n. [< OF. gorgette, gorgete, the throat, F. dial. gorgette, a collar, a bib, dim. of gorge, the throat: see gorge, n. Cf. the earlier gorger*.] 1. A piece of armor protecting the Gorgets.

1. Haussée-col (a) attached to the breastplate, 15th century. 2. Haussée-col (a) worn over mail, early 15th century. From Viollet le Duc's Dictionnaire du Moyen Âge.

throat and sometimes the upper part of the breast. When a chain-mail it usually formed part of the camail, and such a mail gorget remained in use even after the adoption of the breastplate of hammered steel. The plate gorget forms a part of the plastron in the armor of the fifteenth century. The latest form was the haussée-col. In later days it dwindled in size till it became the small badge of an officer on duty.

A shaft which some too lucky hand doth guide,
Piercing his gorget, brought him to his end.
Drayton, Agincourt.

Undo the valor's barred band,
Unfix the gorget's iron clasp,
And give him room for life to gasp!
Scott, I. of L. M., v. 22.

The gorgets (worn by North American Indians) consist of plates of shell having holes bored for suspension, being also elaborately carved and ornamented.

A. W. Buckland, Jour. of Anthropol. Inst., XVI, 150.

2. A variety of wimple in use in the fourteenth century. It was worn very tight and close.—3. An ornamental neck-band having a considerable breadth, especially in front.

Breeches and black gaiters, with coats open from the top button and showing a waistcoat, were worn (in 1788); also a gorget, an indication of an officer being on duty.

Portsmouth Rev., N. S., XLIII, 376.

4. In ornith., a throat-patch in any way distinguished by the color or texture of the feathers. Also gorgetlet.

Both races also possess brilliant plumage, with metallic crests or gorgets. G. Allen, Colin Clout's Calendar, p. 53.

5. In surg., a grooved instrument used in operations for anal fistula and in lithotomy. It serves as a guide, and in some instances is furnished with a blade for cutting. Also gorgeret.

gorgon (gôr-gôn), n. and a. [< L. Gorgona, Gorgo (a), < Gr. Γοργώ, < γοργός, grim, fierce, terrible.] L. n. 1. [cap.] In Gr. myth., a female monster, Gorgon.—Perseus and Medusa. Archæol. miscell. from Schœma, Sicily.

one of three sisters, Stheno, Euryale, and Medusa, whose heads were covered with writhing serpents instead of hair, and the sight of whose terrific aspect turned the beholder to stone. Only Medusa was mortal, and she alone is meant when the Gorgon is mentioned singly.

What new Gorgon's head
Have you beheld, that you are all turn'd statue?
Platicher (and another), Queen of Coriuth, v. 2.

Worse
Than fables yet have feign'd, or fear conceived, Gorgons, and hydras, and chimeras dire.
Milton, P. L., II, 623.

Here was the retreat of the Gorgon, with snakey tresses, turning all she looked upon into stone.

Summer, White Slavery.

2. The head of Medusa, after she was killed by Perseus, placed on the shield of Pallas, and, according to the legend, still capable of petrifying beholders; hence, a representation of Medusa's head; a gorgoneion.

What was that snake-headed Gorgon shield,
That wise Minerva wore? Milton, Comus, l. 447.

As if the dire goddess that presides over it [war], with her marianus spear in her hand and her gorgon at her breast, was a coquette to be flirted with.

Burke, A Regicide Peace.

3. Something very ugly; specifically, a woman of repulsive appearance or manners.

I really came here to buy up all your stock; but that gorgon, Lady de Courcy, captured me, and my ransom has sent me here free, but a beggar.

Darrell, Young Duke, l. 2.

4. A type of direct-acting marine engine for paddle-steamers. See marine engine, under marine.—5. A name, generic or specific, of the brindled gnu. Also Gorgonia.

II. a. Like one of the Gorgons; pertaining to a gorgon; very ugly or repulsive.

Why didst thou not encounter man for man,
And try the virtue of that gorgon face
To stare me into statue? Dryden gorgonean, gorgonian (gôr-gô-né-an, -ni-an), a. [< Gr. γοργόνειος (> L. gorgoneus), pertaining to the Gorgon, < Γοργώ, Gorgon: see gorgon.] Like or characteristic of a Gorgon; pertaining to the Gorgon.

Medusa with Gorgonian terror guards
The ford. Milton, P. L., II, 611.

Still the sound
Of her gorgonian shield my ears retain,
Whilst earnest, striking on its din her spear,
The virgin warrior speaks. Gloucester, Athalia, xl.

gorgoneion (gôr-gô-né-ion), n. [< Gr. γοργόνειον (-ion), < γοργόνειος (-ios), pertaining to the Gorgon: see gorgonean.] A mask of the Gorgon; the head of Medusa; in classical myth, such a mask or head as an attribute of Pallas, who bore it on her breast in the midst of her rage, and also on her shield. See cut under ages. It is a familiar attribute of Greek art, and was much used in Greek architecture: v. acroteria, antefixæ, etc., often in the precise type of the head of Medusa in the cut under Gorgon.

On the walls of Athens in the west pediment had been a gorgoneion of metal.

A. S. Murray, Greek Sculpture, I, 153.

The goddess appeared with the gorgoneion on her chiton.

B. V. Head, Historia Numorum, p. 292.

gorgonesque (gôr-gôn-esk'), a. [< Gorgon + -esque.] Gorgonianlike; repulsive; terrifying.

We are less ready to believe in his qualling before a mother-in-law so Gorgonesque even as the ex coryphæe.

Athenæum, Sept. 20, 1898, p. 426.

Gorgonia (gôr-gô-ni-ä), a. [L., coral, so called in allusion to its hardening in the air, fem. of gorgonium, pertaining to the Gorgon: see gorgonean.] 1. A Linnean genus of polyps, typical of the family Gorgoniidae; the sea-fans with arborescent sclerobasæ. See cut under coral.—2. A genus of noctuid moths. Hübner, 1816.—3. A genus of gnus. See gnus. Also Gorgon. J. E. Gray.

Gorgoniaceæ (gôr-gô-ni-ä-se-ä), n. pl. [NL., < Gorgonia, f., + -acea.] An order of alcyonarian actinozoans, permanently rooted, with smooth corneenchyma and erect, branched, horny or calcareous sclerobasæ axis. The group contains several families as Gorgoniidae, Gorgonellidae, and Brachyodidae, as well as Coralliidae, the latter constituted by the red coral of commerce. Various forms of the order are known as sea shrubs, sea fans, and fan corals. See cuts under coral and Corallum.

gorgoniacean (gôr-gô-ni-ä-se-an), a. and n. 1. a. Of or pertaining to the Gorgoniaceæ: gorgonian.

gorgonian¹, a. See gorgonean.

gorgonian² (gôr-gô-ni-an), a. Of or pertaining to Gorgonia.

Gorgonia corals of many species. Nature, XXX, 281.

gorgonid (gôr-gô-nid), a. Of or pertaining to the family Gorgoniidae: as, a gorgonid coral.

Gorgonidæ (gôr-gô-ni-dæ), n. pl. [NL., < Gorgonia + -idæ.] See Gorgoniidæ.

gorgonid (gôr-gô-ni-id), n. One of the Gorgoniidæ.

Gorgoniidæ (gôr-gô-ni-ä-dæ), n. pl. [NL., < Gorgonia + -idæ.] The typical family of Gorgoniaceæ, formerly continous therewith, now variously restricted. Other groups more or less exactly the same are known as Gorgoniadæ, Gorgonidæ, Gorgonæ, Gorgoniina, and Gorgonina.

gorgonize (gôr-gôn-iz), v. t.; pret. and pp. gorgonized, ppr. gorgonizing. [< gorgon + -ize.] To affect as a Gorgon; turn into stone; petrify. Also spelled gorgonise.

*Gorgonized me from head to foot
With a stony British stare.*

Tennyson, Maud, xiii, 2.

Gorgonocephalus (gôr-gô-nô-sel'-ä-lus), n. [NL., < Gr. Γοργόνη, Γοργώ, Gorgon, + κεφαλή, the head.] A genus of euryalean ophiurians, or branching sand-stars, of the family Astrophyllidae: so called from the popular name gorgon's-head. The genus resembles Astrophyton proper, but is less branched, with the arms narrow at the base, and the discal plates differently arranged.

gorgon's-head (gôr-gôn-s-hed), n. A kind of basket-fish; a many-rayed ophiurian, as of the genus Astrophyton. One species of gorgon's-head, A. aculeatum, is called the Shetland argus.

gorhen (gôr-hen), n. [See gorcock.] The female of the gorcock.

gorilla (gô-ril-ä), n. [NL., f., etc.; a name recently applied to this ape, being taken from an African word mentioned (in the Gr. form Γοργίλα) in the Periplus (i. e., 'Circumnavigation'), an account of a voyage made along the northwestern coasts of Africa in the 6th or 6th century B. C. by Hanno, a Carthaginian navigator, as the native name of a wild creature found on those coasts. The account, written orig. in the Punic language and translated into Greek, says that the voyagers found an island, in a lake near a bay called the "Southern Horn," "full of wild people (ἀνθρώπων ἄγριον), the greater part of whom were females (ἡμετέρας γυναῖκες, women), hairy on their bodies, whom our interpreters called Gorillas (Γοργίλλαι). We pursued them, but could not capture the males (ἀνδρας, men); they all escaped, climbing the cliffs and hiding among the rocks; but we captured three females (ἡμετέρας), who, biting and scratching their captors, refused to go along with them. We killed and skinned them and brought the skins to Carthage." (Periplus, xviii, in Geographi Graeci Minores, ed. C. Müller, I, 13, 14.) These creatures, apparently not regarded by the Carthaginians as human beings, though spoken of in such terms, are supposed to have been apes, probably chimpanzees.] 1. The largest known anthropoid ape, Triglydytes Gorilla: Triglydytes gorilla or Gorilla gorilla.

With all my heart, I'll gossip at this feast.

Shak., C. of E., v. 1.

2. To talk idly, especially about other people; chat; tattle.

And the neighbours come and laugh and gossip, and so do I.
Tennyson, The Grandmother.

II. trans. 1. To stand godfather to.

With a world
Of pretty, fond, adoptions christendoms,
That blushing Cupid gossips Shak., All's Well, I. 1.

2. To repeat as gossip: as, to gossip scandal.
gossiper (gōs'ip-er), n. [< gossip, v., + -er].
One who gossips; a gossipmonger.

"I wonder who will be their Master of the Horse," said the great noble, loving gossip, though he despised the gossipier.
Thackeray, Coningsby, II. 4.

gossiping (gōs'ip-ing), n. [Verbal n. of gossip, v.] 1. A chattering or other merry assemblage.

At gossiping I hearken'd after you.
But amongst those confusions of lewd tongues
There's no distinguishing beyond a babel.
Fletcher, Rules a Wife, IV. 1.

You'll to the gossiping
Of master Allwit's child?
Middletown, Chaste Maid, II. 1.

2. Idle talk; chatter; scandal-mongering.

All that I aim at, by this dissertation, is to cure it of several disagreeable notes, and in particular of those little jarings and dissonances which arise from anger, conceit, and curiosity.
Spectator, No. 147.

gossipmonger (gōs'ip-mung'gēr), n. A chatty or gossiping person; a scandal-bearer.

The chief gossipmonger of the neighborhood.
D. M. Wallace, Russia, p. 235.

The quotation from that gossip monger, Suetonius, does not help us to form a clearer notion of the use of glass in the time of Augustus.
Edinburgh Rev., CLXVI. 430.

gossipred (gōs'ip-red), n. [< ME. gossiprede, gossiprede, godschrede, spiritual relationship, < gossip, godsch, a sponsor, gossip, + -rede, AS. -rēden, condition, a suffix appearing also in AS. sibrēden, kindred, and in E. kindred and hatred: see -red.] 1. Relationship by baptismal rites; spiritual affinity; sponsorship.

Be well ware of foynded conynage and gossiprede.
Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 30.

Gossipred, spiritual parentage, the connection between sponsor and godchild, has the same effects among the South Slavonians (operates as a bar to intermarriage) which it once had over the whole Christian world.
Maitne, Early Law and Custom, p. 257.

2. Idle talk; gossip.

Now, this our poor fellow citizen, Oliver Proudfoot, having been active in spreading these reports, as indeed his element lay in such gossipred, some words passed betwixt him and me on the subject.
Scott, Fair Maid of Perth, XX.

gossipry (gōs'ip-ri), n. [Formerly also gossiprie; < gossip + -ry.] 1. Intimacy.

As to that bishoprick, he would in no wise accept of it without the advice of the General Assembly, & nevertheless of the next Assembly he was seized hard & fast on the bishoprick, whereby all gossiprie grew up between him and my uncle Mr. Andrew.
Melville's MS., p. 30.

2. Gossipy conversation; current talk or report.

And many a flower of London gossipry
Has dropped whenever such a stem broke off.
Mrs. Browning, Aurora Leigh, VIII.

gossipy (gōs'ip-i), a. [< gossip + -y.] Pertaining to or characterized by gossip; hence, chatty; entertaining by a light, pleasing style of conversation or writing.

The politicians of the lobby . . . came dangerously near to gossipy prophecy.
Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XXXIX. 1.

gossomer, n. An earlier spelling of gossamer.
gossoun (gōs'oun), n. [A corruption of E. garçon, a boy, a servant: see garçon, garçon.] A boy; a male servant. [Ireland.]

In most Irish families there used to be a bare footed gossoun, who was slave to the cook and the butler, and who in fact, without wages, did all the hard work of the house. Gossouns were always employed as messengers.
Miss Edgeworth, Castle Rackrent, p. 38.

gossypine (gōs'ip-in), a. [< Gossypium + -ine]. In bot., cottony; resembling cotton.

Gossypium (gōs'ip-i-um), n. [NL. < L. gossypion, gossypion, also called gossypinus, the cotton-tree; the word has a Gr. semblance, but is prob. of Eastern origin.] A malvaceous genus of herbs and shrubs, natives of the tropics, and important as yielding the cotton of commerce. They have usually 3- to 5-lobed leaves, showy axillary flowers surrounded by 3 large cordate bracts and 3- to 5-lobed capsule, the seeds densely covered by long woolly hairs. Four species are generally recognized, though many others have been proposed. The cultivated species are natives of Asia and Africa, where they have been planted from very early times, and many varieties have been produced. All the cotton manufactured in civilized countries is the product of several varieties of G. arboreum and G. barbadense, but G. arboreum is also cultivated in some tropical regions. The fourth species, G. Davidsonii, is native upon the western coast of Mexico, and is remarkable in having its seeds wholly naked; it is known only in a wild state. See cotton and cotton-plant.

gosti, gostly, etc. The more correct but obsolete spellings of ghost, ghostly, etc. Chaucer.

gossudar, n. See hospodar.

go-summer (gō'sum'er), n. [< go-harvest, and see gossamer.] The latter end of summer; the last warm and fine weather. [Scotch.]

The go summer was matchless fair in Murray, without winds, wet, or any storm.
Spalding, Hist. Troubles in Scotland, I. 34.

got (got). Preterit of get.

got, gotten (got, got'n). Past participles of get.

gota (gō'tā), n. [E. Ind.] Lacc: its name in the north of India, where its manufacture is but recent. (a) A gold or silver lace, the variety being indicated by some qualifying word. (b) A lace made of white cotton thread.

gotch (gōch), n. [E. dial. Cf. (?) It. gozzo, a kind of bottle, a cruet, gotto, a goblet, eup, bowl.] A water-pot; an earthen jug; a pitcher.

He repaired to the kitchen and seated himself among the rustics assembled over their evening gotch of work, joined in their discourse.
The Village Curate.

gotel, n. An obsolete form of gout.

gote (gōt), n. [< ME. gote, a drain, = OD. gote; a ditch, channel, gutter, sewer, = G. gosse, a drain; akin to E. gut, which is used in a similar sense: see gut.] 1. A drain, sluice, ditch, or gutter.

There arose a great controversy about the erecting of two new gotes at Skirbek and Langue for draining the waters out of South Holland and the Fens.
Dugdale's Imbanking (1662), p. 213. (Halliwell.)

2. A deep miry place. [North. Eng. and Scotch.]

Also spelled goat.

goter, n. An obsolete form of gutter. Chaucer.

Goth (gōth), n. [= D. Goth = G. Gotha = Sw. Göter = Dan. Goter = F. Goth = Sp. Godo = It. Goto, < LL. Gothus, Gr. Γόθος, usually in pl., LL. Gothi, Gr. Γόθοι, prob. the same name, etymologically, as L. Gothones, Götiones (Tacitus), Gutones (Pliny), Gr. Γότται (Ptolemy), etc., applied to Teut. peoples, being accom. forms (LL. better Goths* of Goths, Guts*, pl. Gutis*, inferred from Goth. Gut-thruda, the 'Goth-people,' *< Guth, Goth, + thruda = AS. throd, people: see Dutch.] 1. One of an ancient Teutonic race which appeared in the regions of the lower Danube in the third century A. D. A probable hypothesis identifies them with the Gothones or Guttones who dwell near the Baltic; but there is little reason to believe in their relationship with the Gutes or in their Scandinavian origin. They made many incursions into different parts of the Roman empire in the third and fourth centuries, and gradually accepted the Arian form of Christianity. The two great historical divisions were the Visigoths (West Goths) and the Ostrogoths (East Goths). A body of Visigoths settled in the province of Moesia (the present Servia and Bulgaria), and were hence called Moesogoths; and their apostle Wulfila (Ulfilas) translated the Scriptures into Gothic. The Visigoths formed a monarchy about 418, which existed in southern France until 507 and in Spain until 711. An Ostrogothic kingdom existed in Italy and neighboring regions from 480 to 555. By extension the name was applied to various other tribes which invaded the Roman empire.

I am here with thee and thy goats, as the most capricious poet, honest Ovid, was among the Goths.
Shak., As you Like It, III. 3.

Shall he (the gladiator) expire,
And unavenged? Arise! ye Goths, and glut your ire!
Byron, Child Harold, IV. 141.

2. One who is rude or uncivilized; a barbarian; a rude, ignorant person; one defective in taste: from the character of the Goths during their early incursions into Roman territory.

I look upon these writers as Goths in poetry.
Addison, Spectator, No. 62.

What do you think of the late extraordinary event in Spain? Could you have ever imagined that those ignorant Goths would have dared to banish the Jesuits?
Chesford.

Gothamist (gō'tham-ist), n. [< Gotham in Nottinghamshire, England, + -ist. The village of Gotham became proverbial for the blundering simplicity of its inhabitants ("the wise men of Gotham"), of which many ludicrous stories were told.] A simple-minded person; a simpleton. See the etymology.

Gothamite (gō'tham-it), n. [< Gotham + -ite.] An inhabitant of Gotham in England, and, by transfer, of the city of New York, to which the name was humorously applied in allusion to the stories of the wise men of Gotham. See Gothamist. [The term was first used by Washington Irving in "Salmagundi," 1807.]

A most insidious and pestilent dance called the Waltz . . . was a potent auxiliary; for by it were the heads of the simple Gothamites most villainously turned.
Salmagundi, No. 17.

Gothiant, n. [< Goth + -ian.] A Goth.

More like unto the Grecians than unto the Gothians in handling of their verse.
Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 145.

Gothic (gōth'ik), a. and n. [= F. Gothique = Sp. Gótico = Pg. Gothico = It. Gotico (cf. D. Gothisch = Dan. Gotisk = Sw. Götisk), < LL. Gothicus, < Gothus, pl. Gothi, Goths: see Goth.] 1. a. 1. Of or pertaining to the Goths: as, Gothic customs; Gothic barbarity.

The term Gothic, as applied to all the styles invented and used by the Western Barbarians who overthrew the Roman Empire and settled within its limits, is a true and expressive term both ethnographically and architecturally.
J. Ferguson, Hist. Arch., I. 287.

Hence—2. Rude; barbarous.

That late, and we may add gothic, practice of using a multiplicity of notes.
Goldsmith, Int. to Hist. Work.

When do you dine, Emilia? At the old Gothic hour of four o'clock, I suppose.
Mrs. Marsh, Emilia Wyndham, xxi.

3. An epithet commonly applied to the European art of the middle ages, and more particularly to the various pointed types of architecture generally prevalent from the middle of the twelfth century to the revival of study of classical models in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. This epithet was originally applied in scorn (compare def. 2), by Italian Renaissance architects, to every species of art which had existed from the decay of Roman art until the outward forms of that art were revived as patterns for imitation; but, although no longer used in a depreciative sense, the adjective is inappropriate as applied to one of the noblest and completest styles of architecture ever developed, which owes nothing whatever to the Goths, and is seldom now described as Gothic in other languages than English. See medieval and pointed.

The roof had some non-descript kind of projections called bartisans, and displayed at each frequent angle a small turret, rather resembling a pepper-box than a Gothic watch-tower.
Scott, Waverley, viii.

The principle of Gothic building, that every part, including what might seem at first sight as mere ornament, should have a constructive value, was never adopted by Italian builders.

C. E. Norton, Church-building in Middle Ages, p. 122.

4. In liturgies, an epithet sometimes applied to the Mozarabic liturgy, or to the Gallican family of liturgies, in accordance with an incorrect theory that they were first introduced into Gaul and Spain by the Visigoths, or from the fact that they were in use in Gallican and Spanish churches at the time of Gothic domination. An ancient manuscript of the Gallican liturgy still extant is entitled a Gothic Missal (Missale Gothicum) by a later hand.

II. n. 1. The language of the Goths. The Goths spoke various forms of a Teutonic tongue now usually classed with the Scandinavian as the eastern branch of the Teutonic family, though it has also close affinities with the western branch (old High German, Anglo-Saxon, etc.). All forms of Gothic have perished without record, except that spoken by some of the western Goths (Visigoths) who at the beginning of the fourth century occupied Dacia (Wallachia, etc.), and who before the end of that century passed over in great numbers into Moesia (now Bulgaria, etc.). Revolting against the Roman empire, they extended their conquests even into Gaul and Spain. Their language, now called Moesogothic or simply Gothic, is preserved in the fragmentary remains of a nearly complete translation of the Bible made by their bishop, Wulfila (a name also used in the forms Ulfila, Ulfila, Ulfila) who lived in the fourth century A. D., and in some other fragments. These remains are of the highest philological importance, preceding by several centuries the next earliest Teutonic records (Anglo-Saxon and Old High German). The language bears a primitive aspect, indicating its existence under practically undisturbed linguistic conditions for a long period before its appearance in the records. Apart from the Latin and Greek words introduced with Christianity, Gothic shows little trace of foreign influences except in the presence of a few words borrowed from the neighboring Slavs. As the oldest recorded Teutonic tongue, and usually but not always nearest the original Teutonic type, it stands at the head of the languages of its class, to which it bears a relation like that of the Sanskrit to the other languages of the Indo-European family.

2. In bibliography, an early form of black-faced and pointed letters, as shown in printed books and manuscripts.—3. [l. c.] The American name for a style of square-cut printing-type without serifs or hair-lines, after the style of old Roman mural letters. What is called simply gothic in America is known in England as grotesque, and lighter faces known in England as caso-erif are in America called gothic condensed, light-face gothic, etc.

THIS LINE IS IN GOTHIC.

4. The so-called Gothic style of architecture. See 1, 3.

The parish church of Lambeth is at a small distance from the Palace, has a plain tower, and the architecture is of the Gothic of the time of Edward IV.
Pennant, London, Lambeth Church.

Gothic (gōth'ik), a. [< Gothic + -ic.] Same as Gothic. [Rare.]

Gothicism (gōth'ik-sizm), a. [< Gothic + -ism.] 1. A Gothic idiom.—2. Resemblance or conformity to, or inclination for, the so-called Gothic style of architecture: a term generally used disparagingly.

I am glad you enter into the spirit of Strawberry Castle; it has a purity and propriety of Gothicism in it.
Gray, Letters.

3. Rudeness of manners; barbarousness; barbarism.

Night, Gothicism, confusion, and absolute chaos are come again.
Shelton.

Without ranging myself among classics, I assure you, were I to print any thing with my name, it should be plain Horace Walpole; Mr. is one of the Gothisms I abominate.
Walpole, Letters, II. 322.

Gothicize (gōth'ik-iz), v. t.; pret. and pp. Gothicized, ppr. Gothicizing. [< Gothic + -ize.] To make Gothic; hence, to render barbaric. Also spelled Gothicise.

The language and manners of the higher ranks are not gothicized.
Strutt, Queen's Hall.

They have lately gothicized the entrance to the Inner Temple hall, and the library front.
Lamb, Old Mench.

Gothish (gōth'ish), a. [< Goth + -ish.] Like the Goths; hence, rude; uncivilized. [Rare.] gotiret, a. [An irreg. var. of guitar.] A guitar.

Davies.

Touch but thy lute, my Harrie, and I hear
From these some raptures of the rare gotire.
Herriot, Hesperides, p. 202.

go-to-bed-at-noon (gō'tō-bed'at-nōn'), n. The goat's beard, Tragopogon pratensis: so called from the early closing of its flowers.

go-to-meeting (gō'tō-mē'ting), a. Proper to be worn to church; hence, best: applied to clothes. [Colloq. and humorous.]

Brave old world she is after all, and right well made;
and looks right well to-day in her go-to-meeting clothes.
Kingsley, Two Years Ago, xiv.

I want to give you a true picture of what every day school life was in my time, and not a kid-glove and go-to-meeting coat picture.
T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, II. 5.

gouache (gwāsh), n. and a. [F., water-colors, water-color painting, < It. guazzo, ford, puddle, splash, water-color, < guazzare, stir, shake, agitate, ford, water (a horse), etc., = F. gacher, temper, bungle, < O.H.G. wascan, G. waschen = F. wash: see wash, v.] 1. A method of painting with water-colors mixed and modified with white, so as to be opaque and to present a dead surface. This process is much used in Italy to supply at a small price views of landscapes, ancient monuments, etc. It is well adapted to produce, in skilful hands, an excellent effect with little labor, especially when the observer is at some distance. The method is useful also for scenery in theaters and the like.

2. Work painted according to this method.—3. A pigment used in such painting.

The Oriental paint, as it were, with translucent gouache; they lay on their tones with a vitreous fluid mixed with coloring matter.
Harper's Mag., LXXVII. 106.

II. a. Noting the method of painting known as gouache, or a work executed by that method.

gouaree (gō-ā-rē'), n. [E. Ind.] The Indian name for the Cyamopsis paralioides, a stout, erect leguminous annual, cultivated generally on the plains of India. Its pods and seeds are used as an article of food. Also gowar.

gouge (gouj or gōj), n. [Formerly also gouge; < ME. gouge, < OF. gouge, a gouge, = Fr. gouge = Sp. gubia = Pg. goiva = It. gorbia, < ML. guvia, gubia, also written gubia, a kind of chisel. Origin unknown; perhaps (f) < Basque gubia, a bowl.] 1. A chisel with a longitudinally curved blade, used to cut holes, channels, or grooves in wood or stone, or for turning wood in a lathe.—2. In bookbinding, a gilders' tool intended to make the segment of a circle.—3. A local name for a shell which gouges or cuts the foot when trodden on; specifically, in the Gulf of Mexico, a shell of the genus Pisana or Fornetius.—4. A stamp for cutting leather or paper.—5. In mining, the band or layer of decomposed country rock or clayey material (suan) often found on each side of a lode.

It is so called because it can be easily removed or gouged out with a pick, thus greatly facilitating the removal of the contents of the lode. See sinker and suan.

6. An effect of gouging; an excavation or a hole made by or as if by scooping out matter. [Colloq.].—7. An imposition; a cheat; also, an impostor. [Colloq., U. S.]

Another gouge was to charge the women a nominal cost price per spoon for the thread furnished them, while as a matter of fact it was got wholesale from the manufacturers for considerably less. The Americans, XIV. 344.

gouge (gouj or gōj), v. t.; pret. and pp. gouged, ppr. gouging. [< gouge, n.] 1. To scoop out or turn with a gouge.

I'll save in cork.
In my mere stoppling, above three thousand pound
Within that term; by gouging of them out
Just to the size of my bottles, and not slicing.
R. Jonson, Devil is an Ass, II. 1.

Hence—2. To scoop or excavate as if with a gouge; dig or tear out by or as if by a scooping action: as, to gouge a loaf of bread; to gouge a hole in a garment. [Gouging out the eyes of an antagonist with the thumb or finger has been a practice among brutal fighters in some parts of both Europe and America, but is now probably rare everywhere.]

In these encounters [formerly in Norway] such feats as who could first gouge his opponent's eyes out were included.
R. Hyman, Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 648.

3. To cheat in a bold or brutal manner; overreach in a bargain. [Colloq., U. S.]

Very well, gentlemen! gouge Mr. — out of the seat, if you think it wholesome to do it.
New York Tribune, Nov. 26, 1845.

govern (guv'ern), v. [< ME. governen, < OF. gouverner, gouverner, gouverner, later and mod. F. gouverner = Pr. OSP. Pg. governar = Sp. gobernar = It. governare, < L. gubernare, orig. "cubernare," < Gr. κυβερνᾶν, steer or pilot a ship, direct, govern; ulterior origin unknown.] 1. trans. 1. To exercise a directing or restraining power over; control or guide; used of any exertion of controlling force, whether physical or moral.

Will you play upon this pipe? . . . govern these ventages with your fingers and thumb, give it breath with your mouth.

Shak., Hamlet, III. 2.

'Tis not folly,

But good discretion, governs our main fortunes.

Pletcher, Wit without Money, III. 1.

My Lord Sandwich was prudent as well as valiant, and always govern'd his affairs with success and little loss.

Evelyn, Diary, May 31, 1672.

Specifically — 2. To rule or regulate by right of authority; control according to law or prescription; exercise magisterial, official, or customary power over: as, to govern a state, a church, a bank, a household, etc.

But if any widows hath sons or children of sons, turns ahe first to gouverne hir house. Wyclif, I Tim. v. 4 (Oxf.).

I have no fear but that the result of our experiment will be, that men may be trusted to govern themselves without a master.

Jefferson, Correspondence, II. 174.

3. In gram., to cause or require to be in a particular form: as, a transitive verb or a preposition governs a noun or pronoun in the objective case; the possessive case is governed by the thing possessed; the subject governs the verb in number and person. — Syn. 1 and 2. Rule, Control, Govern, Regulate, Manage; conduct, supervise, guide; command, away, curb, moderate. (Of the first five words, rule is the most general, and is the only one that can stand for the exercise of an arbitrary or a loose kind of sway. Control implies a firm rule, which may not attend to the details of administration, but holds persons in check and prevents things from going in a way not desired: as, to control expenditures; to control fierce tribes. Govern implies the constant use of knowledge and judgment, like the close attention given by a pilot to his wheel. To regulate is to bring under rule. Hence to make exact; it is not ordinarily used to express continued action, but it may mean to keep under rule: as, to regulate a watch, one's movements, one's conduct, the administration of a province. Manage enlarges the notion of handling a horse or caring for the affairs of a household to greater things, as a ship, a business, a nation; it implies great attention to details, constant watchfulness, and much skill or at least adroitness; it is rather a small word to be used as a synonym for govern. See guide, n. t., and manage.)

II. intrans. To exercise or have control; practise direction or guidance; especially, to exercise legal or customary authority.

To instruct ourselves in all the amazing lessons of God's governing providence, by which he holds the balance of nations, and inclines it which way he pleases.

Sp. Anabaptist, Sermons, I. vii.

Your wicked atoms may be governing now

To give bad counsel, that you shall may govern.

Dryden.

The limits which separate the power of checking those who govern from the power of governing are not easily to be defined.

Macaulay, Sir William Temple.

governable (guv'ér-na-bil), a. [< govern + -able.] Capable of being governed or subjected to authority; controllable; manageable; amenable to law or rule.

governable

The cause of these effects remains unknown, so as not to be governable by human means.

Science, Physical, Dublin, 2, Expt. note.

It [the storm] came on very fierce, and we kept right before the wind and sea, the wind still increasing: the ship was very governable and steered incomparably well.

Dampier, Voyages, III, an. 1699.

So little a while ago that face had moved with every change of sentiment, that pale mouth had spoken, that body had been all on fire with governable emotion.

Guidance; direction; regulation; management; control: as, the government of one's conduct.

The house of God must have orders for the government of it, such as not any of the household but God himself hath appointed.

Hooker, Eccles. Polity, III. 11.

Thy eyes' windows [shall] fall,
Like death, when he shuts up the day of life;
Each part, dopriv'd of supple government,
Shall, stiff, and stark, and cold, appear like death.

Shak., R. and J., IV. 1.

2. The exercise of authority in the administration of the affairs of a state, community, or society; the authoritative direction and restraint exercised over the actions of men in communities, societies, or states.

Why has government been instituted at all? Because the passions of men will not conform to the dictates of reason and justice without constraint.

A. Hamilton, Federalist, No. 15.

Man is so constituted that government is necessary to the existence of society, and society to his existence, and the perfection of his faculties.

Cabanis, Works, l. 4.

Government exists for the purpose of keeping the peace, for the purpose of compelling us to settle our disputes by arbitration instead of settling them by blows, for the purpose of compelling us to supply our wants by industry instead of supplying them by rapine.

Macaulay, Disabilities of Jews.

3. The system of polity or body of principles and rules by which the affairs of a state, community, or society are administered; an established or prescribed method of guiding, directing, or managing affairs: as, representative or constitutional government, monarchical or republican government; the Presbyterian, episcopal, or congregational form of church government.

The government of the United States is a limited government, instituted for great national purposes, and for those only.

T. H. Benton, Thirty Years, l. 25.

4. The governing body of persons in a state or community: the executive power; the administration. In Great Britain government is used specifically to signify the cabinet or ministry, apart from the sovereign, and in speaking of any joint action of this body the article is often omitted, as, the Liberal government was defeated by a large majority. government brought in a bill.

The Cabinet, the body to which in common use we have latterly come to give the name of Government, is simply a body of those privy councillors who are specially summoned.

Encyc. Brit., VIII. 291.

5. A state or body politic governed by one authority; a province or division of territory ruled by a governor. Specifically (a) the military divisions of France before the revolution. (b) In Russia, a province or governorship, as, the government of Perm.

For the purposes of territorial administration Russia Proper . . . is divided into forty-six provinces or Gubernias (guberni).

D. M. Wallace, Russia, p. 196.

6. Right of governing; administrative authority; the office or function of one charged with the direction and control of affairs.

Warwick, . . .
I here resign my government to thee.
For thou art fortunate in all thy deeds.

Shak., 2 Hen. VI., IV. 6.

7. Conduct or behavior; self-control or restraint.

Yet oftentimes it doth present hard rage,
Defect of manners, want of government,
Pride, haughtiness, opinion, and disdain.

Shak., 1 Hen. IV., III. 1.

How did the University applaud
Thy government, behaviour, learning, speech,
Sagacious, and all that could make up a man?

Ford, The Phil. l. 1.

8. In gram., the established usage which requires that one word in a sentence should cause another to be of a particular form; grammatical regimen.

governmental (guy'ér-nen'tal), a. [< government + -al.] Of or pertaining to government or the government; given, made, or issued by the government: as, governmental interference with trade; governmental order; governmental policy.

The great work of a governor is to fashion the carriage and form the mind.

Locke, Education, § 64.

5. A father; a master or superior; an employer; an elderly person. [Blang.] 6. In mach., a self-acting regulator which controls a supply of steam, gas, or water; especially, any device for automatically regulating the amount of power developed in a machine, as in a steam-engine. Governors are made in a variety of forms and with different methods of action. A form of governor for the steam engine which illustrates well the general function of such devices is shown in the annexed figure. It represents a spindle kept in motion by the engine. A and B are two centrifugal balls, C A and C B the rods which suspend the balls, crossing each other and passing through the spindle at C, where the whole is connected by a round pin put through the spindle and the rods, and serving as the point of suspension for the centrifugal balls or revolving pendulums. A piece of brass, M, is fitted to slide up and down upon the upper part of the spindle, and to this piece the end of the lever N O, whose fulcrum is at P, is attached. This piece of brass is also connected with the ball rods by two short pieces and joints, D E F G. When the engine goes too fast the balls fly further outward and depress the end N of the lever, which partly shuts a throttle valve connected with the end O, and thus diminishes the quantity of steam admitted into the cylinder, and on the other hand, when the engine goes too slowly the balls fall down toward the spindle and elevate the end N of the lever, which opens the throttle valve wider, and increases the quantity of steam admitted into the cylinder, thus causing it to be proportioned to the resistance of the engine, and keeping the variation of velocity within narrow limits. A similar contrivance is employed in mills to equalize the motion of the machinery. When any part of the machinery is suddenly started or checked, and the moving power remains the same, an alteration in the velocity of the mill will take place which alteration the governor serves to limit.

Atmospheric, chronometric, etc., governor. See the adjectives. Electric governor, in mach. (a) A governor in which the spread of revolving balls or the spread of the rim of a wheel by centrifugal gal action may act as a circuit closer and sound an alarm or control some other part of the mechanism. (b) The regulator used in arc-lamps to control the current. See regulator. Governors' Act, an English statute of 1699 (11 and 12 William III., c. 12) making governors, their deputies, etc., of plantations beyond sea answerable in England for crimes committed within such plantations.

Governor's council. See council. — Gyroscope governor. See gyroscope. — Marine governor, a governor for marine engines intended to overcome the effects of the motion of a vessel on a governor of ordinary construction. Many such governors have been invented, in which the centrifugal balls are replaced by other contrivances. — Screw-propeller governor, a form of governor in which the throttle valve is regulated by the action of a screw-propeller device working in a resisting fluid.

governor-block (guv'ér-nór-blok), n. In the railway automatic compression-brake, one of a pair of cast-iron blocks pivoted to the axle-clamp. They are driven by centrifugal force when the axle of the brake is revolved, and serve, by means of a pin on the extremity, to actuate the mechanism which throws the brake into gear. Car-Builders' Dict.

Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 11. 94.

Preferment goes by letter and affection. And not by old gradation, where each second stood heir to the first.

Shak., Othello, l. 1.

Hence—2. Progress from one degree or state to another; a regular advance from step to step: as, the gradations of an argument.

Then with no throbs of fiery pain, No cold gradations of decay, Death broke at once the vital chain, And freed his soul the nearest way.

Johnson, On Robert Lovel, st. 9.

I could not avoid desiring some account of the gradations that led her to her present wretched situation.

Goldsmith, Mear, xxi.

3. A degree or relative position in any order or series.

The several gradations of the intelligent universe.

Is. Taylor.

We see . . . with existing monkeys various gradations between a form of progression strictly like that of a quadruped and that of a biped or man.

Bairn, Descent of Man, l. 137.

4. In the fine arts, the regular arrangement or subordination to one another of the parts of any work of art, so as to produce the best effect, as, in painting, the gradual blending of one tint into another.

In the production of gradations of effect in gold the Japanese stand alone.

Quarterly Rev., CXXVII. 166.

5. In music, a diatonic ascending or descending succession of chords. 6. In philol., the relation of the radical vowels in a series of verbal forms or derivatives derived with variation from the same verbal root, as sing, sung, sing, same as ablaut.

The relation in which the oblique was stand to one another is called gradation (Grimm ablaut). By the laws of gradation, e and i (together with their weakenings e and i) are weakenings of a.

H. Sweet, Anglo-Saxon Reader (ed. 1), p. xviii.

Gradation of color. See color.

gradational (grá-dá'shun-ál), n. [gradatum + -al]. Of, pertaining to, or according to gradation.

There is not only a gradational passage from one to the other, but they are often combined in the same individual.

W. L. Carpenter, Micros., 440.

Along with generic identity between the two scientific and unscientific knowledge, we have noted five points of gradational difference.

Gradatores (grá-dá'to-rē), n. pl. [NL. pl. of gradator, L. < L. gradator (inspired from the p. a. gradatus—see gradation) for gradat, walk, step; see gradal]. In Rhythic system (1849), an order of gradational birds, corresponding to the Cathartidae of Cuvier; the stalkers.

graft³ (gráf), v. t. [Early mod. E. also greff; < ME. graffen (= MD. grafen), < OF. greffer, graff; from the noun. In mod. E. usually graft: see *graft*².] 1. Same as *graft*².

In Marche as other think

He [pistachio] may be graffen in an Almainstree.

Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 124.

And they also, if they abide not still in unbelief, shall be graffen in; for God is able to graff them in again.

Rom. xi. 23.

2. To incorporate; attach.

Of those [houses] are Twelve in that rich Girdle graff

Which God gave Nature for her New years gift.

Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, l. 4.

graft⁴, n. An obsolete variant of gravel, gravel.

graftage (gráf'áj), n. [*graff*² + -age.] The scarp of a ditch or moat.

To keep in repair the long line of boundary fence, to clean the graffages, clear out the moat like ditches.

Miss Mitford, Country Stories.

graffer¹ (gráf'er), n. [*graff*² + -er.] One who grafts or grafts; a grafter.

graffer² (gráf'er), n. [ML. grafarius, graffarius, also grafferius, after OF. greffier, a scribe, notary, < L. grapharius, pertaining to a style for writing with, ML. as noun, a notary, < graphium, a style for writing with: see *graft*².] In law, a notary or scrivener; a grafter.

Grassilla (grá-sil'á), n. [NL., < Grass, a proper name, + dim. -illa.] The typical genus of parasitic planarians of the family Grassillidae. G. maricicola is found in the kidneys of gastropods of the genus Marx.

Grassillidae (grá-sil'á-dé), n. pl. [NL., < Grassilla + -idae.] A family of parasitic planarians, typified by the genus Grassilla, and distinguished from other Pharyngea by having no special pharyngeal sac.

grasso (gráf-sá), n. [It., a scratch: see *graff*².] In art, a scratch. — Grasso decoration, design by scratches. See graffin decoration, under graffin.

grasso (gráf-sá), n. [pl. graffiti (-tá).] It., a scribbling. < graffare, scratch, scribble, claw.

< ML. graphiare, graffare, write, < graphium, graffum, a style: see *graft*². Cf. *graffer*².] 1.

In archaeol., an ancient scribbling, scratched, or otherwise marked on a wall, column, tablet, or other surface. Grasso shows on nearly all sites of ancient civilization, particularly those under Roman domination. They comprise more or less rude sketches, names, sentences,

and remarks of all kind, like scrib-blings, and are often of much archaeological and historical importance.

Grasso, from the Dome, Grotto (Palace of the Vatican, Rome). — The inscription reads: AAEEANNNOC CKEETE (grasso) SEON (Athenian inscription) God.

The graffiti or wall-scribblings of Pompeii and ancient Rome. Encyc. Brit., XVIII. 142.

2. In art, a scratching or scoring for the production of designs or effects. — 3. A vessel of pottery decorated in graffito. Graffito decoration, a kind of decoration executed by covering a surface, as of stucco or plaster, of one color with a thin coat of a similar material in another color, and then scratching or scoring through the outer coat to show the color beneath. — Graffito painting, a kind of decorative painting imitating the effect of lines deeply scored or scratched on a wall. — Graffito ware, a kind of pottery with decoration in scratches. See graffito ware, under graffito.

graft¹ (gráf), n. Same as *graft*¹, 2.

The outward defence seems to consist but in 4 towers, very high, and an exceeding deep graff with thick walls. Knox, Diary, Jan. 31, 1645.

graft² (gráf), n. [A later and now the usual form of *graft*², with excrement t, prob. first in the verb, where it prob. arose out of the pp. graft for graffed: see *graft*², t. t.] 1. A small shoot or scion of a tree inserted in another tree as the stock which is to support and nourish it. The graft and stock unite and become one tree, but the graft determines the kind of fruit. See grafting, 1.

Young Grass grow not on the soil, but also on forest, and bring always forth the best and sweetest fruit.

Aeschylus, The Scholemaster, p. 46.

2. Figuratively, something inserted in or incorporated with another thing to which it did not originally belong; an extraneous addition.

The pointed arch was a graff on the Romanesque, Lombard, and Byzantine architecture of Europe.

Encyc. Brit., II. 422.

It seemed to them that some new graff might be set upon the native stock of the college.

J. G. Mitchell, Bound Together.

Specifically — 3. In corp., a portion of living tissue, as a minute bit of skin, cut from some part of an animal or person and implanted to grow upon some other individual or some other part of the same individual.

graft³ (gráf), v. [A later and now the usual form of *graft*²: cf. *graft*², n.] 1. trans. 1. To insert, as a scion or graft, or a scion or graft of, into a different stock, for joint growth: as, to graft a slip from one tree into another; to graft the pear upon the quince. See grafting, 1.

With his pruning hook disjoin

Unbearing branches from their head,

And graft more happy in their stead. Dryden

2. To fix a graft or grafts upon; treat by the operation of grafting.

By the faith of men,

We have some old crab trees here at home that will not be grafted to your relish. Shakspeare, Cor., II. 1.

3. Date trees, amongst which there are two growing out of one stock exceeding high, which their Prophet foretold grafted with his own hands. Parables, Pilgrimage, p. 271.

Hence — 3. To insert into or incorporate with something else; fix upon something as a basis or support: as, to graft a pagan custom upon Christian institutions.

'Tis amazed Reapers down his sickle flings;

And sudden Fear grafts to his Ankle wings.

Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, II. The Magnificence. Graft in our hearts the love of thy Name, increase in us true religion.

Book of Common Prayer, Collect for 7th Sunday after Trinity.

No art-teaching could be of use to you, but would rather be harmful, unless it was grafted on something deeper than all art. Hacken, Lectures on Art, § 6.

4. In surg., to implant for growth in a different place, as a piece of skin. — 5. Naut., to weave over with fine lines in an ornamental manner, as a black-strap, ring-bolt, etc. Grafted bow. See bow. — To graft boots, to repair boots by adding new sides and surrounding the feet with new leather. Butt lett. [Connecticut, C. S.] To graft by approach, in hort., to branch.

II. intrans. To insert scions from one tree, or kind of tree, into another.

The graft and grafts are good, but after proof

Then sows or grafts.

grafted (gráf'ted), p. a. In her., divided chevronwise and also by a line drawn palewise from the top of the field to the point of the chevron; hence, divided into three pieces: said of the field. Also called party per pale and chevron.

graffer (gráf'ér), n. [*graff*², v., + -er. Cf. the older form *graffer*¹.] 1. One who grafts or inserts scions in foreign stocks; one who propagates trees or shrubs by grafting.

I am informed by trials of the most skillful graffers of these parts that a man shall seldom fail of having cherries borne by his graft the same year. Rodm.

2. A saw designed especially for sawing off limbs and stocks preparatory to grafting. It has a narrow pointed blade and fine teeth.

graft-hybrid (gráf'hí'bríd), n. See the extracts and hybrid.

It would appear that the two distinct species mentioned above (C. purpureus, Scop., and C. Laburnum, L.) became united by their cambium layers, and the trees propagated therefrom subsequently reverted to their respective parentages in bearing both yellow and purple flowers, but produce as well blossoms of an intermediate or hybrid character. Such a result, Mr. Darwin observes, may be called a graft-hybrid. Encyc. Brit., XIV. 178.

A graft-hybrid, that is, one produced from the united cellular tissue of two distinct species.

Darwin, Var. of Animals and Plants, p. 416.

graft-hybridization (gráf'hí'bríd-i-sá'shún), n. See hybridization.

The cases above given seem to me to prove that under certain unknown conditions graft-hybridization can be effected. Darwin, Var. of Animals and Plants, p. 416.

grafting (gráf'ting), n. [Verbal n. of graft, v.] 1. The act of inserting a shoot or scion taken from one tree into the stem or some other part of another, in such a manner that they unite and produce fruit of the kind belonging to the tree from which the scion was taken. The methods of grafting are of great variety, designated by the words whip, splice, cleft, scutella, crown, etc. In whip-grafting, or longue-grafting, the stock and scion, of equal size, are fitted together by tongues cut in each, and tightly bound (whipped or lashed) until they are well united in growth. Splice-grafting is performed by cutting the ends of the scion and stock completely across in an oblique direction, in such a way that the sections are of the same shape, then laying the oblique surfaces together so that the one exactly fits the other, and securing them by tying or otherwise. In cleft-grafting the stock is cleft down, and the graft, cut in the shape of a wedge at its lower end, is inserted into the cleft. In saddle-grafting the end of the stock is cut in the form of a wedge, and the base of the scion, slit up or cleft for the purpose is applied. Crown-grafting, or ring-grafting, is performed by cutting the lower end of the scion in a sloping direction, while the head of the stock is cut over horizontally and a slit is made through the inner bark; a piece of wood, bone, ivory, or other such substance, resembling the thinned end of the scion, is inserted in the top of the slit between the alburnum and the inner bark and pushed down in order to raise the bark, so that the thin end of the scion may be introduced without being bruised; the edges of the bark on each side are then brought close to the scion, and the whole is bound with matting and clayed.

Saddle-grafting. Cleft-grafting. Whip-grafting.

2. In corp., the joining of two piles or beams endwise; scarping. — Grafting by approach. Same as approaching.

Graham bread. See brown bread, under bread. Grahamism (grá'am-izm), n. [Graham (Sylvester Graham, an American reformer and writer on dietetics (1794-1851)) + -ism.] Vegetarianism. [U. S.]

Grahamism was advocated and practiced by many.

N. Y. Med. Jour., XI. 567.

Grahamite¹ (grá'am-ít), n. [See Grahamism.] A follower of Sylvester Graham in respect to diet; a vegetarian. [U. S.]

Grahamite² (grá'am-ít), n. [Named after J. Lorimer Graham of New York, and Col. Graham of Baltimore.] A bituminous mineral resembling asphaltum, filling a fissure in the carboniferous sandstone in West Virginia.

graid, graidly. Same as grath, grathly.

grail¹ (gráil), n. [ME. grayle, grayel, grale = OH. gral, < OF. grail, greil, grail, greil, grail, a service-book (cf. grail, grail, a degree) (F. gradual = Pr. Sp. gradual = It. graduale), < ML. graduale, also gradale, a service-book, a gradual: see gradual, n., 2.] Same as gradual, 2.

Others do say that Gahmains ordained the grail to be had in the mass about the year of our Lord 400.

J. Bradford Works (Parker Soc., 1885), II. 306.

In the Graduale, or Grail, was put whatever the choir took any part in singing, on feasts or festivals, at high mass.

Rock Church of our Fathers, III. ii. 512.

grail² (gráil), n. [Early mod. E. grayle; < ME. grail (= MHG grail, grazal, grawal, G. grail, grail, etc.), < OF. grail, greil, grail, greil, grail, also in the general sense grawal, F. dial. grail, grawal, grail, grau, gru = Pr. grawal = OC. grawal = OHp. grail = Pg. grail, in ML. variously gradulis, gradale, grasale, grasula, a flat dish, a shallow vessel; the forms show unusual variation, being appar. manipulated on account of the legendary associations of the word (so OF. saint grail, 'holy dish,' was manipulated into sancti real, prop. 'royal blood,' but taken for 'real blood,' ML. sanguis realis), and the original form is not certain; it was prob. gradalis, pointing to a probable corruption (simulating gradale, a service-book, a gradual, also an antiphon, etc.; see grail) of ML. crutella, dim. of crater, a bowl; see crater. In medieval legend, a cup or chalice, called more particularly the holy grail or sangreal, supposed to have been of emerald, used by Christ at the last supper, and in which Joseph of Arimathea caught the last drops of Christ's blood as he was taken from the cross. By Joseph, according to one account, it was carried to Britain. Other accounts affirm that it was brought by angels from heaven and intrusted to a body of knights, who guarded it on the top of a mountain; when approached by any one not perfectly pure it vanished from sight. The grail having been lost, it became the great object of search or quest to knights errant of all nations, none being qualified to discover it but a knight perfectly chaste in thought and act. The stories and poems concerning Arthur and the Knights of the Round Table are founded on this legend, and it has been still further developed in modern times. See magrail.

And, sir, the people that were there at eloped this vessel that thou hasten in so grace the grail; and yet ye do my counsels, ye shall stablish the thirde table in the name of the trinite. Martin (E. E. T. S.), l. 59.

All arm d I ride, what'er be tides,
Until I find the holy grail.

Tennyson, Mr. Galahad.

grail¹ (grail), n. [As used by Spenser (def. 2), spelled grale, gragle, and appar. regarded by him as a contr. of gravel; but in all senses appar. ult. < OF. grail, graille, later grale, F. grêle, fine, small (< L. græculus, slender, thin; see gruculo), confused with OF. græle, F. grêle, hail (cf. F. grêle = Fr. grail, stout), < OF. grès, F. grès, grit, < OHG. griz, G. grès = AS. grēd, E. grit; see grit.] 1. Fine particles: in the quotation apparently referring to the fine boulders or air-bubbles of mantling liquor.

Nor yet the delight, that comes to the sight,
To see how it [sic] flowers and mantles in grails.
Alison's Songs (ed. Park), l. 61.

2. Fine gravel; sand.

And lying down upon the sand grails
Drunk of the stream as clear as crystal glaze.
Spenser, F. Q., l. vii. 6.

His bones as small as sandy grails
He broke, and did his bowels discomfray.
Spenser, F. Q., v. ix. 10.

3. One of the smaller feathers of a hawk. Blome.

grail² (grail), n. [Cf. *grail*¹.] A single-cut file with one curved and one straight face, used by comb-makers.

grail³ (grail), v. t. [Cf. *grail*², n.] In comb-making, to treat with a single-cut file or grail.

They [combs] then pass to the graining department, where, by means of special forms of files or rasps, known as grails and topers, the individual teeth are rounded or bevelled, tapered, and smoothed. Rogge, Brd., VI. 178.

grain¹ (grān), n. [Early mod. E. also graine, grayn, grayne, etc.; < ME. grayn, usually greyn, grein, a grain of wheat, etc., of sand, etc., a seed, grain of paradise), a pearl, grain of the skin, etc., < OF. grain, grein = Fr. grain, gru = Sp. grano = It. grano = L. granum, a grain, seed, = D. graan, grain, corn, = G. Dan. Sw. gran, a grain, a particle, < L. granum, a grain, seed, small kernel, = AN. and E. corn; see corn.] In sense II, < ME. grayne, greyn, a red dye, a texture dyed red, = MHG. grün, a red dye, < OF. graine, graine, grein, etc., = Fr. Sp. It. gran, f., cocoon, a red dye, < ML. grana, f., prop. neut. pl., 'grains,' in reference to the insects collectively, pl. of L. granum, a grain.] 1. A small hard seed; specifically, a seed of one of the cereal plants, wheat, rye, oats, barley, maize, or millet; a corn.

Eke Marcella afternooth oute of doute
That graynes white in hem [pomgranates] this crasse will die.
Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 116.

The graine of it [Panicke] is almost as great as a bean.
Corbett, Crutches, l. 108.

2. Collectively, corn in general; the gathered seeds of cereal plants in mass; also, the plants themselves, whether standing or gathered; as, to grind or thresh grain; a field or a stack of grain.

Take what is in the first fruites of graine offered, the same is generally in the whole heape. J. Dall, On the L.
And chaupung golden grain, the horses stood Hard by their chariots waiting for the dawn.
Tennyson, Idyll, viii. 300.

3. The smallest unit of weight in most systems, originally determined by the weight of a plump grain of wheat. In a pound Troy or apothecaries' weight there are 5,760 grains, the grain being the 24th part of a pennyweight in the former and the 20th part of a scruple in the latter. The ounce of each therefore contains 480 grains, while in avoirdupois weight, in which the grain is not used, the ounce is equal to 437½ grains and the pound to 7,000 grains. Abbreviated gr.

4. Any small hard particle, as of sand, gunpowder, sugar, salt, etc.; hence, a minute portion of anything; the smallest amount of anything; as, he has not a grain of wit.

And for no carping I south after he kneeling to the ground,
I myste gete no graynes of his grete wittia.
Piers Plowman (B), l. 120.

Arth. Is there no remedy?
Hub. None but to lose your eyes.
Arth. O heaven! that there were but a mote in yours,
A grain, a dust, a gnat, a wandering hair.

Shak., K. John, iv. 1.

Love's too precious to be lost,
A little grain shall not be split.

Tennyson, In Memoriam, lxx.

5. In bot., a grain-like prominence or tubercle, as upon the sepals of dock.—6. pl. The husks or remains of malt after brewing, or of any grain after distillation. It is used as food for domestic animals: in the United States, for cows, which eat it greedily, but whose milk is made thinner and less nutritious by it, though temporarily increased in quantity, while the animal is soon materially injured.

7. The quality of a substance due to the size, character, or arrangement of its grains or particles, as its coarseness or fineness, or superficial roughness or smoothness; granular texture; as, a stone or salt of coarse grain; marble or sugar of fine grain.

The compass heaven, smooth without grain or fold,
All set with spangs of glittering stars untold.
Keats, Paraphrase of Psalm cix.

The tooth of a sea horse contains a curled grain.
See T. Browne.

In any process of photograph engraving in half tones it is absolutely necessary to produce what is termed a grain, so as to obtain an ink holding surface, and giving detail in the shadows.
See Amer. Supp., p. 5072.

8. Fibrous texture or constitution, especially of wood; the substance of wood as modified by the quality, arrangement, or direction of its fibers; as, boxwood has a very compact grain, wood of a gnarled grain; to plane wood with, against, or across the grain.

When any side of it was cut smooth and polite, it appeared to have a very lovely grain, like that of some curious close wood.
Repton, Forest Trees, xxx. § 12.

Then what were left of roughness in the grain
Of British natures . . . would disquiet Cowper, Task, v. 480.

The crushed petals lovely grain.
D. G. Rossetti, Tenny.

The middle of the blade [of whalbone] is of a looser texture than the rest, and is called the grain, being composed of coarse, bristly hairs.

Workshop Receipts, 1st ser., p. 302.

Hence—9. Intimate structure or character; intrinsic or essential quality.

The one being tractable and mild the other stiff and impatient of a superior, they lived but in envious concord, as brothers glued together, but not united in grain.
Hagyard.

My father, as I told you, was a philosopher in grain, speculative-systematical. Stowe, Tristram Shandy, l. 21.

10. A species same as grains of paradise (which see, below).

First he cheweth grays and lycoris,
To amillen sweete
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 304.

There was oke wexing many a spile,
As clove gilliflow, and lycorice,
Gyngere, and grays de paradis [orig. F. grains de paradis].
Rom. of the Rose, l. 1370.

11. (a) One of the grain-like insects of the genus Coccus, as C. polonicus or C. dactylis, which yield a scarlet dye; later, especially, cochineal; the product of the Coccus cacti; kermes; so called from the granular appearance of the dried insects. See under cochineal. Hence—(b) A red-colored dye; a red color of any kind pervading the texture; sometimes used as equivalent to Tyrian purple. (c) Any fast color. See in grain, below.

Over his lucid arms
And cheeks of avery grain, will serve to ply
The sampler, and to loose the huswife's wool.
Milton, Comus, l. 750.

A military vest of purple grain, Livelier than Melibon, or the grain Of Sarra.
Milton, P. L., xi. 362.

12. The side of leather from which the hair has been removed, showing the fibrous texture.

The part from which the "split" is taken (called the grain, is shaved on a beam with a currier's knife.
C. F. Davis, Leather, p. 314.

13. In mining, cleat or cleavage.—14. pl. A solution of birds' dung used in leather-manufacture to counteract the effects of lime and make the leather soft and flexible.—Against the grain. (a) Against the fibers of the wood. Hence—(b) Against the natural temper; contrary to nature's feeling.

Your minds
Pre-occupied with what you rather must do Than what you should, made you against the grain.
To voice him counsel.
Shak., Cur., II. 2.

Quoth Hudibras, "It is to vain
(I see) to argue 'gainst the grain."
S. Butler, Hudibras, II. ii. 478.

Black in the grain. See black on the flesh, under black.

Brewers' grain. Same as draff. See also def. 5.—Grains of paradise, the seeds of Ammonium Mollis and A. Granum-Paradis, two softaminaceous plants of western tropical Africa. They are feebly aromatic and have a very pungent and burning taste, and are used as a constituent in some cattle-powders, and especially to give pungency to cordials. They are also known as grains-grains or melegueta pepper, and were an ingredient in the hippocras or spiced wine of the middle ages.

Look at that rough o' a boy grain . . . into the ginshop, to buy beer poisoned w/ grains o' paradise and cocculus Indica.
Kingsley, Alton Locke, viii.

In grain. [OF. en grains.] (a) With the scarlet dye obtained from insects of the genus Coccus. (b) With any fast dye; in fast colors; as, to dye in grain.

How the red roses dash up in her cheeks,
And the pure snow, with goodly vermilion stays
Like criminal dyed in grain.
Spenser, Epithalamion, l. 338.

Oh, 'tis in grain, sir, 'twill endure wind and weather.
Yea, 'tis beauty truly blent, whose red and white Nature a own sweet and cunning hand laid on.
Shak., T. N., l. 2.

Our reason is first stained and spotted with the dye of our kindred and country, and our education puts it in grain.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1855), l. 688.

(c) See def. 9.—To break the grain. See break.—To dye in grain. See in grain (b).

grain¹ (grān), v. [Cf. ME. greynen; from the noun.] 1. intrans. 1. To bring forth grain; yield fruit.

It flourisheth, but it shal not greynen
Unto the fruite of rightwisenesse.
Gower, Conf. Amant., v.

2. To form grains or assume a granular form; crystallize into grains, as sugar.

II. trans. 1. To produce, as from a seed.

Certes all manner lineage of men been euen like in birth, for one father maker of all goodnes informed hem al, and all mortal folke of one seed are grained.
Testament of Love, II.

2. In breking, to free from grain; separate the grain from, as wort.

The graining of wort from wheat is difficult on account of the tenacious layer of grain.

Thauring, Beer (trans.), p. 158.

3. To form into grains, as powder, sugar, and the like.—4. To paint, etc., so as to give the appearance of grain or fibers of wood.—5. In tanning, to take the hair off of; soften and raise the grain of; as, to grain skins or leather.—6. To dye in grain.

Persons lightly dipped, not grained in generous honesty, are but pale in goodness.

See T. Browne, Christ. Mor., l. 9.

Kermes, like cochineal, were supposed to be berries or grains, and colors dyed with them were said to be grained, or engrained.

O'Neill, Dyeing and Calico Printing, p. 302.

grain² (grān), n. [Cf. *grain*¹, *grain*¹, the branch of a tree, a branch, arm, point, difference, = Sw. gren, branch, arm, stride, fork, = Dan. gren, branch, bough, prong. Doublet, *grain*², q. v.]

1. A tine, prong, or spike. See grain-stap, l.—2. The fork of a tree or of a stick.—3. The grain.

Then Cortin up doth take
The Giant twixt the grains.
Drayton, Polyolbion, l. 688.

4. A piece of sheet-metal used in a mold to hold in position an additional part, as a core. Also called chapelet and gagger.—5. pl. An iron instrument with four or more barbed points, and a line attached to it, used at sea for striking and taking fish. In the United States these fish-spears are made in many patterns, with different numbers of prongs or barbs sometimes only one wrong and a half barb. They oftenest have two prongs each half-barbed inwardly. They are used for turtles as well as fish. Among seamen the plural is commonly used as a singular.

Another amusement we sometimes indulged in was "burning the water" for craw fish. For this purpose we procured a pair of grains, with a long steel like a harpoon, . . . making torches with tarred rope twisted round a long pine stick.
K. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 191.

6. pl. A place at which two streams unite; the fork of a river.

The survey of 1542 describes the Rodendale men as living in sheets during the summer months, and pasturing are an extensive and varied series of about 20 families. The plovers, Charadriidae, and the snipes, Scolopacidae, are the largest of these families; and more or less nearly related to these charadriiform charadriomorphs are the Chironiidae, or shorebirds, the Thimacidae, or lark plovers; the Alcedinidae, or kingfishers; the Protonotidae, or crab plovers; the Hemipodidae, or oyster-catchers; the Jaculidae, or Jaculus; the Scoropacidae, or phalaropes. A pair of holothirid families of Grallae are the Edwardsiidae, or thick knees, and the Grallidae, or bustards. The remarkable gralline genera Karyopoda, Ichnocetus, and Mentis are types respectively of three families. The remaining procelarian gralline families are the Grallidae and Ballidae, or cranes and rails, with which are now associated the Aramidae, Poeyllidae, and Caranidae. See the family names.

Grallaria (gra-lá-ri-á), n. [NL., < L. grallar, stilt (see Grallae), + -aria.] A genus of formicarian passerine birds, a leading group of gram, gramme (gram), n. [= D. Dan. Sw. gram = G. gramm = Pg. It. gramma, < F. gramme, a unit of mass (see def.), < L. gramma, < LGr. gramma, a small weight (the weight of two obols), a particular use of Gr. gramma, that which is drawn or written, a line, letter, writing, etc., < graphein, write: see graph, grace.] In the metric system, a unit of mass. It is defined as the thousandth part of the mass of a certain piece of platinum preserved at Paris and called the Kilogramme des Archives. The intention was that the mass of a cubic centimeter of water at its maximum density should be one gram, and this is very nearly true. A gram is equal to 15.4324 Troy grains. Abbreviation (by an international convention) gr.

gram (gram), n. [Anglo-Ind., prob. < Pg. grão = Sp. grano, < L. granum, a grain, seed: see grain.] The Hind. name for chick-pea is chandi. In the East Indies, the chick-pea, Cicer arietinum, there used extensively as fodder for horses and cattle, and also in cakes, curries, etc.

It. -gramma, < L. -gramma, < Gr. -gramma, gramma, what is written, a writing: see gram.] A terminal element in nouns of Greek origin, denoting 'that which is written or marked,' as in diagram, epigram, program, monogram, telegram, etc. Formerly and in programme still often written gramme, after the French form. In the metric terms decagram, hectogram, etc., it is merely the word gram in composition.

GRAMA-GRASS (grá-má-grás), n. [Sp. grama, creeping cyndon (Cynodon dactylon, Pers.), also creeping wheat-grass, dog's-grass (Trisetum repens, L.).] A common name for several low grasses which are frequent upon the plains east of the Rocky Mountains and from western Texas to Arizona. The most abundant species is Setaria digitata, also called mesquite-grass and buffalo-grass. The name is also given to species of Muhlenbergia and Poa, common in the same region.

Gramary (gram-á-ri), n. [Also, more archaically, gramarye, < ME. gramary, gramary, gramary, the same as gramere, gramer, grammar, often used as equiv. to 'learning, erudition,' and hence 'magic, enchantment,' as in OF. gramaire, gramaire, F. gramoire, a book of conjuring or magic, hence jargon, gibberish, another form of gramaire, F. gramaire, grammar, and therefore identical with grammar. The word, in the spelling gramarye, was revived and used in the second sense by Sir Walter Scott, whence, like glamour, a word also revived by him, and ult. also identical with gramary and grammar, though not hitherto recognized as such, it has spread into some archaic literary use.] 1. Grammar; hence, learning in general; erudition.

Cowthe ye by youre gramarye reche as a drick, I should be more mary.

Tommy's Mysteries, p. 100.

2. Magic; enchantment. [Obsolete except as a literary archaism.]

Whate'er he did of gramarye

Was always done maliciously.

Scott, L. of L. M., III, 11.

All white from head to foot, as if blanched by some strange gramarye.

The Century, XXVII, 302.

All learning fell under aspersion, till at length the very grammar itself (the last volume in the world, one would say, to conjure with) gave to English the word gramarye (enchantment), and in French became a book of magic, under the alias of gramoire.

Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 53.

gram-centimeter (gram-sen-ti-mē-ter), n. A unit used in measuring mechanical work. It is equal to the work done against gravity in raising a mass of one gram through a vertical height of one centimeter, and is equivalent to 9 ergs (g being the acceleration of gravity) that is, to about 140 ergs.

Nir T. Mohr, Utopia, II, 2.

"Gramery, Mammon" (said the gentle knight),

"For so great grace and offred his estate."

Spenser, F. Q., II, vii, 30.

There is many a fool can turn his nose up at good drink without ever having been out of the smoke of old England, and so ever gramery mine own fire-side.

Scott, Kenilworth, I.

Gramineae (gram-i-nē-ā-sē), n. pl. [NL.] Same as Gramineae.

Gramineaceous (gram-i-nē-ā-si-ūs), a. [< NL. gramineaceus, < L. gramen (gramis), grass. There is no proof of a connection with E. grass, q. v.] Same as gramineous.

Gramineae (grá-mi-nē-ā-sē), n. pl. [NL., fem. pl. of L. graminis, of or pertaining to grass: see gramineus.] In bot., the largest order among endogenous plants except the orchids, and the most important in the entire vegetable kingdom, everywhere distributed throughout the globe, and comprising 300 genera and over 3,000 species.

The stems are usually terete and hollow between the nodes, and the linear leaves are sheathing at the base and two-ranked. The flowers are glumaceous and for the most part bisexual. In spikelets which are variously arranged in spikes or panicles, each flower having a one-celled, one-ovuled ovary, which at maturity becomes the peculiar fruit known as a caryopsis. The species are generally herbaceous, some of the herbaceous only becoming arborescent. Besides the grasses which supply food for nearly all graminivorous animals, both wild and domesticated, this order includes all the various cereals upon which man largely depends, as wheat, rye, barley, maize, rice, oats, spelt, guinea-corn, and millet, as well as the sugar-cane, sorghum, and bamboo. Some species are fragrant and yield fragrant oils, and others furnish valuable material for paper. Also called Gramineae.

grammologue (grám'á-log), n. [Irreg. < Gr. γράμμα, a letter, + λόγος, a word.] In phonog., a word represented by a single sign (a logogram), usually the principal consonant: as, it, represented by i (that is, t). I. Pitman.

grammar (grám'ár), n. [Early mod. E. also grammer; < ME. grammere, usually with one n, gramer, gramer, gramour, sometimes gramary, gramory, gramory, < OF. grammaire, later and mod. F. grammaire, f., grammar (cf. grammaire, m., a grammarian), = Fr. grammaire, grammaire, a popular form based on a ML. type grammaria, f., not found, the proper L. and ML. form being grammatica, grammatica (> It. Eg. grammatica = Sp. gramática = OF. gramma-tique), < Gr. γράμματις (sc. τις, art.), grammar, learning, criticism, fem. of γραμματικός, pertaining to or versed in letters or learning, < γράμμα, that which is drawn or written, a letter, writing, pl. γράμματα, the letters, the alphabet, the rudiments, in writing, letters, learning, < γράφειν, draw, write: see gram², graphic, gravel. Under the term grammar were formerly included, more or less vaguely, almost all branches of learning, as based on the study of language; and from this sense of 'learning' it came to imply profound or occult learning, and hence 'magic, enchantment,' in which sense the word is found in the variant forms gramary, gramery, etc., and glamery, glamer, glamour, etc.: see gramary and glamour. See also glomery, another var., in the lit. sense.] 1. A systematic account of the usages of a language, as regards especially the parts of speech it distinguishes, the forms and uses of inflected words, and the combinations of words into sentences; hence, also, a similar account of a group of languages, or of all languages or language in general, so far as these admit a common treatment. The formerly current classification of the subjects of grammar as fivefold, namely, orthography, orthoepeia, etymology, syntax, and prosody, is heterogeneous and obsolescent. The first and last do not belong really to grammar, though often for convenience included in the text-books of grammar; orthoepeia is properly phonology or phonetics, an account of the system of sounds used by a language and of their combinations; and etymology is improperly used for an account of the parts of speech and their inflections. See these words. Abbreviated gram.

Grammar for guides (young people) I got furs to write, And beat him with a balise but xlf the wolle lereu.

Piers Plowman (A) xl. 131.

A school for teaching grammar; originally, a school for teaching Latin, which was begun by committing the grammar to memory. Grammar-schools were the successors of the cathedral and cloister schools, and in early times were established by endowment in most of the principal towns of England. Latin and Greek were the chief subjects of instruction, and the schools became places of preparation for the universities.

At this present tyme there be ij. prelates; whereof the one currying the cure, and the other teaching a grammar school.

English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 200.

Thou hast most traitorously corrupted the youth of the realm, in erecting a grammar school.

Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iv. 7.

All the grammar schools [in 1835] belonged to the Church of England, sons of Nonconformists were, therefore, excluded, and had to go to the private school.

W. Brand, Fifty Years Ago, p. 154.

Hence—2. In the system of graded common schools in the United States, the grade or department in which English grammar is one of the subjects taught. The more common practice recognizes primary, grammar, and high schools; sometimes the division is into primary, intermediate grammar, and high schools.

After passing through the primary grade, . . . the pupil [in the United States] enters the grammar school. The time required to pass through these two grades averages about eight years. At this point the education of many pupils ceases, while others continue through the high schools.

Amer. Sch., VI. 426.

The shark has a broad, flat head, a prominent dorsal fin on its back, and a deeply forked tail. Its body is covered in a pattern of dark spots and stripes, particularly visible along the side and under the belly. The illustration is set against a plain white background.

Cuyler's on the Long Coromopsis (Coromopsis groenlandica)

The Stygian council thus dissolved; and forth
In order came the grand infernal peers.

II. a. A grand piano. [Colloq. or trade-cant.] grand, v. t. [Early mod. E. grāndē; < OF. grandir, F. grandir = OSP. grander = It. grandire, < L. grandire, make great, become great, < grandis, great: see grand, a. Cf. aggrandire.]
To make great. Latine.

Dryden, Death of Oliver Cromwell.
There is always a want of grandeur in attributing great events to little causes. Salmon Smith in Lady Holland's

I confess, what chiefly interests me in the speech of that man is the grandeur of spirit exhibited by a few of the Indian chiefs.

Bureau, Hist. Discourse at Concord.

Size is not grandeur, and territory does not make a nation.

Buxley, Amer. Addresses, p. 125.

—Syn. Grandness, majesty, loftiness, stateliness, state, dignity, augustness, splendor, pomp, sublimity. See grand.

The prophet has promised them with such magnificent words and enthusiastic grandiloquence.

Dr. H. More, Mystery of Godliness, p. 251.

He [Van Pattenburgh] gave importance to his station by the grandiloquence of his bulletins always styling himself commander-in-chief of the Armies of the New Netherlands.

Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 312.

grandiloquent (gran-dil'ō-kwent), a. [= Sp. grandilocuente = It. grandiloquente, < L. grandis, great, grand, + loquens (-i), pp. of loqui, speak. Cf. grandiloquous.] Speaking or expressed in a lofty style; bombastic; pompous.

On March 2, 1770, there was a scuffle at a rope walk between some soldiers and the ropemakers, and on the night of the 5th there occurred the tragedy which, in the same what grandiloquent phrase of John Adams, laid the foundation of American Independence.

Locky, Eng. in 18th Cent., xii.

grandiloquous (gran-dil'ō-kwus), a. [= Sp. grandilocuo = Pg. grandiloco, < L. grandis, speaking grandly or loftily, < grandis, great, + loqui, speak.] Same as grandiloquent. [Rare.]

grandinous (gran'di-nus), a. [L. grandinosus, full of hail, < grando (grandin), hail.] Consisting of hail. [Rare.]

grandiose (gran'di-ōs), a. [F. grandiose = Sp. Pg. grandioso, < It. grandioso, < L. grandis, great, grand, + -osus.] 1. Impressive from inherent grandeur; grand in effect; magnificent; imposing.

Hardly anything could seem more grandiose, or fitter to revive in the breasts of men the memory of great possessions by which new states had been laid in the history of mankind.

George Eliot, Romola, xxi.

The tone of the parts was to be perpetually kept down, in order not to impair the grandiose effect of the whole.

M. Arnold.

Its proportions so simple and grandiose

Lathrop, Spanish Vistas, p. 112.

2. Characterized by self-display or bombast; vulgarly showy or flaunting; grandiloquent; swollen; turgid; so, a grandiose style.

This attenuated journal had . . . an elderman's portly, grandiose, Pultenian title.

Bulwer, Cartons, 1, 6.

Now and then, to be sure, we come upon something that makes us hesitate again whether, after all, Dryden was not grandiose rather than great.

Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 63.

grandiosely (gran'di-ōs-ē-lē), adv. In a grandiose manner.

"You will never persuade me to turn my back upon an old friend in adversity," she answers grandiosely.

A. Broughton, Second Thoughts, II, 2.

grandiosity (gran'di-ōs'jē-ti), n. [F. grandiosité (= Sp. grandiosidad = Pg. grandiosidade), < It. grandiosità, < grandioso, grandiose; see grandiose.] The condition or quality of being grandiose; bombastic or inflated style or manner.

Thomson grew timid wherever he essayed the grandiosity of his model.

Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 276.

The good doctor [Johnson] was essentially a preacher, and introduced a kind of essay and a grandiosity of style which, in feeble hands, soon wrought the decay of this species of composition.

New Princeton Rev., IV, 241.

grandioso (gran-di-ō'ōs), a. [It., grand, grandioso; see grandiose.] Grand; in music, a word indicating passages to be so rendered.

To a grandson, first of his noble line.

Tennyson, Maud, 2.

Granduncle (gran'd'ung-k'l), n. [After F. grand-oncle.] The brother of a grandfather or grandmother: in the United States generally called great-uncle; correlative to grandnephew and grandniece.

Grane (grān), v. and n. A Scotch form of groan.

They've nae sair wark to craze their bones,

An' fill auld age wi' grips and groans.

Thomson, The Two Dogs.

Grane (grān), v. t. [Origin obscure.] To strangle.

One smother'd on one side, and another on the other, grane him with a linen cloth about his neck, pulling the same until they forced him to cry.

Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 112.

Graber, n. [Also grawer, var. grainer, grainery, grawer, garner; see these forms.] A granary; a garner.

There banquet houses, walks for pleasure; here again Crisp grawers, stables, barns.

Dryden, Polyolbion, III, 284.

That other, if he in his Graber store

What ever hath been swept from Libyan shores,

Heath, tr. of Horace's Odes, I.

Grange (grānj), n. [< ME. grange, grawinge, grange, < OF. grange, grawche, grawinge, F. grange = Pr. granja, grangu = Sp. Pg. granja, < ML. grana, a barn, grange, < L. granum, grain, corn; see grain, granary, garner.] 1. A granary.

For their teeming flocks and granges full,

In wanton dance they praise the bounteous Pan.

Milton, Comus, I, 178.

2. A farming establishment, including the farm-buildings and granary, attached to a feudal manor or to a religious house, where, in addition to its own crops, the grain paid as rent and tithes was stored.

At the moated grange resides this dejected Mariana.

Shak., M. for M., III, 1.

A grange, in its original signification meant a farmhouse of a monastery, . . . from which it was always at some little distance. One of the monks was usually appointed to inspect the accounts of the farm. He was called the jurat of the grange.

Malone.

3. A farm, with its dwelling-house, stables, byres, barns, etc.; particularly, a house or farm at a distance from other houses or villages; the dwelling of a yeoman or gentleman farmer.

We . . . ledde hym forth to lannetun les del, a grange, is also myle othe seene by stile the new market.

Piers Plouman (Ch. 27, 71.

What tell of thou me of riding? this is Venice;

My house is not a grange.

Shak., Othello, I, 1.

Fill him with joy, and win him a friend to go,

And make this little grange seem a large empire

Let out with home contents

Fletcher (and another), Proserpine, v

And from the distant grange there comes

The clatter of the threshing flail.

Byron, Song of the Flower.

4. In the United States, a lodge of the order of "Patrons of Husbandry," a secret association for the promotion of the interests of agriculture. The special objects of the order are the removal of the restraints and burdens imposed on agriculture by the commercial classes, the railroad and canal companies, etc., and the avoidance of the expense caused by the middlemen or agents who intervene between the producer and the consumer. The association originated at Washington in 1867, and has spread over the whole country, but is most numerous in the northwestern States. There are local and State granges and a national grange. Women are admitted to membership.

We quite admit in view of the farmers' granges in Illinois and Wisconsin, . . . that the design to fix the price at which one's own labor shall be sold is just as common in the Great West as in Europe.

T. Hughes, quoted in Hinton's Eng. Radical Leaders, p. 112.

The organization therefore is maintained for social and economic purposes, and no grange can assume any political or sectarian functions.

Am. Cyp., IX, 80.

granger (grăn'j), v. t. [grange, n.] To farm, as revenue or taxes.

This ruffianly of causes I am daily more and more acquainted with, and see the manner of dealing, which cometh of the Queen's straitness to give these women, whereby they presume thus to grange and truck causes.

Hitch, Queen Elizabeth, I, 3:4.

granger (grăn'jör), n. and a. [Formerly also granger; < OF. granger, granger, a farmer, bailiff, < grange, a grange: see grange.] I, n. 1. A farm-toward or -bailiff.

Unless this proportion and quantity of muck be gathered, plaine it is, that the granger or master of husbandrie hath not done his part, but failed in tilling of his cattell.

Holland, tr. of Pliny, xviii, 28.

2. A member of a farmers' grange for the advancement of the interests of agriculture. See grange, n., 4.

The time has now come when the granger can be looked upon as a phenomenon of the past, and treated in a spirit of critical justice.

C. P. Adams, Jr., N. A. Rev., CXX, 305.

3. A farmer; a countryman. [Humorous, U. S.]

II. a. Of or pertaining to a grange or to grangers; caused or promoted by grangers: as, the granger movement.

The rash granger laws of more than a decade ago firmly established the principle and the right of extreme State supervision.

Contemporary Rev., LI, 709.

The Granger cases, six cases decided by the United States Supreme Court in 1876 (94 U. S., 113, 155, 165, 170, 180, 181), the principal ones being Munn v. Illinois and Chicago, Burlington, and Quincy Railroad Co. v. Iowa, so called because they grew out of certain State statutes passed in the interest of the grangers, regulating grain-elevator tolls and the charges of warehousemen and common carriers. The court sustained the constitutionality of these statutes, affirming the common-law doctrine that when private property is devoted to a public use it is subject to public regulation, and holding that this right is not affected by the fourteenth amendment to the United States Constitution, which declares that no State shall "deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law."

grangerism (grăn'jör-izm), n. [granger, I, 2, + -ism.] The principles and methods of the grangers of the United States.

grangerism (grăn'jör-izm), n. [Granger (see def.) + -ism.] The practice of illustrating a book by adding up in it engravings taken from other books, or with independent prints, water-colors, etc.; also, the resulting mutilation of books. The practice became popular when James Granger published, in 1799, his "Biographical History of England," which incited persons to mutilate other books to illustrate it.

Grangerism, as the innocent may need to be told, is the pernicious vice of cutting plates and title-pages out of many books to illustrate one book.

Saturday Review, Jan. 29, 1882, p. 128.

grangerite (grăn'jör-it), n. [Granger (see grangerism) + -ite.] One who illustrates a book with engravings from other books, or with independent prints, water-colors, etc. See grangerism, 2.

"He was not," says Mr. Hill Burton, speaking of the Kirkpatrick Sharpe, "he was not a black letter man, or a tall copyist, or an uncut man, or a rough edge man, or an early English dramatist, or an Elizabethan, or a broadside, or a pamphlet, or an old-brown calf man, or a Grangerite, or a lawny morecombe, or a gift topper, or a marble-tender, or an editha princeps man." These nicknames briefly dispose into categories a good many species of collectors.

The Bookman, July, 1883.

grangerize (grăn'jör-iz), v. t. [granger, I, 2, + -ize.] To illustrate in the method called grangerism.

The book (Works of Victor Hugo) was grangerized by the author himself as a gift to his granddaughter.

New York Evening Post, Dec. 18, 1884.

It proves to be a very handsome grangerized copy of Byron's "English Bards and Scotch Reviewers" the pages mounted on large paper, and profusely interspersed with water-colour drawings or engraved portraits of the poets and others mentioned by Byron in the famous satire.

Edinburgh, Oct. 4, 1886, p. 468.

grangerizer (grăn'jör-iz-er), n. Same as grangerite.

Each of the 500 copies will be printed direct from the type, and the portraits of actors will be pagged separately, with blank backs, for the benefit of Grangerizers.

New York Tribune, Jan. 12, 1886.

gran gusto (grăn'gü'to), [It., lit. 'great relish': see grand and gusto.] 1. In painting, something in a picture very extraordinary and calculated to excite surprise. — 2. In music, any high-wrought composition.

grani, n. Plural of grano.

granieri, n. See grauer.

graniferous (grăn-if-er-us), a. [L. granifer, grain-bearing (only as applied poet. to ants), < granum, grain (see grain), + ferre = E. bear.] Bearing grain, or seeds like grain: as, graniferous pods.

graniform (grăn'-i-fôr-m), a. [L. granum, grain, + forma, shape.] Having the form of a grain or seed.

granilla (grăn-nil'yä; Sp. pron. grăn-nä'lyä), n. [Sp., dim. of grana, cochineal, grain: see grain.] Small or half-grown cochineal-insects. See grain, 11.

There is often a second production of cochineal before the wet season sets in. If so, it is scraped off with a knife and dried, but it is of inferior quality, and is sold under the name of granilla.

Culbert, Dyeing and Calico-printing, p. 28.

granillo (grăn-nil'o), n. Same as granilla.

granite (grăn'it), n. [= D. granit = G. Dan. Sw. granit = F. granit = Sp. Ig. granito, < It. granito, granite, lit. grained, < granito, pp. of granire, reduce to grains, seed, run to seed, < grano, grain, seed: see grain.] 1. A rock composed of orthoclase-feldspar, mica, and quartz, and having a thoroughly crystalline-granular texture. While orthoclase is an essential constituent of true granite, trichite feldspars are often present in smaller quantity. The mica is sometimes white or silvery (muscovite), and sometimes dark brown or even black (biotite). Both varieties are occasionally present together, and some lithologists call only that variety true granite in which both are present. While granite is a thoroughly crystalline rock, distinctly formed crystals of the component minerals are rarely seen in it, except on the walls of cavities. The color of granite is somewhat varied, although in much the larger number of cases the predominant tint is a light gray; some varieties, however, are almost as white as white marble, others are of a light red or a pink color, which tint is due to the predominance of a rose-colored feldspar. Some varieties of granite are very massive and homogeneous in texture; hence this rock can often be quarried in blocks of large size. Granite is much used for building purposes where massiveness and durability are the chief requisites. It resists very poorly, however, the action of fire, baking off and crumbling under the influence of heat. Many varieties take a fine polish, and are used for interior decoration and for monumental work. Its hardness and coarseness of texture make it unfit for statuary. The theory of the origin of granite and its relations to the distinctly eruptive lavas on the one hand and the distinctly stratified rocks on the other have long been subjects of discussion among geologists. Granite has often been called a "Plutonic" rock, to express the idea generally held by geologists that it has become consolidated at considerable depth below the surface, not having been poured out of a volcanic orifice like lava. Among the rocks ordinarily designated as granite by quarrymen and others there are many varieties, with a correspondingly varied scientific nomenclature. Of these varieties and names the following are the more important: pegmatite, which includes the granites in which the component materials are present in crystalline masses of large dimensions; porphyritic granite, a variety with distinct crystals of feldspar scattered through a fine grained material; aphanitic granite, in which the quartz has assumed forms somewhat resembling Helvetic characters; gneiss, gneissic granite, hornblende granite, or amphibole granite, a rock in which hornblende occurs in addition to the other normal constituents of granite, the most famous locality of which variety is Syene, in upper Egypt, from which the name is derived (see syenite for the more modern application of this name); granulite, a granite in which only a dark-colored variety of mica occurs; granulite, a fine grained granite with red garnets; and gneiss, a granitic rock nearly or quite destitute of feldspar, interesting from its frequent association with valuable minerals and metalliferous ores, especially those of tin. — See granulite, granulite, pegmatite, and gneiss for fuller definitions of these words.

2. A kind of rough-grained water-ice or sherbet. Also called rock-punch and rock ice-cream. See the extract.

Granites . . . must be frozen without beating, or even much stirring, as the design is to have a rough, icy substance.

New York Tribune, April 7, 1887.

3. Same as granite-ware. — Granite City, Aberdeen in Scotland; so called because most of the buildings are of granite, which is worked extensively in the neighborhood. — Granite State, New Hampshire, U. S.; so called from the prevalence of granite in it.

granital, granitelle (grăn'-i-tel), n. [Dim. of granite.] Same as pegmatite.

granite-porphyr (grăn'-it-pôr-fir), n. A rock consisting of a fine-grained, holocrystalline base, through which the ordinary constituents of granite are scattered in more or less regular crystalline forms. It is closely connected with and passes into porphyritic granite and quartz-porphyr. See granite, 1, and porphyr.

granite-ware (grăn'-it-wär), n. 1. Any fine pottery decorated by a more or less exact imitation of the speckled surface of granite; specifically, one of Josiah Wedgwood's pebble-ware, described by him in 1770 as "barely sprinkled with blue and ornaments gilt." See pebbleware. — 2. A fine pottery similar to iron-stone china, referring to its supposed hardness. [Trade-name.] — 3. A variety of enameled iron-ware much used for utensils of cookery, in which the enamel is gray and stone-like, and very durable.

granitic (grăn'-it-ik), a. [Granite + -ic.] 1. Made or formed of granite; having the texture or composition of granite. See granite, 1, and granitoid.

In the iron age we find granitic hills shaped or excavated into temples.

E. D. Cope, Origin of the Fittest, p. 192.

2. Resembling granite in some of its properties. [Rare.]

The granitic, patriarchal figure of Job, round which concentrates the interest of the play, is strikingly conceived.

Edinburgh Rev., CLXIII, 187.

granitical (grăn'-it-ik-al), a. [Granitic + -al.] Same as granitic. [Rare.]

graniticoline (grăn'-it-ik'-ô-lin), a. [Granite + L. colere, inhabit, + -ine.] In Microzoology, growing upon or attached to granite.

granitification (grăn'-it-ik'-i-fik-ä-shon), n. [Granitify: see -fication.] The act of forming into granite, or the state or process of being formed into granite.

granitiform (grăn'-it-ik'-i-fôr-m), a. Having the form of granite; resembling granite in structure or shape.

granitify (grăn'-it-ik'-i-f), v. t.; pret. and pp. granitized, ppr. granitizing. [Granite + -ify.] To form into granite.

granitite (grăn'-it-ik'-i-tit), n. [Granite + -ite.]

A rock consisting of a mixture of some reddish orthoclase with a considerably smaller amount of oligoclase, together with a little quartz and dark-green magnesian mica. Rosenbach calls true granite that which contains both dark- and light-colored mica, and granitite that in which only the former occurs.

granitoid (grăn'-i-toid), a. [Granite + -oid.] Like granite; holocrystalline; applied in lithology to rocks without an amorphous ground-mass, but entirely made up of crystalline components, whether visible with or without the aid of the microscope. Granite is the typical rock of this class. — Granitoid or granitic structure. See structure.

granitones (grăn'-i-tôn), n. [Granite + -ones.] See gubben.

Granivoræ (grăn-niv'-ô-rë), n. pl. [NL., fem. pl. of granivorus: see granivorous.] A group of granivorous birds.

granivorous (grăn-niv'-ô-rus), a. [NL. granivorus, < L. granum, grain, + vorare, eat, devour.] Eating grain; feeding or subsisting on seeds: as, granivorous birds.

grannam (grăn'-am), n. [Corruption of grandam, q. v.] Same as grandam.

Old men I the house, of fifty, call me grannam.

Wau, and Pl., Sourful Lady, iv, 1.

Ghosts never walk till after midnight, if I may believe my grannam.

Fletcher (and Messinger), Lovers' Progress, iv, 1.

granny (grăn'-i), n.; pl. grannies (-iz). [A childish abbr. of grannam, grandam, or grandmother.] 1. A grandmother; an old woman. [Colloq. and low.]

"Fairly good holy images thou hast here, granny; keep them in good order," said I to the old woman.

Harper's Mag., LXXVIII, 374.

2. A duck, the south-southerly or old-wife. More fully, old granny. [New Jersey, U. S.]

granny's-knot, granny-knot (grăn'-iz, grăn'-i-not), n. Naut., a knot differing from a reef or square knot in having the second part crossed the wrong way: derided by seamen because it is difficult to untie when jammed.

grano (grăn'-ô), n.; pl. grans (-në). [It., lit. a grain, < L. granum, grain: see grain.] A money of account in Malta, equal to about one twelfth of an English penny.

granomat, n. pl. [OF. grenon, grenon, grenon, grignon, guernon, garnon, garnon, ma-pache, whiskers.] The whiskers of a cat. Top-sell, p. 104. (Halibell.)

granophyre (grăn'-ô-fr), n. [L. granum, grain (cf. granite), + (porphyritic), porphyr.] In lithol., the ground-mass of the porphyritic rocks when this is made up either entirely of granulative (gran'ū-lā-tiv), a. [< granulate + -ive.] Granulated or granulating; as, granulative growths.

3. In med. pathol., the formation of small grain-like bodies or tubercles in the substance of an organ, as in tubercular phthisis.—4. In zool. and bot.: (a) A roughening of a surface with little tubercles like grains, or a surface so studded. (b) One of the little elevations in a granulated surface. Granulation corpuscles. Same as granule cells. Granulations of the eyelids. An outgrowth of lymphoid tissue on the inner surface of the eyelids. Granulation tissue. Such tissue as grows in wounds, repairing the loss of substance, and formed from connective tissue or emigrated white blood corpuscles. It consists of numerous cells, with more or less intercellular substance permeated by numerous thin walled blood vessels.

granulator (gran'ū-lā-tor), n. One who or that which granulates; specifically, a granulating-machine.

A machine of water enters the granulator, the movement of the machine rolling the damp grains constantly among the dry meal powder.

Workshop Receipts, 1st ser., p. 145.

This gentleman saw white sugar come out of spoons, and heard a granulator revolving at the rate of 800 rotations per minute.

The Engineer, LXVI, 273.

granule (gran'ūl), n. [= F. granule, < L. granulum, N.L. also granuli, dim. of L. granum, grain; see gran.] A little grain; a fine particle. Specifically (a) In cryptogamic bot., a sporule found in some algae and in all cryptogamic plants. (b) In anat., a corpuscle or particle: a term applied to little bodies in the blood, in fat, in protoplasm, etc., but not specific in any sense. (c) In entom., specifically, a very minute elevation; said of the sculpture of insects. (d) In zool., same as granula, 2 (b). Episternal granules. See episternal.

granule-cells (gran'ū-lā-sēz), n. pl. Round cells densely crowded with fat-globules, found in areas of softening in the brain. Also called granule-corpuscles, Gilge's corpuscles, compound granule corpuscles, and granulation corpuscles.

granuliferous (gran'ū-lif'ū-rus), a. [< L. granulum, a little grain, + ferre = F. bear.] Bearing or producing granules or granulations.

granuliform (gran'ū-lif'ū-rm), a. [< L. granulum, a little grain, + forma, shape.] 1. In mineral, having a granular structure.—2. In bot., granular.

granulite (gran'ū-lit), n. [< granule + -ite.] A rock often having a parallel or foliated structure like that of gneiss, and consisting mainly of quartz and feldspar, together with red garnets, which are usually of very diminutive size. The feldspar appears to be a mixture of orthoclase and alkali feldspar, the latter more generally predominating. Granulite is a rock of especial importance in Saxony. It is nearly the equivalent of the French gneiss, and is sometimes called in German Werrastein. See granite, 1.

granulitic (gran'ū-lit'ik), a. [< granulite + -ic.] Pertaining to granulite; of the nature of granulite; as, granulitic rock.

The rocks may be classed under three heads. (1) . . . (2) The light banded granulitic gneisses or Wiltshire type. The Engineer, LXV, 379.

granuloma (gran'ū-lō'mā), n. [pl. granulomata (-mā-tā)]. [N.L., < L. granulum, a small grain, + -oma.] In pathol., a growth resembling granulative tissue, produced in certain infectious diseases, as in tuberculosis, syphilis, or leprosy.

granulomatous (gran'ū-lō-mā-tus), a. [< granuloma + -ous.] Pertaining to, of the nature of, or affected with granuloma.

In most of the granulomatous disorders we may have not merely a diffusion of the disease throughout the individual organism, but also a transference of it from one individual to another.

Ziegler, Pathol. Anat. (trans.), 1, § 117.

granulose (gran'ū-lōs), a. and n. [< granule + -ous.] 1. a. Same as granular.

II. n. One of the essential constituents of the starch-grain, which gives a characteristic blue color with iodine, and is converted into sugar by the ferment of saliva. It is distinguished from the other constituent, cellulose, by these two characteristics.

Some species which contain no chlorophyll form a substance in their protoplasm, which, from its behaviour with reagents and the physiological relationships observed in certain cases, must be considered to be more or less like starch, or more correctly granulose.

De Bary, Fungi (trans.), p. 450.

granulous (gran'ū-lūs), a. [< granule + -ous.] Same as granular.

grana (gran'ā), n. [Sp., usually in pl. grana, sifting, refuse of corn, dross of metals.] In the quicksilver-mines of California, the second-class ore obtained in small lumps, and inferior in yield to the grueso.

grape (grāp), n. [< ME. grape, sometimes gradin, a grape, also collectively in the sing., as in the pl., grapes, the bunches of grapes (= MD. grappe and krappe, a bunch of grapes), < OF. grappe, grappe, crape, a bunch or cluster, esp. of grapes (cf. It. dim. grappolo, a bunch of grapes); a particular use of grape, grappe, also grafe, graffe, a hook, grappling-iron, = Fr. Sp. grapa = It. grappa, a cramp-iron (cf. E. grapple, grapnel), < OHG. chrappho, MHG. krapfe, G. krappen, a hook, = D. krap, a clasp; connected with OHG. chrampfo, chrampfo, a hook, a nasalized form of the same word, = E. cramp. See cramp.] 1. The fruit of the vine, from which wine is made; a pulpy edible fruit or berry growing in clusters on vines of the genus Vitis.

There ben vines that beren so grute grapes that a strong man a holds have ynow to dunc for to bere a [one] claster with alle the grapes. Mandeville, Travels, p. 266.

The heathen philosopher, when he had a desire to eat a grape, would open his lips when he put it into his mouth; meaning thereby, that grapes were made to eat, and lips to open. Shaks., As you like it, v. 1.

2. The vine which produces this fruit; the grape-vine. The cultivated grape of Europe, whether it be for wine or for table use, is the Vitis vinifera, of which there are said to be 1,600 varieties. The more common native species of the United States are the chicken, frost, or winter grape, V. cordifolia, the fruit of which is small, very sour, and worthless, the river-side grape, V. riparia, the northern fox or plum grape, V. labrusca, the southern fox, bullace, muscadine, or scuppernon grape, V. vulpina or rotundifolia, and the summer grape, V. californica. The numerous cultivated table-grapes of the eastern United States are either varieties of these (as the Concord, Catawba, Isabella, Hartford Proflig, etc., derived from V. labrusca, and the Clinton, from V. riparia), or hybrids of those with each other or with varieties of V. vinifera (as the Delaware, Niagara, Taylor, etc.). The most successful wine-grapes are for the most part varieties of V. californica. All the purely American varieties are remarkable for their power of resisting the attacks of the phylloxera or grape louse, which has proved so fatal to the European vine, and on this account they have been of late years extensively introduced into the vineyards of Europe. V. riparia has been very largely used for this purpose, either taking the place of V. vinifera entirely or furnishing stocks upon which that species may be safely grafted. See cut under Vitis.

3. The knob at the butt of a cannon.—4. pl. In furrery, a mawny tumor on the leg of a horse.—5. Milit., grape-shot. Black mountain grape, of Jamaica, the Guettarda longiflora.—False grape, the Virginia creeper, Ampelopsis quinquefolia. Grape-berry moth, the common name of Eudemis or Eudemis boreana, a tortricid moth which lays its eggs in June on berries of the grape which soon become discolored from the working of the larva inside. The larva eats the pulp and parts of the seeds of sometimes three or four berries, and transforms to a pupa in a cocoon made under a flap of leaf out for this purpose. The moth appears in autumn as the grapes ripen. Mountain grape, of Jamaica, the Coccoloba tenuifolia. Sea-grape, (a) The Ephedra distachya of southern Russia. (b) The Sargassum muticum, a seaweed with large bladders in grape-like clusters. Seaside grape, a name given to several species of Coccoloba growing upon the sea-shore especially to C. myrica. Sour grapes, things deemed as worthless only because they are beyond one's reach. In allusion to the fable of the fox which, having tried in vain to reach some grapes which grew on a high vine, went away disgusted, saying, "I don't care; they are sour, anyway."

grape (grāp), v. pret. and pp. graped, ppr. graping. A dialectal (Scotch) form of grape.

They took their een, an grape an' wale
For muckle aen, an' straight ane.
Burns, Halloween.

grape-cure (grāp'kūr), n. A system of medical treatment in vogue in certain parts of France, Switzerland, Germany, and Tyrol, consisting in a more or less exclusive diet of grapes.

grape-fern (grāp'fēr), n. A fern-like plant of the genus Botrychium: so called because the fructification somewhat resembles a cluster of grapes.

grape-flower (grāp'flō'ar), n. An old name for the grape-hyacinth, Muscari botryoides.

grape-fruit (grāp'frūt), n. The pomelo, a smaller variety of the shaddock, Citrus decumana: so called in the markets of the northern cities of the United States, probably from its grape-like flavor. It is now successfully cultivated in Florida. See pomelo, shaddock.

grape-hyacinth (grāp'hī'p-sinth), n. See hyacinth.

grapeless (grāp'les), a. [< grape + -less.] Wanting grapes; made without grapes, as fictitious wine: as, "grapeless wines," Jenny.

grapelet (grāp'let), n. [< grape + -let.] A little grape. Thurber.

grape-louse (grāp'lōus), n. The vine-pest or phylloxera.

grape-mildew (grāp'mil'dū), n. A fungous disease of the grape. The American or downy mildew is Peronospora viticola, which appears in white, downy patches, chiefly on the under surface of the leaves, producing brown spots on the opposite surface. It also occurs on young stems and fruit. The fructification of the fungus consists of conidia borne upon sparingly branched pinnate conidiophores, and oospores embedded in the leaf. (See cut under conidium.) It has been very destructive in North America, and more recently in southern Europe. The old European grape-mildew is Oidium Tuckeri, in which only the conidial fructification is known, the conidia being borne in a single chain on simple conidiophores. The powdery grape mildew of America is Uncinula spiralis, one of the Erysiphace in which the mycelium is spread over the whole upper surface of the leaf, but does not enter its tissues, and the fructification consists of minute cleistothecious conceptacles containing asci and spores.

grapery (grā'pēr), n. [Appar. < OF. grappe, a hook, grappling-iron: see grapel.] 1. In the fifteenth century, the roughened or studded gripe of the lance.—2. The ring or hollow cylinder of iron through which the shaft of a lance passes and by which it is seized. Compare bar, 6.

grape-root (grāp'rōt), n. A root of the grape. — Grape-root borer. See borer.

grape-rot (grāp'rōt), n. Any disease of grapes which results in the decay of the berry. The black rot fungus is Phoma viticola, which causes the grapes to shrivel and turn blackish. It forms numerous pustules just beneath the surface, which are conceptacles containing spores. In America this is the most destructive rot. The white rot is caused by Gnomophyllum diplo-dictyla. When Peronospora viticola attacks the berries, the resulting decay has been called brown rot. A recently discovered fungus (Grenaria fuliginosa) is said to produce bitter rot.

grapery (grā'pēr-i), n. [pl. graperies (-is).] [< grape + -ery.] A building or other enclosure where grapes are grown, usually a glass-house, whether hot or cold.

She led the way to a little conservatory, and a little pinery, and a little grapery. Miss Edgeworth, Absentee, vi.

grape-shot (grāp'shot), n. A projectile discharged from a cannon, having much of the destructive spread of case-shot with somewhat of the range and penetrative force of solid shot. A round of grape-shot consists usually of nine cast iron balls, in three tiers, arranged between parallel iron disks connected by a central iron pin. In quilted grape the balls are placed on a circular iron stand round an upright iron spindle, and are secured by a stout canvas cover, fastened to the bottom plate and quilted over the balls by marlines, the upper edge of the canvas being tied round the spindle.

I therefore fired a four pounder, charged with grape-shot, wide of them. This had a better effect.

Cook, Voyages, I, ii, 1.

grape-stone (grāp'stōn), n. The stone or seed of the grape.

And when obedient Nature knows his Will,
A Fly, a Grape-stone, or a Hair can kill.
Prior, Ode to George Villiers.

grape-sugar (grāp'shug'ar), n. Same as dextrin.

grape-tree (grāp'trē), n. A tree of the genus Coccoloba, as the checker-red grape-tree, C. diversifolia, the mangrove grape-tree or sea-grape, C. wrightii, and the small grape-tree, C. leucifolia. The name is derived from its characteristic grape-like berry. (West Indian.)

grape-vine (grāp'vīn), n. and a. I. a. The vine that bears grapes. See vine, Vitis.—Grape-vine thrips. See leafhopper and Syrphomyia.—Grape-vine twist, a dance-figure originated at the merry-makings of negroes, and characterized by contortions in the steps and complicated turns. (U. S.)

II. a. Suited for grape-vines: an epithet applied to the poorer soil of Kentucky and Tennessee. Bartlett; De Fers.

grapewort (grāp'wērt), n. The baneberry, Achela spicata.

graph (grāf), n. [< Gr. γραφή, a writing, < γραφειν, write.] A diagrammatic representation of a system of connections by means of a number of dots, which may be all distinguished from one another, some pairs of these spots being connected by lines all of which are of one kind. In this way any system of relationship may be represented. Graphs are commonly used in chemistry, and have been applied in algebra and in logic. — Graphical graphs, a system of graphs used for the study of isotants. These graphs were invented by J. J. Gray, but were further studied by W. K. Clifford.

The application of Clarendon's graphs to ordinary literary questions. Nature, XXXIII, 76.

graph. [Fr. graph = G. grapho = Dan. Sw. graf = F. grapho = Sp. grafa = Pg. grapho = It. grafa, < Gr. γράφω, writing, -writer, < γράφω, a writing, < γράφω, write, describe: see graphic.] A terminal element in compounds of Greek origin, denoting that which writes, marks, or describes something, as in chronograph, telegraph, seismograph, etc., or, passively, that which is written, as in autograph, electrograph, etc. In the passive use the stricter form is -gram.

graphia, n. Plural of graphium.

graphic, graphical (graf'ik, -i-kal), a. [Fr. graphique = Sp. grafico = Pg. grafico = It. grafico, < L. graphicus, belonging to painting or drawing, picturesque; of persons, skillful; < Gr. γράφω, belonging to painting or drawing, picturesque, or of for writing; of style, lively; < γράφω, drawing, painting, writing, a writing, description, etc., < γράφω, orig. scratch, scrape, grate, later represent by lines, draw, paint, write: see grace.] 1. Pertaining to the art of writing; concerned with writing, or with words as written; chirographic; orthographic; as, graphic representation; a more graphic variation.

Availing himself of his poetical talent, and his facility in the graphic art. T. Watson, Hist. Eng. Poetry, II, 167.

Long before the Alphabet had been invented, men had contrived other systems of graphic representation by means of which words could be recorded.

Isaac Taylor, The Alphabet, I, 2.

2. Written; inscribed; expressed by letters.

The finger of God hath left an inscription on all his works, not graphical or composed of letters.

Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, II, 2.

Graphic representations are always specially valuable to the reader. Science, III, 104.

3. Pertaining to the art of delineation, drawing, or picturing; concerned with the expression or conveyance of ideas by lines or strokes, as distinguished from alphabetic characters; as, the graphic arts.—4. Exhibiting as in a picture; representing with accuracy; describing effectively or vividly; vivid.

Passing, during which Gwendolen, having taken a rapid observation of Grandcourt, made a brief graphic description of him. George Eliot, Daniel Deronda, XI.

5. Working by drawings to scale instead of by arithmetical calculations.—6. Concerned with position, not with measurement.—Graphical geometry. See graphical method.—Graphical method. (a) In math., any method of determining the relations of objects by means of drawings. (b) In science, a method of conveying information, between parallel lines of different length are exhibited which are proportionate to the population, etc., of different countries; and (2) to aid numerical or logical calculation, as when a curve is drawn through points whose coordinates represent the population of a country at successive decadal epochs, and this curve is used to ascertain the population at other dates. Graphical methods are of three kinds: those which make no use of the continuity of space except to show that the extremities of lines are connected, and of this kind are graphs, those which use only the projective properties of space; and those which use the metrical properties of space, and which produce diagrams intended to be measured. Of the last kind, for example, are the graphical methods of statistics, etc. (b) In physics, a mode of studying diseases of the heart and the great vessels by tracings of an instrument, as the phymograph. Dunham.—Graphical statics, a method of investigating the strength of structures and other statical problems by measurements on drawings made to scale. Graphical methods are extensively employed in all branches of physical inquiry.—Graphic arts, drawing, engraving, etching, painting, and other arts involving the use of lines and strokes other than alphabetic characters, to express or convey ideas.—Graphic formula, in chem., a kind of rational formula in which the assumed valency of the atoms of a molecule, and their positions and mutual relations within the molecule, are represented by connecting lines or dashes, as in the figure, which is a graphic formula of acetic acid. Each hydrogen atom (H) having a single connecting bond, is univalent, each carbon atom (C) is quadrivalent, having four bonds, and each oxygen atom (O) bivalent. The three compound radicals of which it is composed, methyl (CH₃), carbonyl (CO), and hydroxyl (OH), are also represented.—Graphic gold. See gold.—Graphic granite. See granite.—Graphic ore. Same as graphic gold.

graphically (graf'ik-i-kal), adv. 1. By means of written representation; orthographically.

After it succeeded their third dance; then which, a more numerous composition could not be seen graphically depicted into letters, and honoring the name of the most sweet and amiable Prince Charles, Duke of York.

B. Jonson, Masque of Queens.

2. By means of delineation, drawing, or picturing.—3. As by a picture; vividly.

I have elsewhere called Stevens the Pack of Commonsense; and I know not that I could have described him more graphically. Oxford, Int. to Ford's Plays, p. 112.

graphicalness (graf'ik-al-ness), n. The condition or quality of being graphic. Imp. Dict.

graphically (graf'ik-i-kal), adv. Same as graphically.

graphicones (graf'ik-nes), n. Same as graphicalness.

But seeing the actual reality takes away much of the pleasantness, however much it adds to the graphicones. R. Scott, In the Sudan, p. 22.

graphics (graf'iks), n. [Pl. of graphic; see -ics.] The art of drawing, particularly of precise mechanical drawing, as of architectural and engineering plans.

graphidaceous (graf'id-a-shus), a. [Gr. Graphis (Graphis) + -aceous.] In lichenol., belonging to or having the characters of the genus Graphis or of the tribe Graphidaceae. Also graphideine.

Graphidel, Graphideum (graf'id-i-um), n. [NL., < Gr. Graphis (Graphis) + -ideum.] A natural order of lichens, remarkable for the resemblance which the fructification (apothecia) bears to the forms of certain Oriental alphabets, whence the scientific name and the popular name scriptor lichens. Some of the species are peculiarly important from being found only as parasites on the bark of particular species of Cuscuta, and as serving as a means of identifying some of the most valuable commercial barks.

graphideine (graf'id-i-um), a. [Gr. Graphis (Graphis) + -ine.] Same as graphidaceous.

Graphidiaceae (graf'id-i-um-ee), n. [NL., < Gr. Graphis (Graphis) + -aceae.] A tribe of lichens having the apothecia usually elongated (trilobate form) and normally margined only by a proper exiple. Graphis is the typical genus.

graphiohexaster (graf'io hex-as-ter), n. [Gr. γράφω, a style, + hex, = Εξ, six, + αστήρ, star.] In sponges, a hexaster or six-rayed spicule whose rays are much curved.

graphiology (graf'id-i-ol-og-i-j), n. [Gr. γράφω, a style, pencil, < Gr. γράφω, writings (see graphium), + -λογία, < λόγος, speak: see -ology.] The art of writing or delineating; a treatise on that art. Imp. Dict.

Graphis (graf'is), n. [NL., < L. graphis, < Gr. γράφω (γράφω), a style, pencil, drawing, < γράφω, write: see graphic.] A genus of lichens found chiefly on the bark of trees. See Graphidel.

graphite (graf'it), n. [Fr. graphite, so called from its use in making pencils for writing, < Gr. γράφω, writing, + -αίς.] One of the forms under which carbon occurs in nature (see carbon), also known as plumbago and black-lead. It has an iron gray color and metallic luster, and occurs in foliated masses and embedded scales. It is soft and unctuous to the touch, makes a black shining streak on paper, and is used chiefly in the manufacture of pencils, crucibles, and portable furnaces, for lubricating iron to protect it from rust, and for counteracting friction between the rubbing surfaces of wood or metal in machinery. It is a conductor of electricity, and in the form of a powder is used for coating the non-conducting surfaces of molds in making electrolytic types. The most important regions supplying graphite are the Alfort mine in Siberia, which furnishes the best material for lead pencils, and Ceylon, whence comes a large part of the coarsest material used for stove polish and for lubrication. There are also extensive mines of graphite near Lake Umbagog. — Gas graphite. Same as gas carbon (which see, under carbon).

graphite (graf'it), n. [An erroneously 'reconstructed' form, for 'graffito' < It. graffito, pl. graffiti: see graffito.] Same as graffito. See the extract.

The next [in the catalogue] under the form of Ter Ma (near Rome) was a graphite, one of those rude scratchings which, though made by idle or unskilful hands, . . . nevertheless often contain most valuable information. This graphite was found on the interior of a plaster of the age. . . It represented in rude outline the profile of a bishop seated, evidently presiding from the episcopal chair, with a cloth of background showing the side of the choir, with the pulpit or ambo for the epistle. Shakespeare Wood.

graphitic (graf'it-ik), a. [Gr. γράφω (γράφω) + -ic.] Pertaining to or of the nature of graphite.

graphitoid, graphitoidal (graf'it-oid, graf'it-oid-al), a. [Gr. γράφω (γράφω) + -oid, form.] Resembling graphite or plumbago.

Grove had proposed to replace the platinum by wood charcoal in graphitoid but was dissuaded by gas-volatility. Hopkins, The Chemist (1880) (transl.), p. 22.

graphium (graf'ium), n. [Pl. of graphic; see -ium.] Gr. γράφω, a pencil, style, < γράφω, write: see graphic, graph.] A style for writing; a stylus.

Graphiurus (graf'iu-rus), n. [NL., < Gr. γράφω, a pencil, + -ουρος, tail.] 1. A genus of dormice, of the family Myrodontidae, with a short cylindrical tail ending in a pencil of hairs (whence the name), and small simple molars. F. Cuvier, 1829.—2. A genus of extinct fishes, of the family Caelacanthidae. Kner, 1866.

grapholite (graf'ol-it), n. [Gr. γράφω, writing, + λίθος, stone.] A kind of slate suitable for writing on.

Grapholitha (graf'ol-i-tha), n. [NL. (Traitischke, 1829), < Gr. γράφω, writing, + λίθος, stone. Cf. grapholite.] A genus of small and peculiarly marked tortricid moths, some of which inhabit galls. The larva of G. caryana of the United States feeds on the buds of hickory nuts; G. prunivora infests plums and also apple-galls, & interversaria attacks clover-seeds. There are 14 North American and a number of European species.

Plum moth (Grapholitha prunivora). (Upper shows natural size.)

graphological (graf'ol-og-i-kal), a. [Gr. γράφω, writing, + -λογία.] Pertaining to graphology.

graphologist (graf'ol-og-i-jat), n. [Gr. γράφω, writing, + -λογία.] One who is skilled in graphology.

When told that he is a miser, he is hypnotized person writes in a close, short, economical hand-writing. In the way misers write according to graphologists: as a peasant, he writes in a sprawling ugly hand. Science, VII, 202.

graphology (graf'ol-og-i-j), n. [Gr. γράφω, writing, + -λογία, < λόγος, speak: see -ology.] The study of handwriting regarded as an expression of the character of the writer.

The conclusion drawn by these gentlemen is, that graphology is a real science, and that its main features are correct, generally speaking. Science, VII, 202.

graphometer (graf'om-e-ter), n. [Gr. γράφω, write, + μέτρον, a measure.] A mathematical instrument for measuring angles in surveying; a goniometer.

graphometric, graphometrical (graf'om-e-trik, -i-kal), a. [Gr. γράφω (γράφω) + -μετρικός.] 1. Pertaining to or ascertained by a graphometer.—2. Pertaining to graphometrics.—Graphometric function, a function expressed by means of length but unaltered by linear transformation.

graphometrics (graf'om-e-triks), n. [Pl. of graphometric; see -ics.] That branch of geometry which treats of properties which involve lengths or other magnitudes, but which are unaltered by projection or linear transformation.

graphonym (graf'om-nim), n. [Gr. γράφω, writing, + ὄνομα, ὄνομα, a name: see onym.] In coll. and bot., a technical name based upon a recognizable published plate, figure, diagnosis, or description. Cover, The Ark (1884), I, 321. [Rare.]

graphophone (graf'ō-fōn), n. [Gr. γράφω, writing, + φωνή, a sound.] An instrument for recording and reproducing sounds, based on the principle of the phonograph invented by Edison, but of a different mechanical construction. More fully called phonograph-graphophone.

Therest enraged, scarce he can upstart,
Grinding his teeth, and gnawing his great heart.
Spenser, Mother Bole Tale, I. 1222.

I know before
Two would grate your ears; but it was base in you
To urge a weighty secret from your friend,
And then rage at it.
Boswell, Academy, III. 2.

4. To produce a harsh or jarring sound of, as by the friction of rough bodies.

Open thy . . .
The infernal doors, and on their hinges grate Harsh thunder.
Milton, P. L., II. 621.

5. To scratch or scrape with; use for attrition or abrasion.

Was I a man, ere I
Would live in poor estate,
On father, friends, and all my kin
I would my talons grate.
George Barnard (Child's Ballads, VIII. 224).

II. intrans. 1. To make a harsh or rasping sound by friction or attrition; give out a scraping noise.

They ran together, and tainted each other on ye helmes, but their spurs grated not.
Boswell, Academy, II. clxviii.

Turning softly like a thief,
Lest the harsh shingle should grate underneath.
Templeton, Knock Arden.

In another place stands a column grated about with yucca, wherein they report that our St. Saviour was often wont to lean as he preached in the temple.
Boswell, Academy, Rome, 1644.

grate⁴ (grāt), a. [< L. gratus, pleasing, agreeable: see grace, n. Hence grateful, and (from L. gratus) ult. ingrate, gratify, gratitude, gratuity, gratulate, etc., grace, agree, etc.] Pleasant; agreeable.

It becomes grate and delicious enough by custom.
Sir T. Herbert, Travels in Africa, p. 311.

grateful (grāt'fūl), a. [< grate⁴ + -ful; an irreg. formation.] 1. Pleasing to the mind or the senses; agreeable; gratifying; affording pleasure.

If you will do a grateful office to me,
In person give this paper to a gentleman.
Shak., Love in a Maze, II. 1.

Now golden fruits on loaded branches shine,
And grateful clusters swell with floods of wine.
Pope, Autumn, I. 74.

The occupation [of watching sheep] was grateful to his mind, for its freedom, lunacy, and solitude.
Hawthorne, Bliss, II. 221.

2. Betokening or expressing gratitude; denoting thankfulness.

So many grateful altars I would rear
Of grassy turf, and pile up every stone
Of lustre from the brook, in memory
Of monument to ages.
Milton, P. L., II. 222.

Leave on Swift this grateful verse engraven,
"The rights a court attack'd, a poet saved."
Pope, Imit. of Horace, II. 4. 222.

3. Feeling kindly or tenderly on account of a favor or favors bestowed; disposed to acknowledge and repay benefits.

My life has crept so long on a broken wing . . .
That I come to be grateful at last for a little thing.
Templeton, Knock Arden, xviii.

—Syn. 3. Grateful, Thankful, beholden. Grateful is preferred when we speak of the general character of a person's mind: as, a man of a grateful disposition, an ingrateful wretch. Grateful often expresses the feeling, and the readiness to manifest the feeling by acts, even a long time after the rendering of the favor: thankful refers rather to the immediate acknowledgment of the favor by words. The same distinction is found in the negative forms, ungrateful, unthankful, thankless. Thankful is often loosely used for relieved or glad, where the thanks, if rendered, would be given to a merciful or helping Providence. as, I am thankful for my escape.

A grateful heart will stand upon record against those that in their prosperity forget their friends.
Sir R. L. Estlin.

To find one thankful man, I will oblige many that are not so.
Nesnes (trans.)

gratefully (grāt'fūl-ē), adv. 1. With gratitude or thankfulness.

Thus did himself that here had every tongue,
And gratefully of him alone they sung.
Cowley, David's.

2. In a grateful, agreeable, or pleasing manner.

Study detains the mind by the perpetual occurrence of something new, which may gratefully strike the imagination.
Watts.

gratefulness (grāt'fūl-nēs), n. 1. Gratitude; thankfulness.

And mostly out of gratefulness, in remembrance of the many courtesies done to him before by David King of Scots, he left him the country of Huntingdon.
Baker, 1 Hen. II., an. 1155.

2. The state or quality of being grateful, agreeable, or pleasing.

grater (grā'tēr), n. One who or that which grates. Specifically, (a) an instrument or utensil with a rough indented surface for rubbing off fine particles of a body, as, a nutmeg-grater. (b) In bookbinding, an iron instrument used by the forwarder to rub the backs of sewed books after pasting.

grate-room (grāt'rūm), n. In some forms of furnace, a compartment or chamber with a grate beneath it, separated from the rest of the furnace, in which the fire is made.

These grate-rooms are sunk several feet below the level of the bed of the furnace, and are separated from each other by a portion of the bed, which is called the flag.
Glass-making, p. 111.

grate-surface (grāt'sūf-īs), n. The area of any grate in a furnace. In steam engineering the term is used in designating the extent of surface required in a grate to hold sufficient fuel to evaporate a given quantity of water, and thus produce a certain amount of power. Thus, in a locomotive boiler one square foot of grate surface is assumed to suffice for the evaporation of eight cubic feet of water per hour. Ordinary forms of boilers are much less effective: some do not evaporate per hour more than a single cubic foot per square foot of grate surface.

gratifier, v. t. [< ML. gratificari, pp. of gratiare, favor, exempt, also thank, < L. gratus, favor, grace: see grace.] To favor

We are to take notice of the continued peace and plenty with which we only these three years respectively can adorned, but also for many years together, both before and after them, New England was so remarkably gratified.
S. Norton, New England's Memorial, p. 216.

gratification (grā'tik-ā-shən), n. [< F. gratification, gratification, < gratuler, gratuler, divide into squares, < gratuler, gratuler: see gratuler.] The division of a design or draft into squares, as an aid in producing a copy of it in larger or smaller dimensions.

gratule (grāt'ī-kūl), n. [< F. gratule, gratule, < L. gratula, dim. of crata, a hurdle, wickerwork: see grate², crate.] A design or draft divided into squares to facilitate copying.

To illustrate this, I have drawn out upon the same scale, on the same gratule, with common parallel, and with the assumption of the same meridian, . . . the projection of the general map.
Pole.

The gratules in sometimes rectangular, sometimes spherical, sometimes a combination of both, as when points of which the latitude and longitude coordinates are given have to be plotted within rectangular marginal lines.
Raupe, Arch., XIII. 114.

gratification (grāt'ī-ā-shən), n. [< F. gratification = Sp. gratificación = Pg. gratificação = It. gratificazione, < L. gratificatio(n-), < gratificare, gratificare, please, gratify: see gratify.] 1. The act of gratifying or pleasing; a pleasing or satisfying.

He never tells his disciples . . . that the pleasure of humane life lies in the gratification of the senses, and in making what use they can of the world.
Stillington, Works, I. v.

Their minds are bent upon the little gratifications of their own senses and appetites.
Macle, Spectator, No. 122.

2. The state of being gratified; pleasure received; felicitation; satisfaction.

I thought it of great use, if they [readers] could learn with me to keep their minds open to gratification, and ready to receive it from any thing it meets with.
Macle, Spectator, No. 224.

Nothing severe was enjoined by Mahomet, and the frequent prayers and washings with water which he directed were gratifications to a sedentary people in a very hot country.
Bruce, Source of the Nile, I. 222.

3. Voluntary reward or recompense; also, a gratuity for services received or expected.

This sholk [at Shirley] usually goes with the Europeans to the valley of salt, but not without a proper gratification.
Pococke, Description of the East, II. 1. 102.

The Duke of Lorrain . . . let you languish several months without giving you one platée; whereas the count has already bestowed upon you a gratification which you could not have expected till after long service.
Smollett, Tr. of Gil Blas, II. c.

gratifier (grāt'ī-fī-ēr), n. 1. One who or that which gratifies or pleases.

He had under him in one of his dominions a briber, a heathens, who were great gratifiers of the natural life of man.

Dr. H. More, Mystery of Iniquity, p. 122.

2. One who makes gifts.

gratify (grāt'ī-fī), v. t.; pret. and pp. gratified, ppr. gratifying. [< F. gratifier = Sp. Pg. gratificar = It. gratificare, < L. gratificare, gratificare, do a favor to, oblige, please, gratify (cf. L. gratificus, kind, obliging). < gratus, kind, pleasing, + facere, make: see grate² and -fy.] 1. To please; give pleasure to; delight; satisfy; indulge.

They [Rauannites] are provided one way or other to gratify persons of all inclinations. Stillington, Sermons, II. 1.

Every man has tastes and propensities, which he is disposed to gratify at a risk and expense which people of different temperaments and habits think extravagant.
Macaulay, Utilitarian Theory of Government.

Where in the man who does not persuade himself when he gratifies his own curiosity he does so for the sake of his womanhood? Mrs. Fanny, Unknown to History, II.

2. To requite or reward voluntarily; also, to give a gratuity to. [Archaic.]

Some carrying about water in leather bags, giving it to all, and demanding nothing for the same, except any voluntarily gratified them. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 207.

I know not how to gratify your kindness, wherefore pray, as a token of my respects to you, accept of this small memento. Boswell, Pilgrimage, II.

He wished to have them first taught swimming, and proposed to gratify me handsomely if I would teach them.
Franklin, Autobiog., p. 22.

—Syn. 1. Gratify, Indulge, Honor. To gratify is a more positive act than to indulge or to honor. Gratify is most often used in a good sense: indulge, most often in a bad one. Honor expresses an act of good natured compliment or recognition of inferiority neither weak nor evil: as, to honor a person a second time.

Not food, and tools, and clothing, and decorations only, gratify the love of acquisition.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Psychol., § 515.

Nature will sometimes indulge herself with a leap, but as a rule her march is slow and gradual.
Boswell, Var. of Animals and Plants, p. 202.

To after age thou shalt be writ the man
That with smooth air couldst humor best our tongue.
Milton, Samson, viii.

gratifyingly (grat'f-i-ing-lī), adv. In a gratifying or pleasing manner.

gratifyingly (grat'f-i-ing-lī), n. In the extract, a humorous perversion of gratuity. [Unique.]

grating (grat'ing), n. [grate + -ing, v.] 1. A partition or frame of parallel or crossing bars; an open latticework of wood or metal serving as a cover or guard, but admitting light, air, etc., as in the fair-weather hatches of a ship, the cover of the mouth of a drain or sewer, etc.

We were admitted to an apartment about ten feet long by five wide, with a very thick double grating, behind which some of the nuns appeared and chattered

Greville, Memoirs, April 22, 1830

Probably soundly lodged at the gratings when recaptured, or when in a spirit of penitence they returned to duty

N. and Q., 7th ser., VI. 437.

2. In optics: (a) An arrangement of parallel wires in a plane, designed to produce spectra by diffraction; specifically called a real grating. (b) A series of fine parallel lines on a surface of glass or polished metal ruled very close together, at the rate of 10,000 to 20,000, or even 40,000, to the inch; distinctively called a diffraction or diffraction grating. Such gratings are much used in spectroscopic work. The first really fine gratings were those of L. M. Rutherford of New York. See diffraction, l. and spectrum.

In making gratings for optical purposes the periodic error must be very perfectly eliminated, since the periodic displacement of the lines only one millionth of an inch from their mean position will produce "ghosts" in the spectrum. Encyc. Brit., XXI. 563

The magnificent gratings of Rowland are a new power in the hands of the spectroscopist. Science, IV. 182.

3. A timber framework consisting of beams which cross one another at right angles to support the foundation of a heavy building in light, loose soil.—4. The burden or chief weight; that part of an accusation which weighs most heavily against the accused; the substantial cause of an action at law; ground or burden of complaint in general.

It is not safe nor charitable to extend the grawamen and punishment beyond the instances the apostles make.

J. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 301.

I believe that the real grawamen of the charges against Democracy lies in the habit it has of making itself generally disagreeable, by asking the powers that be at the most inconvenient moment whether they are the powers that ought to be.

Lowell, Democracy.

2. In the Ch. of Eng., a representation by the lower house of Convocation to the upper of an existing grievance, disorder, or inconvenience affecting the church. A grawamen, accompanied by a reformandum or resolution embodying action intended to remedy the trouble indicated, becomes, as adopted by the house, an articulus clerici. If agreed to by the upper house (the house of bishops) that house transmits it to the Crown and Parliament with a view to its becoming law by their action and approval.

Under the first of these heads (the right of presentation by the lower house of Convocation of their own and the church's grievances to the upper house) Bishop Gibson includes the representations made by the clergy, from the very earliest accounts of the proceedings in Convocation, by the names of Gravamina and Reformanda.

Census Tenure, The Convocations of the Two Provinces (1858), p. 141.

grawamenti, n. Same as grawamen.

gräfa, dig (in comp. degräfa, bury), = Dan.
grave, dig (in comp. degrave, bury), = Goth. graba, dig (in comp. bigrahan, surround with a trench). The Gr. γράφω, scratch, scrape, graze, later draw, write, inscribe (see γραφία, γραφία, γραμμα, etc.), is supposed to be akin. In the sense 'engrave' the E. word has merged with F. graver (> D. graveren = Dan. graver = Sw. gräva, engrave) = Sp. grabar = Pg. gravar, (ML. graver, grave, engrave, of Teut. origin, and not from the Gr. word; cf. engrave). The Gr. γράφω, I write, inscribe, scrape, W. grafu, scrape, scratch, are prob. of E. origin. Hence grave, q. v. 1. To dig; delve. [Now only prov. Eng.]

Of bedd wrote that bar, withoute any wode,
A hadda grave on the ground many grete carys.

Ther (where) kyng Nyne was grave under a tree.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 786.
In that feld ben many Tombes of Cristene Men; for there ben manye Pilgrymes groven.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 81.

There a more gold.
So you damn others, and let this damn you,
And ditchen grave you all. Shak., T. of A., iv. 3.
3. To cut or incise, as letters or figures, on stone or other hard substance with an edged or pointed tool; engrave.

Thou shalt take two onyx stones, and grave on them the names of the children of Israel. Ex. xxviii. 9.
Swords grave in names on the long memorial rock
But moss shall hide it. Lowell, Voyage to Vinland.
4. To carve; sculpture; form or shape by cutting with a tool; as, to grave an image.
And (they) graven a graine stone a bed as it were,
I-corned (carved) after a kyng full craftie of werk.
Alexander of Macedonia (E. E. T. S.) l. 120.
Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image.
Ex. xx. 4.

54. To make an impression upon; impress deeply.
For ay with gold men may the herte grave
Of hym that set is upon covetise.
Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 1877.

grave (gräv), n. [ME. grave, grafe (prop.
dat., the nom. graf producing E. dial. and Sc.
graf; see graf 1), < AE. graf, graf (dat. grafe, grafe), a grave, also a trench (= OE. graf =

= Goth. graba, fem., a trench), < grafian (= Goth.
graban, etc.), dig; see graf 1. 1. An excavating in the earth, now especially one in which a dead body is or is to be buried; a place for the internment of a corpse; hence, a tomb;
a sepulcher.

Whence y am deed & led in grave,
Ther is no thing thanne that soueth me
But good or yuel that y do have.
Hymne to Virgine, etc. (E. E. T. S.) p. 86.
In my grave which I have digged for me in the land of Canaan, there shalt thou bury me. Gen. l. 5.
The paths of glory lead but to the grave. Gray, Elegy.

2. Figuratively, any scene or occasion of utter loss, extinction, or disappearance; as, speculation in the grave of many fortunes.
But shew'th—Virtue breeds it as her grave:—
Patience itself is manna in a slave.
Chaucer, Chaucer, l. 102.

3. Sometimes, in the authorized version of the Old Testament, the abode of the dead; Hades.
In the revised version the original Hebrew word Sheol is substituted in some places. In others the old rendering is retained, with Sheol in the margin, and in Book. xxx.
it is used instead of the grave. See Sheol.

They spied their days in wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave (revised version, "go down to Sheol").
Job. xxi. 13.

Some one walking over one's grave, on expression arising from an old superstition that an unaccountable misfortune of shortening or creeping of the flesh is an omen of approaching death.
After (shuddering). Lord, there's somebody walking over my grave.
Swift, Polite Conversation, l.

Sometimes somebody would walk over my grave, and give me a creeping in the back.

H. Knapley, Gentry Hamlyn, xxi. grave (gräv), a. and n. [F. grave = Sp. Pg.

but the exercise of grave powers?
H. Phillips, Speeches, p. 179.

Grave error is involved in the current notion of the present day, that no moral responsibility attaches to the result of (alleged) inquiry.
H. N. Greenham, Short Studies, p. 276.

5. In acoustics, deep; low in pitch; opposed to acute. — Grave accent. See accent. — Grave harmon- ic. See harmonic. — Grave movement. In music, a slow or moderate movement. — Syn. 2. Grave, Serious, Solemn, staid, sage, sedate, thoughtful, demure. The first three words have considerable range of meaning. Serious may express the mood, look, manner, etc., that are natural when men are not in the opposite of gay and popular mood. Grave generally goes beyond this, implying an especial solemn-ness with perhaps especial reason for it. Solemn, startling from the idea of religious covers anything that includes the idea of impressiveness or awe, as, a solemn appeal. See adverb.

Altho' a grave and staid God fearing man,
Yet lying thus inactive, doubt and gloom.
Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

To me was pleasing, all my mind was set Serious to learn and know, and thence to do, What might be public good. Milton, P. R., l. 208.

tions are suggested. In any case, the AE. per/a is unrelated, unless it stands for 'grave'; see grave, revel.] A count; a prefect; in Germany and the Low Countries—(a) formerly, a person holding some executive or judicial office; usually in composition with a distinctive term, as landgrave, margrave ('mark-grave'), ber-grave ('berg-grave'), stift-grave, etc.; (b) now merely a title of rank or honor.

'Upon St. Thomas's day, the palgrave and grave Maurice were elected knights of the garter.
Aske, Chronicles, an. 1612.

grave (gräv), a. [It. heavy, slow, grave;
see grave 2.] In music, slow; solemn; noting passages to be so rendered.

grave-clothes (gräv'klöth), n. pl. The clothes or dress in which a dead body is interred; sepulchral, in the wider sense. [As used in John xi. 44, properly comments in the restricted sense.
See vestment.]

Like a ghost he seem'd whose graveclothes were unbound.
Spenser, F. Q., II. vi. 20.

grave-digger (gräv'dig'er), n. 1. One whose occupation is the digging of graves.—2. A beetle of the genus Necrophorus: so called from its habit of burying dead bodies. Also named carton. See cut under burying-beetle.—3. A digger-wasp, as of the genus Sphex, which digs holes in the clay for its eggs, with which it deposits a store of disabled caterpillars and spiders, to serve as food for the grub when hatched. [Jamaica.]

gravedo (gräv'do), n. [It. catarrh, cold in the head, lit. heaviness, < gravis, heavy; see grave 2.] In med., catarrh of the upper air-passages; coryza.

gravel (gräv'el), n. [ME. gravel, gravelle, < OF. gravels, gravelle, gravelle, gravel (< F. gravelle, in pathology), < Fr. gravel, gravel, equiv. to OF.
gravier, F. graver, gravel (in both senses), <
OF. grave, grava, gravel, sand, F. grève, a sandy beach; prob. of Celtic origin; cf. Irish. grada, gravel, Corn. gric, gravel, sand, W. pro. pebbles, < also Skt. grava, a stone, rock.] 1. Coarse sand; a mass of pebbles or of pebbles and sand mixed; stone in a mass of small irregular fragments.—2. Specifically, in geol., the rolled and water-worn material formed from fragments of rock under the combined influence of atmospheric agencies and currents of water. Most gravel consists in large part of pebbles of quartz and crystalline rock, mixed with sand in which quartz greatly predominates, because quartz forms a large part of the most widely distributed rocks of the earth's crust, and is not subject to any chemical change, nor decomposing like feldspar and mica, but being only broken up into smaller and smaller fragments, so that there may be in the same bed components of the gravel of every size, from that of the hammer several feet in diameter down to the grain of sand not so large as a pin's head.

A well, when of the springs were false and the water clear, and the gravel so false that it seemed of fine silver.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), II. 208.

And he what gaiters hent into hotel where numbers in as the gravel of the sea.
Wells, Rev., 12. 8.

I laid about, and in and out,
With many a silvery waterbrook,
Above the golden gravel.
Tennyson, The Book.

3. In pathol., small concretions or calculi resembling sand or gravel which form in the kidneys, pass along the ureters to the bladder, and are expelled with the urine; the disease or morbid state characterized by such concretions.

Catarrh, loads of gravel in the back, lithargies.
Shak., T. and C., v. 1.

4. In breeding, the appearance of young-calls swimming in clear beer in the form of fine gravel.

It is a bad sign if the beer, on account of very fine opalstances suspended in it, is not transparent, when it has an appearance as if a veil was drawn over it, when no
"gravel" can be perceived.

Cemented gravel. See cement. High gravel. gravel.
A kind of Tertiary gravel, occupying the beds of ancient rivers and left by the erosion of the present streams high above the level of the present sea level. [California, U. S.]

It was not long before it was discovered that the so-called high gravel—that is, the detrital deposits of Tertiary age—contained gold, although the quantity was so small that washing it in the ordinary way was not profitable.
Knepe, Brit., 15. 501.

gravel (gräv'el), v. t. pret. and pp. gravelled or gravelled, ppr. graveling or graveling. [Grav- el, n.] 1. To cover with gravel; fill or chasen with gravel; as, to gravel a walk; to gravel a fountain.

Thou, the fountain of whose better part
Is earth'd and gravel'd up with vain desires.
Quarles, Emblems, l. 1.

2. To bury. Hallamell. [Prov. Eng.]—3. To cause to stick in gravel or sand. [Rare.]

William the Conqueror, when he invaded this island, chanced at his arrival to be gravelled, and one of his feet stuck so fast in the mud that he fell to the ground.

Camden.

Hence—4. To bring to a standstill through perplexity; to embarrass; to puzzle; to nonplus.

Any labor may be gravelled, if a man trust always to his own singular wit.

Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 41.

Else had I misconceived mine own hopes, and been gravelled in mine own conceits.

Ford, Honour Triumphant, 1603.

The wisest doctor is gravelled by the inquisitiveness of a child.

Emerson, Essays, 1st ser., p. 265.

5. To hurt the foot of, as a horse, by the lodging of gravel under the shoe.

gravelless (gräv'less), a. [< grave² + -less.] Without a grave or tomb; unburied.

My brave Egyptians all Lie gravelless.
Shak., A. and C., III. 11.

graveliness, n. See gravellessness.

graveling (gräv'el-ing), n. [< OF. gravele, a minnow.] The parr or young salmon. Thompson. Also graveling, gravelin. [Local, Irish.] gravel-laspring (gräv'el-las'pring), n. The smolt or young salmon of the first year. [Local, Eng.] graveliness, gravelness (gräv'el-i-ness), n. [< gravelly, gravelly², + -ness.] The state of being gravelly, or of abounding with gravel.

graveling, n. See graveling.

gravelly, gravelly² (gräv'el-i), a. [< ME. gravelly, gravelly, gravelly²; < gravel + -ly¹ or -y¹.] Abounding with gravel; consisting of gravel: as, a gravelly soil.

Stately large Walks, green and gravelly.
Howell, Letters, I. II. 8.

Gravelly streams that carried down
The golden sand from caves unknown William Morris, Earthly Paradise, III. 165.

gravel-mine (gräv'el-mīn), n. In mining, a name frequently given to workings or washings for gold in auriferous gravel; a placer-mine: more properly applied to deep deposits of Tertiary gravel where worked by the hydraulic method.

gravelous, a. [MF. gravelous, < gravel + -ous.] Same as gravelly.

Sandy clay gravelous than loess.
Palladius, Husbandrie (R. E. T. S.), p. 88.

gravel-pit (gräv'el-pīt), n. [= ME. gravel-pytte; < gravel + pit¹.] A pit from which gravel is dug.

Walking through the Park we saw hundreds of people listening at the gravel pits, and to and again in the Parks to hear the guns in the North Sea.

Pope, Diary, June 4, 1660.

gravel-plant (gräv'el-plant), n. A local name of the trailing arbutus, Erythron repens.

gravelroot (gräv'el-rōt), n. 1. The jow-pye weed or trumpetweed of the United States, Eupatorium purpureum, a tall and stout composite with whorled leaves and purplish flowers. Its root is used as a domestic remedy in various ailments of the urinary organs.—2. The horse-balm or richwood, Collinsonia Canadensis.

gravel-stone (gräv'el-stōn), n. In pathol., one of the small concretions constituting gravel.

gravelly¹ (gräv'li), adv. [< grave² + -ly².] In a gravelly manner; soberly; seriously.

The envoy gravelly told them that he would put it out of the man's power to offend the laws a second time, and gave immediate orders for his execution.

T. Cogan, On the Passions, I. note B.

The domestic fool stood beside him, archly sad, or gravelly mirthful, as his master willed.

I. D'Israeli, Amos. of Lit., I. 88.

gravelly², a. See gravelly.

gravements (gräv-vā-mon'tō), adv. [It. < grave, grave, low, + -mente, adv. term., orig. abl. of L. men(-t)s, mind.] In music, with a depressed tone; solemnly.

graven (gräv'n), A past participle of gravel¹.

graveness (gräv'ness), n. The state or quality of being grave; seriousness; sobriety of behavior; gravity of manners or discourse; importance; solemnity.

Youth no less becomes
The light and careless ivory that it wears
Than settled age his sables and his woods,
Importing health and graveness.

Shak., Hamlet, iv. 7.

graveolence (gräv'ē-ō-lens), n. [= Pg. graveolencia; see graveolent.] A strong and offensive smell.

graveolent (gräv'ē-ō-lent), a. [= It. graveolente, < L. graveolens(-t)s, also, separately, grave olens(-t)s, strong-smelling, < gravis, heavy, + oleu(-t)s, ppr. of olere, smell.] Emitting a strong and offensive smell; fetid.

The butter, which was more remote from the leather, was yellow and something graveolent, yet it was edible.

Boyle, Works, IV. 581.

graver (gräv'vēr), n. [< ME. graver, grafer, grafire, < AS. grafere, grafer, a graver, carver, engraver (= D. graver = G. gräber, digger, = Sw. gräfsare = Dan. graver, sexton), < grafan, grave, carve: see grave¹. Cf. F. graveur (= D. G. graver = Sw. Dan. grator; cf. Sp. grabador = Pg. gravador), engraver; from the corresponding verb.] 1. One who carves or engraves; one whose profession it is to cut letters or figures in metal, stone, or other hard material: formerly applied also to a sculptor.

What I formerly presented you in writing, having now somewhat dressed by the help of the Graver and the Printer.

R. Knox (Archer's Eng. Garner, I. 326).

Just like a marble statue did he stand
Cut by some skillful graver's artful hand.

Cowley, Pyramus and Thisbe.

2. A tool used for engraving; a burin; also, a sculptor's chisel.

What figure of a body was Lyppus ever able to form with his graver, or Apelles to paint with his pencil, as the comely to life expressively so many and various affections of the mind?

H. Jonson, Discourses.

The tollsome hours in different labour slide,
Some work the file, and some the graver guide.

Gay, The Fan.

3. An instrument used for turning iron after it has been roughed out by the heel-tool.—

4. A shaver, a tool wherewith "bowyers use to shave bows." Barst, Alvario, 1580.—Bent graver, a graver with a blade shaped so that it can be used on a surface having its plane below a marginal rim.

grave-robber (gräv'rob'ber), n. One who robs a grave; a resurrectionist.

gravery (gräv'vēr-i), n. [< gravel + -ry.] The process of engraving or carving; engraving.

Neither shall you hear of any piece either of picture or gravery and embossing, that came out of a servile hand.

Holland.

graves¹, graves (grävz, grävz), n. pl. [Prob. of Scand. origin. Cf. Sw. grafear = OSw. grafear, dirt, Sw. dial. grafar, = Dan. græver = ME. graf, grave, Lat. græ = OHG. griupa, gribo, MHG. griube, griebe, G. gribe, griefe, the refuse of tallow, lard, fat, etc.; appar. connected with AS. grafra (only in two glosses, spelled grafra), a pot (L. olla). Cf. gracy.] The refuse parts of animal fat gathered from the melting-pots and made up into cakes for dogs' meat. In Great Britain such cakes are called cracklings, and the material is often called scraps.

Graves (which are the sediment of tallow melted for the making of candles), cut into pieces, are an excellent ground bait for barbel, etc.

I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 168, note.

A farmer in Surrey used graves from the Tallow-Chandlers, with very great success on a sandy soil.

A. Hunter, Geological Essays, VI. 220.

Graves² (gräv), n. [F. < Pointe de Graves, a viticultural district in Gironde, France.] 1. An important class of Bordeaux wines of the Gironde district, including such red wines as the Château Margaux, Château Lafitte, and Château La Tour, and, among the white wines, the Sauternes.—2. A general commercial name for white Bordeaux wines of second or third quality of the Gironde district on the left bank of the Garonne. These wines are usually somewhat sweet, and admit of being kept a long time.

Graves's disease. Same as exophthalmic goiter (which see, under exophthalmic).

gravestone (gräv'stōn), n. [< ME. gravestene (= D. grafsteen = G. grabstein = Sw. grafsten = Dan. grafsten); < grave² + stone.] A stone laid over a grave, or erected near it (commonly at its head), in memory of the dead.

Timon is dead; . . .

And on his grave-stone this inscription.

Shak., T. of A., v. 2.

In this bloody riot they seem Gravett haply beholding
Of gaseous pteas, too throng and greedily listen.

Samuel Butler, Bland, I. 108.

Gravett level. Same as dump-level.

graveyard (gräv'yārd), n. A yard for graves; an inclosure for the interment of the dead; a cemetery.

gravic (gräv'ik), a. [Irreg. < L. gravis, heavy (see grave²), + -ic.] Pertaining to or causing gravitation: as, gravic forces; gravic attraction. [Rare.] gravid (gräv'id), a. [< L. gravidus, pregnant, < gravis, heavy, burdened: see grave².] 1. Burdened; laden; made heavy.

The gravid king.

To ease and crown their gravid piety,
Grants their request by his assenting eye.

J. Beaumont, Pyrrhus, 2.

2. Being with child; pregnant.

The gravid female (camel) carries her young for nearly eleven months.

Beaup. Art., IV. 781.

gravidate (gräv'i-dāt), v. t. [< L. gravidatus, pp. of gravidare, burden, impregnate, < gravidus, pregnant: see gravid.] To make gravid. [Rare.]

Her womb is said to bear him (blessed is the womb that bare thee), to have been gravidated, or great with child.

Barrow, Works, II. 219.

gravitation (gräv-i-dā'shōn), n. [= Pg. gravitação = It. gravitazione; as gravitate + -ion.] Same as gravity. [Rare.]

gravidity (gräv'id-i-ti), n. [< L. graviditas(-t)s, pregnancy, < gravidus, pregnant: see gravid.] The act of gravitating or making pregnant; or the state of being pregnant; pregnancy; impregnation. [Rare.]

The signs of gravidity and obstructions are hard to be distinguished in the beginning. Arbuthnot, On Diet, etc.

Gravigrada (gräv'ig-rā-dā), n. pl. [NL, pl. of gravigradus: see gravigrade.] One of two groups, the other being Tardigrada, into which the Phytophaga, or vegetable-eating edentates, have been divided.

The Gravigrada are, for the most part, like the Stetho- South American forms, but they are entirely extinct. . . . The great extinct animals Megatherium, Myodon, Megalonix, etc., . . . belong to this group.

Musley, Anat. Vert., p. 268.

gravigrade (gräv'ig-grād), a. and n. [< NL. gravigradus, < L. gravis, heavy, + gradi, walk, step: see grade¹.] I. a. Walking with heavy steps; specifically, of or pertaining to the Gravigrada.

II. n. An animal that walks heavily; specifically, one of the Gravigrada.

gravimeter (gräv'im-e-tēr), n. [= F. gravimètre; < L. gravis, heavy, + metrum, measure. Cf. barometer.] 1. An instrument for determining the specific gravities of bodies, whether liquid or solid. See hydrometer.—2. An instrument for measuring the force of gravity against some elastic force. There have been many attempts to construct such instruments, but none has been successful.

gravimetric (gräv-i-met'rik), a. [As gravimeter + -ic.] Of or pertaining to measurement by weight; specifically applied in chemistry to a method of analyzing compound bodies by decomposing them and finding the weight of their elements: opposed to calometric.—Gravimetric density of gunpowder. See density.

gravimetrical (gräv-i-met'ri-kal), a. [< gravimeter + -al.] Same as gravimetric.

The gravimetrical method together with qualitative analysis appears to be better suited to the estimation of the quantity of albumen contained in a given sample.

W. Crookes, Dyeing and Calico-printing, p. 78.

gravimetrically (gräv-i-met'ri-kal-i), adv. By means of a gravimeter; as regards measurement by weight.

The tinctorial power of many coloring matters is so great as to render them distinctly appreciable to the eye when their amount is far too minute to be detected gravimetrically.

E. Frankland, Exper. in Chemistry, p. 268.

graving¹ (gräv'ing), n. [< ME. gravinge; verbal n. of grave¹, v.] 1. The act of laying in a grave; burial.

Send thy body beried shallow.

This mirth will I give to the graving.

Ford Plays, p. 128.

2. The act of engraving, or of cutting lines or figures in metal, stone, wood, etc.—3. That which is graved or carved; an engraving.

Skilful to work in gold, . . . also to grave any manner of graving, and to find out every device which shall be put to him.

Cham. 2. 14.

4. Inscription or impression, as upon the mind or heart. [Rare.]

Former graving. . . upon their souls. Eden, Paradise.

graving² (gräv'ing), n. [Verbal n. of grave², v.] The act of cleaning a ship's bottom by scraping, burning, etc.

graving-dock (gräv'ing-dok), n. See dock.

graving-piece (grā'ving-pēs), n. In ship-building, a piece of wood inserted to supply the defects of another piece. Also called graving-piece.

gravitate (grav'itāt), v. i.; pret. and pp. gravitated, ppr. gravitating. [< NL. "gravitatus," pp. of "gravitare" (> L. gravitare = Sp. Pg. gravitar = F. graviter, gravitate), < L. gravitas (-t-), heaviness, gravity: see gravity.] 1. To be affected by gravitation; yield to the force of gravity; tend toward the lowest level attainable, as a rock loosened from a mountain.

It is still extremely doubtful whether the medium of light and electricity is a gravitating substance, though it is certainly material and has mass.

Clark Maxwell, Matter and Motion, xlv.

Hence—2. To be strongly attracted; have a natural tendency toward a certain point or object.

The goods which belong to you gravitate to you, and need not be perched with pains and cost.

American, Remay, 1st ser., p. 265.

The colossal weight of national selfishness gravitates naturally to Toryism.

Lecky, Eng. in 19th Cent., iii.

gravitation (grav'itā'shon), n. [< D. gravitatio = G. Dau. Sw. gravitation = F. gravitation = Sp. gravitacion = Pg. gravitacão = It. gravitazione, < NL. "gravitatio" (-n-), < "gravitare, gravitate: see gravitate.] 1. The act of gravitating or tending toward a center of attraction.—2. That attraction between bodies, or that acceleration of one toward another, of which the fall of heavy bodies to the earth is an instance. See gravity. 1. Gravitation can be neither produced nor destroyed; it acts equally between all pairs of bodies, the force being directly proportional to the product of their masses and inversely as the distance between their centers of gravity; it is neither hindered nor strengthened by any intervening medium; it occupies no time in its transmission; and the amount of it is such that a particle distant one centimeter from an attracting gram of matter would by the action of gravitation alone, were no other force present, fall into the center of attraction in 40 minutes and 20 seconds. Inasmuch as the masses of bodies can be measured otherwise than by their weights, namely, by their relative momentums under a given velocity, it follows that the modulus of gravitation, or the amount by which the unit mass attracts a particle at the unit distance, which is invariably best distinguished gravitation from every other force. The laws of the attraction of gravitation were demonstrated by Sir Isaac Newton in 1687.

The most considerable phenomenon belonging to terrestrial bodies is the general action of gravitation, where by all known bodies in the vicinity of the Earth do tend and press towards its centre.

Bentley, Sermons, vii.

It is by virtue of gravitation that matter possesses weight; for the weight of any thing is the expression of the force with which it tends towards the earth.

W. L. Carpenter, Energy in Nature, p. 24

3. In philol., the tendency of sounds and syllables having little or no stress to become merged in the accented syllable, or to fall away entirely; the absorption of weaker elements. [Itav.]—4. Figuratively, a prevailing tendency of mental or social forces or activities toward some particular point or result.—Attraction of gravitation. Same as gravitation, 2.—Gravitation constant. See constant, n.—Gravitation measure of force. See the extract.

It is sometimes convenient to compare forces with the weight of a body, and to speak of a force of so many pounds weight or grammes weight. This is called gravitation measure.

Clark Maxwell, Matter and Motion, xlvii.

Modulus of gravitation. See def. 2—Terrestrial gravitation, gravitation toward the earth.—Universal gravitation, the gravitation of all bodies in the universe toward one another.

gravitational (grav'itā'shon-al), a. [< gravitation + -al.] Of, pertaining to, or caused by gravitation.

After the lunar theory is in some degree mathematically incomplete, and fails to represent accurately the gravitational action of the earth and sun, and other known heavenly bodies, upon her movements, in some unknown force other than the gravitational attractions of these bodies is operating in the case.

Science, IV, 104.

gravitationally (grav'itā'shon-al-ē), adv. By gravitation, or in the manner of gravitation.

The sun's initial heat was generated by the collision of pieces of matter gravitationally attracted together from distant space.

See W. Thomson, Pop. Sci. Mo., XXXI, 30

gravitative (grav'itā-tiv), a. [< gravitate + -ive.] Of, pertaining to, or caused by gravitation; gravitating or tending to gravitate.

gravity (grav'it-ē), n.; pl. gravities (-tiz). [< G. gravitas = Dan. Sw. gravitet, < F. gravité = Sp. gravidad, gravidad = Pg. gravidade = It. gravità, < L. gravitas (-t-), weight, heaviness, pressure, < gravis, heavy: see grave.] 1. Weight, as contradistinguished from mass; precisely, the downward acceleration of terrestrial bodies, due to the gravitation of the earth modified by the centrifugal force due to its rotation on its axis. The amount of this acceleration is about 32.1 inches (82.5 centimeters) per second at the sea-level and the equator, while at the pole it is 32.1 inches. Gravity is a little less on mountains than at the sea-level, in the proportion of a diminution of one thousandth part at every two miles of elevation. There are also other slight variations of gravity, from which the figure of the globe (which see) can be calculated. Generally speaking, gravity is in excess where the radius vector of the globe is in excess of that of the mean spheroid. [The words gravity and gravitation have been more or less confounded; but the most careful writers use gravitation for the attracting force, and gravity for the terrestrial phenomenon of weight or downward acceleration which has for its two components the gravitation and the centrifugal force. The centrifugal force at the equator is $\frac{1}{16}$ of gravity. It is everywhere exerted in the plane of the meridian at right angles to the direction of the celestial pole. The direction of gravitation in middle latitudes is inclined about 11.5 to the radius of the earth.]

None need a guide, by sure attraction led,

And strong impulsive gravity of head.

Pope, Dunciad, iv, 761

2. Solemnity of deportment or character; seriousness of demeanor; seriousness.

Great (also there, for gravity renowned, Dryden.

When the French stage came to be reformed by Cardinal Mazarin, those long harangues were introduced to comply with the gravity of a churchman.

Dryden, Essay on Dram. Poesy.

His witticisms, and his tales of figures, constitute the only parts of his work which can be perused with perfect gravity.

Macaulay, Sadler's Ref. Refuted.

We listen in public with the gravity of augurs to what we smile at when we meet a brother adept.

Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 379.

3. Importance; significance; dignity.

Length therefore is a thing which the gravitas and weight of such actions (graves) doth require.

Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v.

They derive an importance from . . . the gravity of the place where they were uttered.

Burke.

4. In acoustics, the state of being low in pitch; opposed to acuteness.—Acceleration of gravity. See acceleration (b).—Center of gravity. See center (c).—Gravity cell, or gravity battery. In elect. See cell, n.

—Line of direction of gravity. The line drawn through the center of gravity of a body in the direction in which gravity tends to move it; the line along which the center of gravity would begin to fall if the body were free.

—Specific gravity. The ratio of the weight of a given bulk of any substance to that of a standard substance. The substance taken as the standard is water for solids and liquids, air or hydrogen for gases. The weights of bodies being proportional to their masses, it follows that the specific gravity of a body is equivalent to its relative density, and the term density has nearly displaced specific gravity in scientific works. As long as the term specific gravity was in use, water at 62° F. was taken as the standard in England; when the term density is used, water at its maximum density (4° C. or 39.2° F.) is the standard. If great accuracy is required, corrections must be made for temperature and for the buoyancy of the air. Thus, if we take equal bulks of water, silver, and platinum, and weigh them, the silver will be found to be 10.4 times and the platinum 21.4 times heavier than the water; and reckoning the specific gravity of water as unity, the specific gravity of silver is said to be 10.4, and that of platinum 21.4. A common method of obtaining the specific gravity of solids is to weigh the body in air, then in pure distilled water, and divide the weight in air by the loss of weight in water, the result being the specific gravity of the body. There are, however, numerous other ways of obtaining this relative . . . as by the use of the pycnometer, the hydrometer (which see), etc. See gravity solution.

The specific gravity of a body is the ratio of its density to that of some standard substance, generally water.

Clark Maxwell, Heat, p. 61.

Specific-gravity beads or bulbs. Small hollow spheres, usually of glass, used in determining the specific gravity of a liquid. If a number of them, each having its specific gravity marked on it, be thrown into the liquid, that one which just floats gives the required specific gravity, the others either sinking or floating. Specific-gravity bottle or flask, a pycnometer.

gravity-railroad (grav'it-ē-rail), n. A railroad in which the cars move down an inclined plane, or a series of inclined planes, under the action of gravity alone. Such roads are often arranged so that the loaded cars in descending pull a train of empty cars up to the summit, or the empty cars may be hauled up by steam power.

gravity-solution (grav'it-ē-solū'shon), n. A solution used by lithologists for separating from one another the different minerals of which rocks are composed, by taking advantage of their differences of specific gravity. The method is analogous to the process of ore dressing, which is a separation of minerals differing in specific gravity in the large way, the fluid used being water. The essential difference, however, is that the fluid used by the lithologist is varied in specific gravity by dilution, to put the desired conditions, while the water of course, remains always the same when used by the ore dresser. The idea of using a gravity solution in lithological research originated with Thomsen in 1879. The fluid which he used was a solution of the bulble of mercury in bulble of petroleum, having a density of 2.77 at 5° F. Several other solutions having a higher specific gravity have since that time been used. See specific gravity, under gravity.

Same as black-top. Gray sour, in mining, an operation following the lime-bell, consisting in washing the pieces in dilute hydrochloric acid. The insoluble lime-scales are decomposed, and the lime is removed, other metallic oxides present are dissolved out, and the brown coloring matter is leached. Also called lime-sour. Gray squirrel, whale, wolf, etc. See the name.

II. n. 1. A gray color or tint; a color having little or no distinctive hue (chroma) and only moderate luminosity. If only about 5 per cent. of the light is reflected, the surface is called black; if as much as 10 per cent. is reflected, it is called white. Pure gray has a slightly bluish appearance, owing to contrast with the color of brightness which enters into the sensation produced by white light. A small admixture of red with gray light makes the modified gray called ashes of rose. A small amount of green light mixed with gray is not noticed, and if the mixture is placed in juxtaposition with pure gray, the latter looks pinkish by contrast, while the former appears of a neutral tint. A larger admixture of green will give a meadow-gray (which properly requires the green to be yellowish), a still larger amount an olive gray, and still more a sage green. The effect of the admixture of violet blue is singularly dependent upon the shade of gray; if it is quite light, the result is a lilac gray or full lilac, or may be even too purple for lilac, while if the gray is darker a French gray or slate-gray results, which needs the addition of red to give lavender gray, although the latter appears bluer than lilac gray. If yellow is mixed with gray, the result is a stone gray or drab gray, or in larger admixture a full drab. All these remarks refer to mixtures of lights, not to mixtures of pigments, the effects of which depend upon the special absorption-spectra of the pigments, and can only be ascertained by direct experiment.

Thou must be stript out of thy stately garments;
And as thou comest to me,
In homely gray, instead of silk and purple pall,
Now all thy clothing must be.

Patience Gravel (Child's Ballads, IV, 212).

No tree in all the grove but has its charms,
Though each its hue peculiar; paler some,
And of a wannish gray, the willow such.

Cowper, Task, I, 300.

grave (gräv), n. pl. See graves.

grebe (grēb), n. [< F. grebe, formerly grebe, grebe (> G. dial. grebe), a grebe, so named, it seems, with reference to the crested species, cf. Bret. kyben = Corn. cyben = W. cyben, a crest, a tuft of feathers on a bird's head; W. cybell, a cock's comb.] A bird of the family Podiceps (which see for technical characters); a diving bird, related to the loons or divers, but pinnated or lobed-footed, with a rudimentary tail, naked lores, and, in most species, a crest on the head. There are upward of 20 species of several genera, distributed all over the world. They inhabit chiefly fresh waters, and are most expert divers and swimmers, but move on land very awkwardly, owing to the backward position of the legs. Because of the apparent absence of a tail, and the singular tuft or crest, the aspect of these birds is peculiar. They nest in ponds, lakes, and rivers, generally building among reeds, rushes, and lay several, usually 6 or 8, elliptical white-colored eggs. One of the best known species is the common dabchick of Europe, Podiceps podiceps. The grebe known in America as the dabchick is Podiceps podiceps. The largest is the spear-billed or western grebe, Aechmophorus occidens, peculiar to western North America. (See cut occidens.) The great grebe is Aechmophorus. The crested species of the old world, Podiceps cristatus. The European red-necked grebe is Podiceps erythrorhynchos, which, P. holboellii also inhabits North America. The sea variety of hooded grebe, P. cornutus, is common in most parts of the northern hemisphere. The sea grebe, P. aethiops, is a variety of P. cristatus. Some of the grebes reach 2 feet in length, but most of them are much smaller. The plumage of the breast is of a beautiful silvery luster and shiny texture, and is much used in ornamenting ladies' hats, for neckties, etc. Grebes have many local popular names, as sea-bird, dabchick, delapper, dipper, dipper, delapper, and water-skipper.

grebe-cloth (grēb' klōth), n. A cotton cloth having a hairy or downy surface on one side. Compare Canton flannel (under flannel) and muslin.

II. n. 1. A native of Greece; a Greek.

Was this fair face the cause, quoth she,
Why the Grecians sacked Troy?
Shak., All's Well, i. 3 (song).

2. In the New Testament, a Hellenizing Jew. (The word occurs in Acts vi. 1, ix. 29, and xi. 20, in the authorized version, translating Ἑλληνιστῆς, a Hellenist. In the revised version the word is rendered "Grecian Jew" in the first two places and "Greeks" in the last.)

There arose a murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected in the daily ministrations.
Acts vi. 1.

3. One versed in or studying the Greek language.

The qualities I require (in a tutor) are that he be a good Grecism (grē' shān-izm), n. [< F. Grecisme = Sp. Greco, Græcia; < ML. Græcismus, < L. Græcus, Greek; see Greek. Cf. Grecer.] An idiom of the Greek language. Also Grecisms, and rarely Grecisms.

Virgil, to deviate from the common form of words, would not make use of temper, but express, in his first verse, and everywhere else abundantly with metaphors, Grecisms, and circumlocutions, to give his verse the greatest pomp,
and preserve it from sinking into a plebeian style.
Addison, On Virgil's Georgics.

The Jewish historian Origen . . . discovered in it (the ring of Homer) not only Græcisms, but distinct imitations of the idiom of Theocritus.

II. trans. 1. To render Greek; impart Greek characteristics to. — 2. To translate into Greek; as, Melancthon (black earth) is the Grecized name of Philip Schwarzfeld.

Also Grecize, Grecizer, Grecizes.

Greco-Bactrian (grē' kō-lak' trān), a. Of or pertaining to a kingdom ruled by a Greek dynasty in Bactria, central Asia, in the third and second centuries B. C. It was an offshoot from the Seleucid kingdom of Syria. Also spelled Græco-Bactrian.

This empire was overrun by invaders from Central Asia after the destruction of the Greco-Bactrian power in these regions.
The Academy, Jan. 21, 1899, p. 30.

Greco-Roman (grē' kō-rō-mān), a. Of or pertaining to both Greece and Rome, as the Latin civilization after it had become modified by contact with the higher civilization of Greece, and specifically the art cultivated under Roman domination, almost exclusively by Greek artists. Greco-Roman art can be traced back as far as the fifth century B. C., but did not acquire extensive development before the Roman application of Greek language in the second century. Greek sculpture of Rome retains the general characteristics of the later Hellenistic work see Platonism, and Roman sculpture became most naturally a national school in its portraits and historical relief under the empire. Greco-Roman art is most original in its decoration, which assumes an exuberant and fantastic variety foreign to the pure Greek tradition of moderation and sobriety, while retaining much of the Greek elegance.

Latin, the accepted storehouse from which the boy takes needed by modern science are generally derived. Together with Latin, the Greek language has long formed the accepted basis of a scholarly education. Modern interest in its study dates from the fifteenth century, when the Turkish invasions upon the Byzantine empire, and particularly the conquest of Constantinople in 1453, caused the permanent settlement of many Greek scholars in Italy, and hence impinged profoundly the development of the Renaissance. (See Renaissance.) Greek is divided chronologically, in the etymology of this work, into Greek proper (Gr.), ancient or classical Greek to about the year A. D. 300; late Greek (LGr.) from that time till about A. D. 600; middle Greek (MGr.), till about A. D. 1400; and modern or new Greek (NGr.), since that date; these periods corresponding to similar periods of Latin. (See Latin.) Middle and New Greek are also called Romantic. Greek is usually printed in type imitated from the forms of letters used in the later manuscripts. The most ancient manuscripts and the inscriptions exhibit only the capital or uncial forms, without accents and without separation of words. The small letters are comparatively modern. Since it is the only language printed in this dictionary in other than Roman letters, the Greek alphabet, with the Roman equivalents, is here given.

She was speaking French, which, of course, was Greek to the lady. The Century, XXXII, 364.

4. A cunning knave; a rogue; an adventurer. [Allusive, or more slang.]

I prithee, foolish Greek, depart from me;
There's money for thee, if you tarry longer,
I shall give worse payment. Shak., T. N., iv, 1.

He was an adventurer, a passer, a blackleg, a regular Greek. Thackeray, Newcomes, xxxvi.

5. In entom., the English equivalent of Achæna, a name given by Linnaeus to certain long-winged butterflies of his group Eques, most of which are now included in the genus Papilio. They were distinguished from the Tropus by not having crimson spots on the wings and breast. See Trojan. As mark, as a Greek. See Merry Greek - Merry Greek, a jolly fellow; jolly, jesting person; in allusion to the fact that careless temper is ascribed to the Greeks, and usually with reference to the proverb "as merry as a Greek," which was confused with a similar proverb, "as merry as a pig," of different origin see grip.

Now I want to you, I think Helen loves him better than Paris.

Yes, then she's a merry Greek indeed. Shak., T. and C., i, 2.

A true Trojan, and a mad merry prig, though no Greek. Barn. Jour. (1823), i, 54. (Screw.)

II. a. Of or pertaining to Greece or the Greeks; Grecian; Hellenic. Greek art, the art developed in ancient Greek lands, and of which the artists of Athens were the highest exponents. It was early modified by the imitation of foreign models, chiefly Oriental and Egyptian, and reached its highest perfection in the fifth century B. C. Among its salient qualities are originality, vigor, truth, wise moderation, and self-restraint, together with the overmastering love of beauty and hatred of excess, the delicacy of perception and cult of pure intelligence, but anterior to the Greek race, from which, however, a keen appreciation of the practical is never absent. The progress of Greek art can most conveniently be followed in the minor art of vase painting. The most ancient Greek pottery, that of Minerva (Troia) presents no obvious Greek character. The retained ware of the island of Thera, which was safely dated as earlier than 1500 B. C., shows in its decoration the awakening of the Greek spirit, which becomes more and more accentuated, and at the same time shows the effects of foreign influences, in the oldest vases of other Grecian islands, of Mycenæ, Corinth, and Athens. Vase-painting was finally abandoned about 850 A. C. A few Sarcophagi, from vases that can be clearly dated, are given to indicate the general course and tendency of Greek art. Other illustrations, referring to all departments of this art, will be found throughout this work. See Mythology (sculpture), Architecture, Decorative Art (Tessellated), Hellenic, marbles (Klæra and Perga).

some), Phidias, vases (Greek), etc. (a) Greek painting, from the time in antiquity of such artists as Polygnotus, Zeuxis, Apelles, Parrhasius, cannot have been behind its fellow-arts; but all the originals have perished, and the materials for study in clude little more than the pale reflections afforded by Pompeian and other Roman wall paintings, by some frescoed tombs in Italy, Greece, and the Crimea, and by one or two painted sarcophagi of Etruria and of Asia Minor.

(b) Greek sculpture developed comparatively late, but by the beginning of the fifth century B. C. it had gained a position on a par with that of architecture. The earliest Greek sculpture was in wood (see wood), all examples of it have perished. Later, this was imitated in stone (of which an Attic statue of the seventh century B. C., found at Delphi, is a good specimen) and in bronze, the first use of the latter material being ascribed to the artists of Chios and Samos. In the latter half of the sixth century were produced the beautiful painted archaic statues which, until they were unearthed during the last decade, remained buried on the Athenian Acropolis from the time of their abandonment during the Persian wars. (See archaic.) The Agostino marble (see Agostino) of the beginning of the fifth century mark the last period of the archaic. The remainder of the fifth century was the period of Phidias (see Phidias) and the artists grouped about him, as Myron and Polycleitus. In the following century majesty and the lofty ideal gave place to a more individual and intimate quality (see Attic), of which Praxiteles was the most prominent exponent, with Kephisodorus and others followed by Lysippos. The abrupt, and charming Greek vase-cottles, the so-called high on Greek sculpture skin to that supplied by painted vases for the use of Greek painting (see archaic), the face of the Greeks was developed from a primitive rounded forehead in wood or rough stone, with a sloped roof to shed the rain. As fully developed it implies the presence of columns, both as supports and for ornament, in a system of intercolumniation, one columnar, or very slight resistance to unsupported weight. The arch was known to the Greeks but was practically never employed by them where it could be seen. The most typical production of Greek art in the perspective, or temple of which the cella is entirely enclosed by ranges of columns supporting a low gabled roof. The normal plan of such buildings is rectangular, the length being slightly more than twice the breadth, but the exigencies of special use or of the nature of the site often led to variations from the type, as in the Erechtheion at Athens, and circular buildings of various kinds were not uncommon. The idea of the column was probably imported from Egypt (see column) and from Assyria (see column), as were many motives of decoration, as the lotus, and the acanthus, which was derived in direct line, though transformed from the Italian acanthus. (For the Greek orders, the Doric, Ionic, and Corinthian, see columns.) Greek art is feature turned to highest expression in stone, particularly in marble. The structures in wood have, of course, perished, and must be studied from allusions in literature and inscriptions, from certain details of stone buildings, and such remains as the terra-cotta copies of some Athenian temples, of which the edicules in wood have disappeared, and in vase-paintings. Naked bricks are rare or not found in truly Greek work, unless possibly in prehistoric times. Much wood, however, was used in unburned brick, even at a comparatively late date, and considerable remains of such work have been found at Olympia, at Eleusis, and elsewhere. The marble buildings of the period of perfection, simple and imposing in their general composition, were enriched with statuary and sculptured ornament and brilliantly colored (see polychrome in architecture, under polychrome) to bring out all their details with full effect in the clear air of the Mediterranean. Until Macedonian preponderance had vitiated the ideas of independent Greece, all this magnificence of art was reserved for the glory of the gods and the public buildings of the state. Luxury in private life was not approved, private houses being small and plain. See ecclesiastical (Greek). Greek Church, the church of the countries formerly comprised in the Greek, Greek Roman, or Eastern (Roman) Empire, and of countries evangelized from it, as Russia; the church, or group of local and national oriental churches, in communion or doctrinal agreement with the Greek patriarchal see of Constantinople. It is also called the Eastern Church, in distinction from the Western, the Latin, or Roman Catholic Church. The full official title of the Greek Church is the Holy Orthodox Catholic Apostolic Oriental Church (see Catholic, a, 3 (c)). The official Orthodox is that most frequently used for the Greek or Eastern Church. The estrangement between the Greek and Latin churches, culminating finally in the Great Schism, stands historically in close connection with the division of the Roman Empire into an Eastern and a Western Empire, with the growing power of the see of the new Roman capital, Constantinople or New Rome, the increasing rivalry between the see of Old Rome and that of New Rome, the insertion by the Latin Church of the filioque (see Filioque) in the Nicene Creed, the question of the ecclesiastical allegiance of the Bulgarians, and of the papal supremacy. Eastern Myriarchy, including Greece, with the chief see at Thessalonica, which had belonged to the Roman patriarchate, remained with the Eastern Church. Before the ninth century there had been temporary suspensions of communion between the Roman Church and the East. The Great Schism began, however, in the latter part of the ninth century, the principal doctrinal difficulty relating to the Filioque. The immediate occasion of suspension of communion was the intrusion by the emperor Michael III, in A. D. 843, of the learned Photius into the see of Constantinople instead of Ignatius, at that time patriarch. The Roman see asserted jurisdiction in the matter as possessing supreme power, and mutual charges of false doctrine and excommunication followed; but Photius was finally acknowledged at home as patriarch. The final division was that between Pope Leo IX, and the patriarch Michael Cerularius, in A. D. 1054, since which time Roman Catholics regard the Greeks or Easterns as cut off from the Catholic Church, the Greeks, on the other hand, claim that they have remained faithful to the catholic creed and ancient usages. The Greek Church is the dominant form of Christianity in the Kingdom of Greece, the archipelago with the opposite coast and Cyprus, in European Turkey among both Slavs and Greeks, in part of Austria and Hungary, throughout the Russian empire, and in Rumania, Bulgaria, Servia, and Montenegro. In most of these countries the church authorities are independent of the patriarch at Constantinople. It acknowledges the first seven ecumenical councils. The doctrine of the Greek and that of the Western Church with regard to the Trinity, apart from the question of the filioque and double procession, and that with regard to the person of Christ, are the same. Baptism is regularly conferred on infants with three immersions. Confirmation follows immediately upon baptism. Communion is given in both kinds, and to infants as well as adults. The offices of bishop, priest, and deacon are regarded as the three "necessary degrees" of orders. The highest officers of the church are the four patriarchs of Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, and Jerusalem, and the Russian Holy Synod, presided over by the Patriarch of Moscow. The ordinary business of the church is managed by the synod, but their votes must have been previously sought, and they cannot remove. Only the monastic clergy are advanced to the episcopate and other offices. The liturgical language is not absolutely fixed. In Greek speaking communities it is Greek, in Slavonic communities, and Russian, but the ancient language known as Ecclesiastical Slavonic, or Old Bulgarian (Greek cross, see cross). Greek embroidery, lace work, and vesting upon a background of pieces of colored cloth (see textile) and embroidery the edges of these and the background between them with chain stitch and other ornamental stitches. pure green is a simple one. This sensation cannot be excited alone in a normal eye; but the spectrum of wavelength 0.526 micron, if the light be very much reduced, probably excites the sensation with some approach to purity. It is a common error to suppose that green is a mixture of blue and yellow. This notion arises from the observation that a mixture of blue and yellow pigments generally gives a green. The reason of this is that the color of pigments not having a true metallic appearance is that of the light which they transmit; the blue pigment cuts off the yellow rays and the yellow pigment the blue rays, but certain green rays are transmitted by both. But blue and yellow lights thrown together upon the retina excite a sensation nearly that of white, which may incline slightly to green or to pink according to the tones of the colors mixed. Green under a high illumination appears more yellowish (the sensation being affected by the color of brightness), and darkened appears more bluish; this is especially true of emerald and yellowish green; (above all, of olive green), and hardly holds for turquoise-green. The terms and phrases below are the common names for hues of green, some of them being also names of pigments.

greenhornism (grén'hörn-izm), n. [Greenhorn + -ism.] The character or actions of a greenhorn. [Rare.]

He executed the greenhornism which made him feign a passion and then get caught where he meant to capture. Dorach, Young Luke, IV. 6.

greenhouse (grén'hóus), n. 1. A building, the roof and one or more sides of which consist of glazed frames, constructed for the purpose of cultivating exotic plants which are too tender to endure the open air during the colder parts of the year. The temperature is generally kept up by means of artificial heat. It differs from a conservatory chiefly in that it is built to receive plants growing in pots and tubs, while those contained in a conservatory, in the proper use of the term, are grown in borders and beds, but in common use the latter name is applied to a greenhouse attached to a dwelling especially for the display of plants. Who loves a garden loves a greenhouse too. . . . There blooms exotic beauty, warm and snug, While the winds whistle, and the snows descend. Comper, Task, III. 363.

2. In ceram., a house in which green or unfired pottery is dried before being submitted to the fire of the kiln.

The [shades] were being finished from the hands of the potter is brought by him upon boards to the green house, so called from its being the receptacle for ware in the "green" or unfired state. Proc. Inst., III. 614.

Greenian (grén'ni-an), a. [Green (see def.) + -ian.] Pertaining to the English mathematician George Green (1793-1841). Greenian function, a function of a class introduced by Green. These functions satisfy Laplace's equation and serve to represent the distribution of electricity on an ellipsoid.

greening (grén'ing), n. [Verbal n. of green.] 1. A becoming or growing green.

greenly (grén'li), adv. [Green + -ly.] 1. With a green color; newly; freshly; immaturely.—2. Unskillfully; in the manner of a green hand.

And we have done but greenly In hugger mugger to enter him. Shak, Hamlet, IV. 5.

He, greenly credulous, shall withdraw thus. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, v. 2.

I must assist you, I reckon, for you are setting very greenly about this gear. Scott, Monastery, xxx.

greenness (grén'ness), n. [Green + -ness.] 1. The quality of being green in color; verdantness; also, verdure.

This country seemed very goodly and delightful to all of us, in regard of the greenness and beauty thereof. Hakluyt's Voyages, III. 380.

Massive trunks of oak, veritable worlds of mossy vegetation in themselves, with tufts of green velvet nestled away in their bark, and sheets of greenness carpeting their sides. H. B. Shaw, Oldtown, p. 605.

Beneath these broad acres of rain-drenched greenness a thousand honored dead lay buried. H. James, Jr., Pan. Pilgrim, p. 27.

2. The state of being green, in any of the derived senses.

If any art I have, or hidden skill, May cure thee of disease or fever ill, Whose grief or greenness to another's eye May seem unpardonable of remedy, I dare yet undertake it. Planchet, Faithful Shepherdess, II. 2.

This prince, while yet the errors in his nature were excused by the greenness of his youth, which took all the fault upon itself, loved a private man's wife. See P. Sidney.

Capitain Browne was a tall, upright, broad man, a little on the shady side of life, but carrying his age with a cheerful greenness. H. B. Shaw, Oldtown, p. 61.

greenockite (grén'ók-it), n. [After its discoverer, Lord Greenock, eldest son of Earl Cathcart.] Native cadmium sulphide, a rare mineral occurring in hemimorphic hexagonal crystals of a honey-yellow or orange-yellow color, and also as a pulverulent incrustation on sphalerite.

greenovite (grén'óv-it), n. [So called after George Bellas Greenough, an English geologist died about 1855.] A manganese variety of titanite or sphene having a rose-red color, found at St. Marcel in Piedmont.

greenroom (grén'róom), n. [So called from having been originally painted or decorated in green.] 1. A room near the stage in a theater, to which actors retire during the intervals of their parts in the play.

The Friday came; and for the first time in my life I found myself in the greenroom of a theatre. It was literally a green room, into which light was admitted by a small like a cucumber frame at one end of it. It was matted, and round the walls ran a bench covered with velvet green stuff, whereupon the dramatic persons deposited themselves until called to go on the stage: a looking glass under the skylight, and a large bottle of water and a tumbler on the chimney-piece completed the furniture of this classic apartment. T. Hook, Gilbert Gurney, I. 31.

2. A room in a warehouse where new or green cloth is received from the weaving factory.

3. A room in a medical college where the faculty meet to hold examinations, etc. [Cant.]

green-rot (grén'rot), n. A condition of wood in which the tissues have a characteristic verdigris-green color. A fungus, Fomes versicolor, commonly accompanies it, but is not certainly known to be the cause.

green-salted (grén'sál'ted), a. Salted down without tanning; said of hides.

Green called [hides] are those that have been salted and are thoroughly cured. C. T. Davis, Leather, p. 54.

greensand (grén'sand), n. A sandstone containing grains of glauconite, which impart to it a greenish hue. There are two sets of strata in England to which this name is applied; one is above the gulf, the other below it. The greensand is also a formation of importance in the United States. It is extensively mined in New Jersey for fertilizing purposes, and commonly called marl. The glauconite is a silicate of iron and potash, and this mineral forms sometimes as much as 50 per cent. of the greensand, the rest being ordinary sand.

The chambers of the Foraminifera become filled by a green silicate of iron and alumina, which penetrates into even their finest tubuli, and takes exquisite and almost indestructible casts of their interior. The calcareous matter is then dissolved away, and the casts are left, constituting a fine dark sand, which, when crushed, leaves a greenish mark, and is known as green-sand. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 81.

greensauce (grén'sás), n. 1. The field-sorrel, Rumex Acetosella.—2. Sour dock or sorrel mixed with vinegar and sugar. Hallivell, [Prov. Eng.]

green-sea (grén'sé'), n. A mass of water shipped on a vessel's deck, so considerable as to present a greenish appearance.

of Europe, related to the redshank, yellowshank, and other totanine birds: so called from the color of its legs. Also called green-legged horreman, whistling snipe, and cinereous godwit.

greensick (grén'sik), a. Affected by or having greensickness; chlorotic.

Those greensick lovers of chaff. Mrs. Ritchie, Book of Sibylla.

greensickness (grén'sik'ness), n. An anemic disease of young women, giving a greenish tinge to the complexion; chlorosis.

I'd have thee rise with the sun, walk, dance, or hunt, . . . And thou shalt not, with eating chalk or coals, Leather and oatmeal, and such other trash, Fall into the green sickness. Planchet (and another), Elder Brother, l. 1.

green-sloke (grén'slók), n. Same as green-laver.

green-snake (grén'snak), n. One of two different kinds of grass-snakes of the United States, of a bright-green color, uniform over all the upper parts (changing to bluish in spirals), and of very slender form: (a) Liasis normalis (formerly Chironomus or Oxybelis normalis), with smooth scales, inhabiting the Middle and Northern States; (b) Cyclophis carolinensis (formerly Leptophis carolinensis), with carinate scales, inhabiting the Middle and Southern States. They are both pretty creatures and quite harmless. See out under Cyclophis.

green-stall (grén'stál), n. A stall on which greens are exposed for sale.

Green's theorem. See theorem.

greenstone (grén'stón), n. [First used in G. (greenstone): so called from a tinge of green in the color.] 1. Any one of various rocks, of eruptive origin, in general older than the Tertiary, crystalline-granular in texture, and of a dark-greenish color. The essential ingredients of the rocks formerly classed under the name of greenstones are trichite feldspar and hornblende, with which are associated various other minerals in greater or less quantity, and especially chlorite, mica, magnetite, and apatite. The name is abandoned by some lithologists, but retained by ovoid, or elongated bodies, sometimes with a segmented construction, and occasionally one end of the body beaded with an epitheca bearing curved horny spines. They have no pseudopodia in the adult state, the body ordinarily presenting a demarcated layer of ectosome, and a more fluid inner substance or endosome containing an endoplast, but no contractile vacuole. Changes of form are effected by a power of contractility, and the animals are nourished by absorption of nutriment already prepared in the bodies of the animals in which they are parasitic, as insects, worms, and crustaceans. Reproduction is effected, with or without conjugation, by a process of operation in which an encysted individual becomes filled with a mass of peculiar bodies known as pseudo-mucella, which disengage themselves and form contents sometimes called fluidulae or drapanae. All Gregarinids are parasites, but none, as far as known, infect vertebrates. The family name applies (1) to all Gregarinids, (2) especially to the septate Gregarinids, for which Dicystidae is also used. Numerous genera have been proposed, but few can be considered established, as Monocystis of the single-celled division, with Gregarina proper and Haplophryxus of the septate division. These two divisions correspond, respectively, to Monocystiden or Haplophryxiden, and to Dicystiden or Septatiden, when the family is ranked as a class or sub-class named Dicystidae or Gregarinidae.

Gregarinidae (grĕ-gă-rĭ-nĭd'ē), n. pl. [NL., < Gregarina + -idae.] The Gregarinidae, in the widest sense, regarded as a subclass of Sporozoa, divided into Haplophryx and Septatida, or simple-celled and septate Gregarinids. See Gregarinidae, Gregarinidae.

gregarious (grĕ-gă-rĭ-us), a. [= F. gégair = Sp. It. gregario, gregarious, < L. gregarius, of a flock, common, < grex (grĕ-g), a flock, herd, drove, swarm; supposed to be redupl. from the root seen in tr. aggre, collect, assemble; see aggre.] 1. Disposed to live in flocks or herds; inclined to gather in companies; not preferring solitude or restricted companionship; as, cat-tle and sheep are gregarious animals; men are naturally gregarious.

No birds of prey are gregarious.

Ray, Works of Creation, I.

Man, a gregarious creature, born to fly Where he finds the trackings of the herd can spy.

Crabbe, The Borough.

Hating the lonely crowd where we gregarious men Lead lonely lives. Longf., Under the Willows.

2. In bot., growing in open clusters, not matted together.

gregariously (grĕ-gă-rĭ-us-ly), adv. In a gregarious manner; in a herd, flock, or company.

gregariousness (grĕ-gă-rĭ-us-ness), n. The character of being gregarious, or of living in flocks or herds; disposition to herd or associate together.

Many mammals are gregarious, and gregariousness implies insipient power of combination and of mutual protection. But gregariousness differs from sociality by the absence of definitive family relationships, except during the brief and intermittent periods in which there are help- less offspring to be protected.

J. Fisher, Cosmic Philos., II. 341.

grege, grogget, v. t. Non grege.

grege (grĕ-g), n. and n. [= F. grege, only in one grege, raw silk, < It. (grĕ-g) grege, raw (silk). greppia, fem. of greppo, rough, raw; origin uncertain.] I. a. Raw; only in the term grege silk.

II. n. Raw silk; a trade-name.

Five greges are becoming more and more reduced.

F. S. Com. Rep., No. III (1865), p. 125.

gregot, greggot (grĕ-g'ō), n. [Also grecco, grecco.] (Sp. Grego, Greco, Pg. Grego, It. Greco, Greek; see Greek, and cf. grege.) A short jacket or cloak made of thick coarse cloth with a hood attached, worn by the Greeks and others in the Levant.

Gregorian (grĕ-gō-rĭ-an), a. and n. [= F. gré-gorien = Sp. Pg. It. gregoriano (cf. D. gregorianisch = G. gregorianisch = Dan. Sw. gregoriansk), < L. Gregorius, < Gr. Γρηγόριος, Gregory, a proper name (equiv. to L. Vigiliantius), lit. Hood (1808), p. 40.

grogat, n. pl. [< F. grogas, brochets; see grog and gallgrogas.] Same as gallgrogas, I. Cat-fish.

His brochets . . . were not deep and large enough, but round snout cannibals grogas.

Cruikshank, tr. of Rabelais, II. 6.

greisen (grĕ-an), n. [G. greisen, cleave, split.] A rock of the granitic family, having a crystalline-granular texture, and chiefly made up of quartz and mica. Its relations to granite are such as to lead lithologists to believe that it is an altered form of that rock, in which the felspar has been replaced by quartz, at the same time that various accessory minerals, very characteristic of the greisen, have made their appearance. These accessory minerals are topaz, fluor spar, rutile, tourmaline, and others, and especially cassiterite (tin of tin) which is almost invariably found associated with this rock. Greisen is a very characteristic rock of the Erzgebirge and of its thimble. See granite.

greit (grĕt), v. t. A Scotch spelling of greit. greith, a. n., and v. An obsolete spelling of greit.

grelot (grĕ-lō'), n. [F. a bell.] A small globular bell; a sleigh-bell.

Round their waists they (devils in a Christmas mystery) wore belts hung with grelots and bells.

Harper's Mag., LXVIII. 73.

gremet, gremet, n. and v. See gremet, gremet.

gremial (grĕ-mĭ-əl), a. and n. [= F. gremial = OF. gremial = Sp. Pg. gremial, a lap-cloth; cf. It. gremiale, apron, < L. gremialis, lit. of the bosom or lap, but applied to trees or shrubs growing in a cluster from the stump; ML. noun, gremiale, a lap-cloth, < gremium (< It. gremio, also grado = Sp. Pg. gremio), the lap, bosom.] I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to the lap or bosom. Rare. [Rare.]—2. Interior; pertaining to the internal affairs of a corporation or society, or confined to its members. [Rare.]

It was the rule for the prior to be elected from among the inmates of the monastery. In other words, the election was to be gremial.

South and Chesnut, Dict. Christ. Antiq., II. 1712.

II. n. 1. A bosom friend, a confidant. Imp. Dict.—2. One who is removing nurture or education; specifically, a resident at a university.

A great Prolate in the Church did bear him no great good will for mutual animosities between them, whilst Gremials in the University. Fuller, Worthies, I. 100, Kent.

If he be master of arts, and not a gremial, he may take the degree of B. D. per saltum.

Wall, Senate House Ceremonies (1728), p. 121.

3. Ecclia, a piece of cloth, originally a towel of fine linen, later a piece of silk or damask and often adorned with gold or silver lace, placed on the lap of a bishop, during mass or ordination, to protect his vestments from the consecrated oil. A similar vestment used by the Pope is called a subinctorium.

gremiale (grĕ-mĭ-ā'le), n.; pl. gremiales (-lĭ-ē). [ML.: see gremial.] Same as gremial, 2.

The lap-cloth, which, under the name of gremiale, is still employed in our ritual, though its use be limited to the bishop, who has it spread out over his knees while he is seated at High Mass. Hook, Church of our Fathers, I. 208.

grent, v. A variant of grin. Row, of the Rose.

grenade (grĕ-nād'), n. [Formerly sometimes granade (also granado, granado, after the Sp. form); < OF. granade, a ball of wildfire, F. grenade, a grenade, < Sp. Pg. granada = It. granata (< D. granaat = G. Dan. Sw. granat), a granade (cf. OF. (pome) granate, granade, etc., F. granade = Sp. Pg. granada, It. = It. granata, m., a pomegranate), lit. something containing grains or seeds, from the adj., Sp. Pg. granado = It. granato, < L. granatus, grained, containing seeds or grains, < granum, grain, seed; see grain.] Cf. granule, granule, granule, and pomegranate.] An explosive missile of any kind, usually smaller than a bomb or bombshell, and not discharged from a cannon, but thrown by hand or by a shovel or fork. Grenades have been made of glass, wood, bronze or gun metal, and many other materials, even paper, and of many different forms, even conical, a form which has the advantage that the grenades will thrown can rest securely on the edge of a rampart or a vessel's gunwale, etc., but the more modern practice is to use cast iron and the spherical form only. See hand-grenade.

Placed at St. Philip Warwick's; thence to Court, where I had discourse with the King about an invention of glass granades.

Kedley, Diary, Feb. 4, 1684.

On this answer, the French began to cast granades into the fort, and had succeeded in producing considerable effect, when the two mortars which they used, being of wood, burst, and wounded those who worked them.

Guyard, Hist. Louisiana, I. 460.

Rampart-grenade, a grenade used by the defenders of a beleaguered place when the besieger is near the rampart. It is thrown from the parapet or rolled down the outer slope of the rampart.

grenadier (grĕ-nā-dĕr'), n. [Also formerly granadier, = D. G. Sw. grenadier = Dan. grenader, < F. grenadier, < Sp. granadero = Pg. granadero = It. granatiere, < Sp. granada, It. granata, a grenade; see grenade.] 1. Originally, a soldier who threw hand-grenades. Soldiers of long service and acknowledged bravery were selected for this duty. They were the foremost in assaults. At first there were only a few grenadiers in each regiment, but companies of grenadiers were formed in France in 1674, and in England a few years later.

When hand grenades went out of general use, the name was still retained for the company, the members of which wore of great stature and were distinguished by a particular uniform, as for instance the high bearskin cap. In the British and French armies the grenadier company was the first of each battalion. Now the companies of a battalion or a regiment are equalized in size and other matters, and the title in the British army remains only to the regiment of Grenadier Guards.

We will not go like to dragoons, Nor yet will we like grenadiers.

Bell's Archer (Child's Ballads, VI. 94).

Now were brought into service a new sort of soldiers called Grenadiers, who were dextrous in throwing hand grenades, every one having a pouch full.

Kedley, Diary, June 20, 1678.

2. A South African weaver-bird, Ploceus (Pyromelano) ovus, so called from its brilliant red and black plumage.—3. A fish, Marronus fabri or M. rufescens, found in deep water of the North Atlantic. Also called rattail.—4. pl. The family Marronidae.

grenadilla (grĕ-nā-dĭ-lĭ-ā), n. Same as granadilla. grenadin (grĕ-nā-dĭn'), n. [< F. grenade, a pomegranate (see grenade), < grĕ-n.] A coal-tar color, containing impure magenta, obtained as a by-product from the mother-liquors in the manufacture of magenta.

mental in character, an arrangement of bars forming a decorative design.

The intercommunication on either side must have been closed by a grille in total.

C. I. Newton, Art and Architect., p. 341.

(b) A grating serving as a gate, also, a metallic grating closing a small opening, as in a door, allowing an inmate to answer a knock and examine applicants for admission without opening the door.

At the further end of the court is the grille, a square opening adjacent to the main wall.

Encyc. Brit., XXIII, 170.

(c) The large grating separating a convent parlor into two parts, visitors being allowed only on one side of it.

2. In pisciculture, an apparatus for holding fish-eggs during incubation, consisting of a rectangular wooden frame 20 in. long and from 7 to 8 inches wide, into which are fastened small cylindrical glass tubes, closely placed. When in use, these grilles are placed in a series of rectangular boxes (a grille in each box) arranged in flights, so that the water passes readily from the highest through the intervening ones to the lowest. The water enters from the top near one corner, and after passing through the box goes out through the spout at the diagonally opposite corner.

grille (gril'ly), n. [F., grille, a grating; see grill.] In lace, having a background consisting of bars or bridges crossing open spaces; also said of the background itself.

grill-room (gril'rum), n. A restaurant or lunch-room where chops, steaks, etc., are grilled to order.

The cooks, who filled the waiters' orders as in an English grill room, were dressed from head to foot in white linen, and wore square white caps.

The Century, XXXVI, 10.

grill (gril'i), v. t. [Extended from grill.] To grill; broil. See grill.

Butcher men a crisped piece
Of all their crushed and broken members,
Then have them grilled on the embers.
S. Butler, Hudibras, III, II, 100.

grilse (gril's), n. [See also grilse; cf. Ir. grilse, a kind of fish.] A young salmon on its first return to the river from the sea.

The grilse is more slender than the salmon, the tail more forked, the scales more easily removed, and the top of the head and of the fins is not quite so black.

St. Nicholas, XIII, 741.

grim (grim), a., compar. grimmer, superl. grimmiest. Also called grinders' phthisis, grinders' rot.—spring-grinder, a grinding-tool used in a lathe, especially for turning holes in metal which do not extend entirely through the object. It consists of two rods connected at one end by a spring, like that of a sheep-screw, and each carrying at the other end a small cubical casting of lead. The spring causes the tool to maintain a constant pressure upon the sides of the hole. The grinding is accomplished by means of emery.

The spring grinder . . . is used for grinding out short holes in works that admit of being mounted in the lathe.

O. Byrne, Artisan's Handbook, p. 162.

To take a grinder to apply the left thumb to the tip of the nose, and revolve the right hand round it; a gesture of derision or contempt. [Italian.]

Here Mr. Jackson smiled once more upon the company, and, applying his left thumb to the tip of his nose, worked a visionary coffee mill with his right hand; thereby performing a very graceful piece of pantomime (then much in vogue, but now, unhappily, almost obsolete) which was familiarly denominated taking a grinder.

Dickens, Pickwick, xxi.

grindery (grin'der-i), n. [grindery (-er-i).] 1. A place where knives, etc., are ground.—2. groundly (ground'li), adv. [Early mod. E. also groundely, groundlike; < ground + -ly.] As to the basis or foundation; with regard to fundamentals or essentials; in principle; solidly; not superficially; carefully.

And the more groundly it is searched, the precher's things are found in it. Trundle, Works, p. 30.

A man groundly learned.

Ascham, The Schoolmaster, p. 111.

After you had read and groundly pondered the contents of my letters than to you addressed. State Papers, 1. 62.

ground-mail (ground'mail), n. Duty paid for the right of having a corpse interred in a churchyard. [Scotch.]

"Reasonable charges!" said the sexton, "ou, there's ground mail, and bull after (though the bell's broken now doubt), and the list, and my day's work, and my bit fee, and some brandy and yill to the digger." Scott, Bride of Lammermoor, xiv.

ground-mass (ground'mass), n. In geol., the compact or finely granular part of the rock, through which the more or less distinctly recognizable crystals are disseminated, and which is sometimes called the matrix or base. Examined with the aid of the microscope, the ground mass may be found to be entirely glassy, or it may be made up of the various products of devitrification, more or less completely developed according to the stage reached in this process.

ground-mold (ground'mold), n. In eng'neer'g, a template or frame by which the surface of the ground is brought to a required form, as in terracing or embanking. E. H. Knight.

ground-nest (ground'nest), n. A nest made on the ground.

The herald lark

Left his ground nest, high towering to devery
The morn's approach, and greet her with his song.

Milton, P. R., II. 260.

ground-net (ground'net), n. A trawl-net or drag-net; a trammel.

ground-niche (ground'niche), n. In arch., a niche whose base or seat is on a level with the ground or floor.

groundnut (ground'nut), n. 1. The ground-peanut, or peanut, the pod of Arachis hypogaea. See Arachis.

Groundnut oil is an excellent edible oil, largely used as a substitute for olive oil. Encyc. Brit., XVII. 746.

2. The earthen, the tuberos root of Banum flexuosum, an umbelliferous plant of Europe. — 3. The Apus tuberosa of the United States, a leguminous climber with small tuberos roots.

Bambusa groundnut, the pod of Vanandea subteranea, resembling the peanut. Dwarf groundnut, the dwarf ginseng, Aralia trifolia, which has a round tuberos root.

ground-oak (ground'ök), n. A sapling of oak.

Then Robin Hood stoop to a thickset of trees,
And chose him a staff of ground oak.
Robin Hood and Little John (Child's Ballads, v. 218).

ground-parrakeet (ground'par-ä-kët), n. A parrakeet of the genus Pezoparus or of the genus Carpodacus.

ground-pea (ground'pë), n. The peanut. Spotswan's Gazetteer.

ground-pearl (ground'përl), n. A scale insect of the Balanus, Margarodes formicarius, living under ground and acquiring a calcareous shell-like covering, somewhat like that of a mollusk. It is used for making necklaces by the natives, whence the name.

ground-pig (ground'pig), n. 1. Same as ground-hog. 2. — 2. Same as ground-rat.

ground-pigeon (ground'piz'gän), n. Same as ground-dove (b).

ground-pine (ground'pin), n. 1. A tufted, spreading herbaceous plant of the genus Aspid. (L. Chamaerops), natural order Labiata, formerly called among the germanders, and said to be called pine from its resinous smell. — 2. One of several species of Lycopodium, or club-moss, especially L. chinensis, the common club-moss, a long creeping evergreen plant found in healthy pastures and dry woods in Great Britain and North America. It is also called creeping-pine and ground-pine. Another species is L. complanatum, a graceful cret-shaped evergreen plant, about a foot high, growing in moist woods in North America.

ground-plan (ground'plan), n. 1. In arch., the representation of the divisions of a building at the level of the surface of the ground; commonly, the plan of the lowest story above the cellar, though this is usually raised above the surface of the ground. Also ground-plan. Hence — 2. A first, general, or fundamental plan of any kind.

ground-plane (ground'plan), n. The horizontal plane of projection in perspective drawing.

ground-plate (ground'plat), n. 1. In building, the lowest horizontal timber of a frame, which receives the other timbers of a wooden erection; the groundsill. — 2. In railway eng'g, a bed-plate used under sleepers or ties in some kinds of ground. E. H. Knight. — 3. An earth-plate or piece of metal sunk in the ground to form the connection "to earth" from a telegraph-wire. Gas- or water-mains are often made to serve as ground-plates.

ground-plot (ground'plot), n. 1. The ground on which a building is placed.

Where canst thou find any small ground-plot for hope to dwell upon? See P. Sidney, Arcadia, II.

2. Same as ground-plan, 1.

Men skilled in architecture might do what we did not attempt; they might probably form an exact ground-plot of this venerable edifice. Johnson, Letter to Western Isles.

ground-plum (ground'plum), n. A leguminous plant, Astragalus caryocarpus, found in the upper valley of the Mississippi. Its thick corky pods resemble a plum in shape and size.

ground-rat (ground'rat), n. An African rodent of the genus Aulacodus, A. aculeatus. Also called ground-pig. See cut under Aulacodus.

ground-rent (ground'rent), n. The rent at which land is let for building purposes. It is a common practice of owners of land in large cities who wish a permanent fixed income without care of buildings and frequent changes of tenants to let vacant land on long leases, with covenants for renewal, and with stipulations that the lessee shall build, and may remove the building before the end of the term, or shall allow the lessor to take it at an appraisal.

In country houses, at a distance from any great town, where there is plenty of ground to choose upon, the ground-rent is scarce anything.

Adam Smith, Wealth of Nations, v. 2.

ground-robin (ground'rob'in), n. Same as chewink.

ground-roller (ground'ró'ler), n. One of the Brachypteractines, a group of rollers of the family Coccyidae, peculiar to Madagascar; so called from their terrestrial habits.

ground-room (ground'róm), n. A room on the ground floor. Narra.

The innkeeper introduced him into a ground room, expressing a great deal of joy in so luckily meeting with his old friend. Great Britain's Housewife (1712), III.

ground-rope (ground'rop), n. The rope along the bottom of a trawl-net.

ground-scraper (ground'skrä'për), n. The South African ground-thrush, (Geocichla flint-scraper), formerly called Turdus strepitans. See Andrew Smith.

ground-scratcher (ground'skrach'er), n. In lyth's system (1849), specifically, one of the Euorae or gallinaceous birds.

ground-sea (ground'së), n. A swell of the sea occurring in a calm, and with no other indication of a previous gale. The sea rises in huge billows and dashes against the shore with a loud roaring. The swell is probably due to the gales called "norther" which evidently rise and rage from off the capes of Virginia round to the Gulf of Mexico; it is also doubtless sometimes caused by distant earthquakes.

groundsel (ground'sel), n. [Formerly also groundswell, groundswell; See dial. grunde-swell, grunde-swell, and even gruning-swell; early mod. E. also gruncswell, gruncswell (Levin, 1570); < ME. grunde-swell, grunde-swell, < AS. grunde-swell, -swelge, -swelge, appar. meaning 'ground-swallower', alluding to its abundant growth, as if < grund, ground, + -swelge, swallow, but really a perversion of earlier gundeswige, in earliest form gundes-swell, lit. 'pus-swallower', < grund, pus, + -swelge, swallow; see grund and swallow.] The Senecio vulgaris, an annual European weed belonging to the Compositæ, adventitious in the northeastern United States. It is most common and chiefly acrid, and is used as a domestic remedy for various ailments. The name is sometimes applied generally to species of the genus Senecio.

groundsel n. See groundsel.

groundsel-tree (ground'sel-trë), n. The Baccharis halimifolia, a maritime shrub of the United States, a composite with leaves somewhat resembling those of the groundsel. It is sometimes cultivated for ornament. See cut under Baccharis.

ground-shark (ground'shärk), n. The sleeper-shark or gurry-shark, Somniosus microcephalus.

groundsill, groundsel (ground'sil, -sel), n. (Early mod. E. also groundyill, gruncel, ggun- longest duration of the period in which all three were made up of sandstones, dikes, flagging-stones, etc., developed to great thickness, and containing Paradoxides, Leptæda, and other forms characteristic of the primeval fauna of the Hudson River group. In geol., a division of the Lower Silurian series, as instituted by the New York geological survey. The rocks of this series are shales in New York, but become calcareous to the west. It is an important group, rich in fossil remains, and especially well developed in the vicinity of Cincinnati. Some parts of the Hudson River shales contain a large amount of bituminous or combustible matter. The term Cincinnati group is used by some geologists as the equivalent of Hudson River group. Hyperfuchian group, in math., a group of transformations in four-dimensional space by each of which a fundamental sphere is transformed into itself. Icosahedral group, in math., the group of rotations by which an icosahedron is brought to coincide with itself; the group of eleven permutations of 5 things. Infinite group, in math., a group consisting of an infinity of different substitutions. Isomorphism groups, in math., (a) As usually understood, groups such that the operations of the first correspond each to one or several operations of the other, so that a product of operations in the one corresponds to the product of the corresponding operations in the other. (b) In Cayley's extended sense, groups which can be separated each into the same number of subgroups, so that a substitution of a subgroup in the one can be so coordinated to one of the other that products shall correspond to products. Laramie group, in geol., a division of the Cretaceous, as developed in the Rocky Mountain region, of importance on account of its thickness and because it contains a considerable quantity of lignite, hence also called the Lignitic group. It is allied to the Cretaceous in its dimensions, and to the Tertiary in its fossil plants, and is thus intermediate in its life between the Cretaceous and the Tertiary. (Dana.) Linear group, in math., a group of substitutions each of which replaces the element x , y , z , etc., by $ax + by + cz$, where a, b, c are linear functions of x, y, z . Metacyclic group, in math., a group of permutations given by advancing the element in the place a to the place $a + 1$ (mod n). Octahedral group, in math., the group of 24 rotations by which the octahedron is brought back into coincidence with its position at starting; the group of 24 permutations of 4 things. Portage group, in geol., a portion of the Tertiary series, so called by the geologists of the New York survey because largely developed near Portage in that State. The Portage and Chemung groups together make up the Chemung period of Dana. The rocks of this period are chiefly sandstones and shales, and contain remains of seaweeds and of many land plants, as well as of marine animals, especially of lamellibranchs and brachiopods. Potential group, in math., same as antipotenential group, except that

$$f(x, y, z) = g(x, y, z), \text{ etc.}$$

Primitive group of the n th class, in math., one in which every substitution except 1 changes n letters at least. Quadratic group, in math., a group consisting of quaternions and three rotations through 180° about three several or diagonal axes. Quaternions group, in math., a set of quaternions whose products and powers are members of the set. Simple group, in math., one containing no self-conjugate subgroup. Tetrahedral group, in math., the group of 12 rotations by which a tetrahedron is brought back into coincidence with its initial position; the group of even permutations of 4 things. Transitive group, in math., a group by some substitution of which any element can be brought to any place. A group is called doubly transitive, or a transitive if any set of 2, 3, n elements can be brought to any places. Wenlock group, in geol., the name of a division of the Upper Silurian as developed in Wales and the adjoining counties of England. It is made up of limestones and shales, is very rich in fossil remains, especially brachiopods, gastropods, corals, and trilobites. In geological age it is the representative of the Niagara limestone and shale of American geologists.

group (grôp), v. [g, grouper = G. gruppen, gruppieren = Dan. gruppere = Sw. gruppera, C. F. grouper, group; from the noun.] I. trans. To form into a group or into groups; arrange in a group or in groups; separate into groups; commonly with reference to the special mutual relation of the things grouped, to classification, or to some special design or purpose, as artistic effect.

The difficulty lies in drawing and disposing, or, as the painters term it, in grouping such a multitude of different objects. Prior

Here the supreme art of the designer consists in disposing his ground and objects into an entire landscape, and grouping them. . . In so easy a manner that the careless observer . . . discovers no art in the combination. Rev. Hard, Chivalry and Romance, viii.

[They] group the party in their proper places at the altar. Dickens, Dombey and Son, xxi.

II. intrans. To fall into combination or arrangement; form a group or part of a group; used chiefly with reference to artistic effect.

Saint Nicolas with its great bell tower, grouped well with the smaller church and smaller tower of a neighbouring Benedictine house. E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 16.

group (grôp), n. and v. See group.

grouper (grôp'er), n. [Appar. an E. accom. of grouper, q. v.] A serranoid fish of the genus Epinephelus or Micropogonias. The red grouper is E. morio, of a brownish color sprinkled with gray, red-dish below, the fins partly edged with blue. It is common on the southern Atlantic and Gulf coasts of the United States, attains a weight of 40 pounds, and is a good market fish. The black grouper is E. nigricans. It shares the name grouper with some other species. It inhabits the Gulf of Mexico and extends northward to South Carolina, and is found of 300 pounds weight. Another grouper is E. cap- olus, commonly called cabrilla. E. drummond hayi, of the Gulf coast, is known as hind and john-paw. Also spelled grouper.

When taken from the water, the grouper is remarkably tenacious of life, and will live several hours.

Quoted in Stand. Nat. Hist., III, 224.

Nassau grouper. Same as hander?

grouping (grô'ping), n. The act, process, or result of arranging in a group; relative arrangement or disposition, as of figures in a painting, persons on a stage or in a dance, incidents in a story, etc.

Logic in its widest sense is grouping. The laws of grouping are the general tendencies of things and the general tendencies of thought.

G. H. Lewes, Probs. of Life and Mind, I, 1, § 60.

Rocks, islets, walls, and towers come out in new and varied groupings, but there is still no one prominent object. E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 224.

We cannot safely content ourselves with fanciful groupings or imaginary drawing of character and situation.

Stubbs, Medieval and Modern Hist., p. 47.

group-spring (grôp'spring), n. A spiral spring for cars formed of a nest of springs acting as one; called two-, three-, or four-group spring, according to the number in the nest.

grouse (grôus), n. [Formerly also grouse (18th century), gronus (1668), grones (1531); possibly a false king, evolved (after the assumed analogy of house, mouse, wing, of ice, mice) from the prob. older though later-appearing word grice, a grouse, appar. a particular use of grice, grice, grice (also spelled grice), gray, after OE. grice, grische, a moorhen, the hen of the grice [grice, ed. 1673] or moorhen; grice, grice, the ordinary or gray partridge, grice, grice, the warbling (a ravenous bird).] (Ogilby), E. purgische, a shrike. The OE. grische, gray, is appar. a var. (form) of gris, form. gris (ML. griseus), gray; see grice.] 1. The Scotch ptarmigan, moorhen, or red-grouse, Tetrao Lagopus scoticus, a British gallinaceous

Scotch Ptarmigan or Grouse (Lagopus scoticus)

bird with feathered feet. It is a local modification or insular race of the common ptarmigan of Europe. Hence—2. Some bird like the above; any bird of the family Tetraonidae and subfamily Tetraoninae. These birds all have the feet and nasal base more or less completely feathered, being thus distinguished from pheasants, partridges, quails, etc. There are numerous species of several genera, all confined to the northern hemisphere. The largest is the European wood grouse or cock of the woods, Tetrao urogallus. (See cock.) The next in size is the American sage grouse or cock of the plains, Centrocercus urophasianus. The black grouse is Lagopus tetrix of Europe. The ruffed grouse is several species of Bonasa, as the European hazel-grouse, B. betulus, and the American, B. umbellata. Notable American forms are the sharp-tailed grouse, Pedicularis phoeniceus, and the pin-tailed grouse, Cupulonia canadensis, both are known as prairie-grouse. The snow grouse are simply species of ptarmigan inhabiting boreal and alpine regions, and mostly turning pure white in winter; such are the willow ptarmigan, Lagopus albus, the rock ptarmigan, L. lagopus, and the Rocky Mountain ptarmigan, L. leucurus.

3. In the widest sense, as a collective plural, the grouse family, Tetraonidae. In this sense the word includes various partridges and related birds. Canada grouse, (Canada or Dendragapus canadensis). Also called prairie-grouse, black grouse, wood grouse, sage grouse, sage partridge, camp-partridge, red grouse, prairie grouse, prairie partridge, heath-hen, and formerly black and spotted heath-cock (Bonasa, 1758). Sent under Canada. Dusky grouse, the most common name of Canada or Dendragapus canadensis, a large dark slate-colored arboreal grouse of mountainous parts of western North America. Also called blue grouse, gray grouse, and pine-grouse. It runs into several local varieties, one of which is called Richardson's grouse or black- tailed grouse. It is the largest of the American tetraonines excepting the sage-cock, the male attaining a length of 2 feet and an extent of wings of 30 inches. It is chiefly found in the coniferous belt. Pinnated grouse, the prairie-hen, Cupulonia cupus or Tympanuchus americanus, so called from the winglets on each side of the neck. See prairie-hen, and sent under Cupulonia. Ruffed grouse, Bonasa umbellata. Also called ruffed heath-cock (Edwards, 1758), brown, gray, or red ruffed grouse, drumming grouse or partridge, tippet grouse, shoulder-hoof grouse, birch-partridge; also simply partridge in the northern and middle portions of its range, and universally pheasant from Pennsylvania southward. See sent under Bonasa. Sage-grouse, the sage-cock or cock of the plains, Centrocercus urophasianus, so called because characteristic of the sage brush regions of western North America. See sent under Centrocercus. Sharp-tailed grouse, any grouse of the genus Pedicularis.

Dusky Grouse (Dendragapus canadensis)

grouse (grôus), v. t.; pret. and pp. groused, ppr. grousing. [grouse, n.] To hunt or shoot grouse. [Hare.]

grouse-pigeon (grôus'paj-on), n. A name of the sand-grouse or sand-pigeons of the family Pterocloridae. Columba.

grouser (grôu'ser), n. [Origin unknown.] A temporary pile or heavy iron shod pole driven into the bottom of a stream to hold a drilling or dredging boat or other floating object in position.

To overcome the motion of the waves, and the current, they are provided with a submarine contrivance (quads, grouser), which reaches to the bottom of the river.

Exeter, Mod. High Explosives, p. 399.

grout (grout), n. [ME. grout, grout, grout, grout, ground malt, the first infusion preparatory to brewing, also a kind of ale or mead. AS. grut, grout (in first sense), = MD. gruet (as in ME.) = Norw. grut, sediment, grunda; cf. MHG. gruz, G. graus = Sw. dial. grut, sand, gravel. grit; see grit. The sense of "mead" is not found in ME., but occurs in AS. (tr. L. pollen or polix) and in MD., and is reflected in ML. gratum, grudum, mead, dim. gratellum, grullum, gruel (> ult. E. gruel, q. v.), the same as gratum, grudum, grout for brewing. Allied to AS. gryt, grytt, pl. grytta, grytte, coarse meal, grits; see grit and grout, n.] 1. Coarse meal; pollard; in the plural, grouts; also, porridge made of such meal. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

The grouts and pieces of the corns remaining, by fanning in a flatter or in the wind, away the bran, they boyle it or 4 houres with water.

Capt. John Smith, Wotica, I, 127.

We were well received by them [some Curdees in Shaw-look], and they brought us a sort of grout and sour milk. Pococke, Description of the East, II, I, 159.

As for grout, it is an old Danish dish; and it is claimed as an honour to the ancient family of Leigh to carry a dish of it up at the coronation.

W. King, Art of Cookery, Int., v.

2. Wart when first prepared, and before it has begun to ferment. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

In Leicestershire, the liquor with malt infused for six or seven, before it is fully boiled, is called grout, and before it is turned up in the vessel is called wort.

Kennell, quoted in Halliwell.

3. Lees; grounds; dregs.

The ceilings were so fantastically clouded by smoke and dust, that old women might have told fortunes in them better than in grouts of tea. Dickens, Little Dorrit, v.

But wherefore should we turn the grout in a drained cup?

D. G. Rossetti, Dante at Verona.

4. Mud; dirt; filth.

The town dykes on every side, They were deep and full wide, Full of grut, so men might say.

Richard Core de Lion, I, 437.

grout (grout), n. and a. [Not found, in this sense, in ME. or AS., being a mod. use of grout; cf. grit, coarse sand, etc., as related to grit, coarse meal.] I. n. 1. A thin coarse mortar poured into the joints of masonry and brickwork.

A casing of stone outside, a foot and a half thick, also covered the rubble and grout work of Rufus.

Harper's Mag., LXIX, 437.

8. A finishing or setting coat of fine stuff for ceilings. J. H. Knight.

II. a. Made with or consisting of grout.—Grout wall, a foundation or cellar-wall formed of concrete and small stones, usually between two boards set on edge, which are removed and raised higher as the concrete hardens.

grout² (grout), v. t. [< grout¹, n.] To fill up or form with grout, as the joints or spaces between stones; use as grout.

If Roman, we should see here foundations of boulders bedded in concrete and then laid in courses, as well as ashlar facing to grouted insides.

Athenaeum, Jan. 21, 1888, p. 91.

The mortar being grouted into the joints and between the two contiguous courses of front and common brick.

C. T. Davis, Bricks and Tiles, p. 51.

grout³ (grout), v. t. [Perhaps 'root' in the mud; < grout¹, n., 4.] To bore with the snout, or dig up like a hog. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.] grout⁴ (grout), a. A dialectal form of grout, seen in composition, as in grouthead, groutnoll.

grout-ale (grout'ál), n. An alcoholic drink in the south of England, apparently a variety of beer made from malt which is burned or roasted very brown in an iron pot, and fermented by means of the barn which first rises in the keeve.

grouter (grout'er), n. A poor person who drinks only the wort of the last running. See grout¹, 2. Pegge. [Prov. Eng.] grouthead (grout'hed), n. [Also written grout-head; < grout⁴, a dial. form of grout, + head.] A stupid fellow; a blockhead. [Prov. Eng.]

Though sleeping one hour refresheth his song,

Yet trust not Hob Grouthead, for sleeping too long.

Tuam, May's Husbandry, xxxii.

groutheaded (grout'hed'ed), a. [< grouthead + -ed.] 1. Stupid.—2. Stupidly noisy. [Prov. Eng. in both senses.] grouting (grout'ing), n. [Verbaln. of grout², v.] In building: (a) The process of filling in or finishing with grout. (b) The grout thus filled in.

groutnoll (grout'noll), n. [Also groutnoll, groutnoll, groutnoll, groutnoll; < grout⁴, a dial. form of grout, + noll, head.] A stupid fellow; a blockhead; a grouthead.

Groutnoll, come to the king.

Penman and Casanova, p. 81. (Halliwel.)

That same dwarf is a pretty boy, but the square's a groutnoll. Boss and Fl, Knight of Burning Pestle, II.

grouty (grout'y), a. [< grout¹ + y.] 1. Thick, muddy, or druggish, as liquor.—2. Sulky; surly; cross. [Colloq.]

The sun, I sometimes think, is a little grouty at sea, especially at high noon, feeling that he wastes his beams on those fruitless furrows. Lowell, Fireside Travels, p. 163.

At home, the agreeable companion became at once a grouty grandson. J. T. Townbridge, Coupon Bonds, p. 201.

groutet, v. t. [Origin obscure.] To devour noisily. Darves.

Like swine under the oaks, we groutet up the alcornia, and smook about for more, and eat them too.

Sp. Sanckman, Works, III, 187.

grove¹ (grôv), n. [< ME. grove, < AS. gráf, a grove, a small wood; < ML. grava, graven, gravenum, a grove; connected perhaps with AS. gráf or gráf, a bush (L. dumex); < ME. green, early mod. E. greene, q. v. Usually derived from AS. gráf, E. gráf, dig, "a grove being orig. an alley cut out in a wood," or "a glade, or lane cut through trees"; but neither gráf nor gráf is derivable, phonetically, from grafan (the derivative from grafan, in this sort, being "gráf, E. greene), and there is no proof that grove ever had any meaning other than its present one.] A group of trees of indefinite extent, but not large enough to constitute a forest; especially, such a group considered as furnishing shade for avenues or walks: a small wood free from underbrush.

The hare . . . scorcheth pines to the grove

Owl and Nightingale, I, 390.

Grove, lytyl wode, lucas.

Prompt. Par., p. 215.

Groves whose rich from wept odorous gums and balm; Others, whose fruit, burnished with golden rind, hung amiable.

Milton, P. L., IV, 248.

The groves were God's first temples.

Bryant, Forest Hymn

[In the authorized version of the Bible grove is used erroneously.—(a) As a translation (following the Septuagint and Vulgate) of the Hebrew word ashrah (pl. ashrim). The revised version retains ashrah, inserting "a shrub" in the margin. It is now commonly understood as meaning a divinity or an image of a divinity worshiped by heathen, and as a variation in form of the name Ashtaroth.

And he (Menanah) set a groven image of the grove (revised version, "of Asherah") that he had made in the house. 1 Ki. xli. 7.

(b) As a translation of the Hebrew word ashrah in Gen. xxi. 33, rendered tree in 1 Sam. xxi. 15, and in both passages in the revised version (revised tree).—The groves of Academe, the shaded walks of the Academy at Athens, hence, any scene or course of philosophical or learned pursuits. See Academy.

Into this certainly not the least snugly sheltered arbour amongst the groves of Academe Pen now found his way.

Thackeray, Pendennis

3. Same as guaranty.

The English people have in their own hands a sufficient guarantee that in some points the aristocracy will conform to their wishes. Macaulay, Utilitarian Theory of Government.

guarantee (gar-an-té'), v. t. [Also written guaranty: see guarantee, n.] 1. To be warrant or surety for; secure as an effect or consequence; make sure or certain; warrant.

The intellectual activity of the acuter intellects, however feeble may be its immediate influence, is the great force which stimulates and guarantees every advance of the race. Leslie Stephen, Eng. Thought, I. 4 17.

The aim of Descartes was, no doubt, to find absolutely ultimate truth and certainty, as guaranteed by the reflective analysis of consciousness. Fitch, Introd. to Descartes's Method, p. lix.

2. In law, to bind one's self that the obligation of another shall be performed, or that something affecting the right of the person in whose favor the guaranty is made shall be done or shall occur. To guarantee a contract or an undertaking by another is to bind one's self that it shall be performed or carried out. To guarantee the collection of a debt is to bind one's self to pay it if it proves not collectible by ordinary means. To guarantee any subject of a business transaction is to make one's self legally answerable for its being exactly as represented: as, the seller guaranteed the quality of the goods; the carrier gave a bill of lading with the words "quantity guaranteed" (meaning that he stipulated to be answerable for the quantity specified, without any further question or dispute as to amount).

Public treaties made under the sanction, and some of them guaranteed by the sovereign powers of other nations. Burdett, On French Affairs.

3. To undertake to secure to another, as claims, rights, or possessions; pledge one's self to uphold or maintain.

By the treaty of alliance she guaranteed the Polish constitution in a secret article. Brougham.

The possession of Navarre, which had been guaranteed to them on their father's death.

Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., 1. 2.

The great problem is to guarantee individualism against the masses on the one hand, and the masses against the individual on the other. G. Ripley, in Frothingham, p. 147.

4. To engage to indemnify for or protect from injury: as, to guarantee one against loss.

guarantor (gar'an-tor), n. [OF. garantor, garantour, garantour, etc.; see warrantor, a doublet of guarantor.] One who makes a guaranty. [The following distinction between guarantor and surety may be noted: "A surety is generally a co-maker of the note, while the guarantor never is a maker, and the leading difference between the two is that the surety promises to meet an obligation which becomes his own immediately on the principal's failure to meet it, while the guarantor's promise is always to pay the debt of another." Daniel.] guaranty (gar'an-ti), n.: pl. guaranties (-tiz). (More correctly guaranty or garrantie (= D. garrante = Dan. Sw. garranti); (OF. garrantie, F. garrantie (= Fr. garrantie = Sp. garrantia = Pg. garrantia = It. garrantia), guaranty, warrantie, fem. of garrantie, pp. of garrantir, F. garrantir (= Fr. garrantir = Sp. Pg. garrantir = It. garrantire, garrantire; cf. D. garranderen = G. garranderen = Dan. garrantere = Sw. garrantere), warrant, (OF. garrant, garrant, warrant, a warrant; see warrant, and cf. warrantie, a doublet of guaranty.)

1. The act of warranting or securing; a warrant or surety.

The counselor . . . pledged a word, till then undoubted, to that he for which no guaranty but his could have won even a momentary credence. W. Phillips, Speeches, p. 74.

2. Specifically, in law, a separate, independent contract by which the guarantor undertakes, in writing, for a valuable consideration, to be answerable for the payment of some particular debt, or future debts, or the performance of some duty, in case of the failure of another person primarily liable to pay or perform. Cal. Brooke, On Collateral Securities. One may orally assume the debt of another, making himself a debtor immediately; but if the engagement is a mere guaranty of the obligation of another it must be in writing. [Guarantee is often used for guaranty, but in legal matters it is more correct to use guaranty for the name of the promise or contract of guaranty, guarantor for the maker of the guaranty, and guarantee for the person for whom the guaranty is made, and also for the act of performing the guaranty.]

The nature and soul of things takes on itself the guaranty of the fulfillment of every contract, so that honest service cannot come to loss. Ameron, Compensation.

Guaranties often extend to all the provisions of a treaty, and thus approach to the class of defensive alliances. Woolsey, Introd. to Inter. Law, § 106.

3. That which guarantees anything: a ground or basis of security: as, constitutional guaranties; his character is guaranty for his assertions; what guaranties have I that you will keep your word?—Continuing guaranty, an undertaking to be responsible for money to be advanced or goods to be sold to another from time to time in the future, a guaranty not exhausted by one transaction on the faith of it. Guaranty society, a joint-stock society formed for giving guaranties for the carrying out of engagements between other parties, or for making good losses occasioned by defections, on the payment of a premium. Treaties of guaranty, accessory stipulations, sometimes incorporated in the main instrument and sometimes appended to it, in which a third power promises to give aid to one of the treaty-making powers, in case certain specific rights all or part of those conveyed to him in the instrument are violated by the other party. Woolsey.

guaranty (gar'an-ti), v. t.; pret. and pp. guarantied, ppr. guarantying. [OF. guaranty, n. Cf. guarantee, v., and warranty, v.] Same as guarantee.

Before the Regulating Act of 1773, the allowances made by the Company to the Presidents of Bengal were abundantly sufficient to guaranty them against any thing like a necessity for giving in to that pernicious practice. Burke, Affairs of India.

guarapo (gwá-rá-pó), n. [Sp.] A drink made by fermenting the juice of the sugar-cane, or the refuse of the sugar-cane steeped in water.

guaruna (gwá-rá-ná), n. [S. Amer.] 1. A bird of the family Aramidæ, the scolopaceous courlan, Aramus scolopaceus.—2. A kind of ibis: now taken as a specific name of the white-faced glossy ibis, Ibis guaruna.

guard (gárd), v. [Formerly also gard; not in ME.; (OF. garder, to keep, ward, guard, have, preserve, etc., earlier warder, warder (F. garder = Fr. Sp. Pg. guardar = It. guardare), (MHG. warden, watch, = E. ward; see ward, v.)] I. trans. 1. To secure against injury of any kind in any manner; specifically, to protect by at-

Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, xxvi.

4. pl. In cricket, the pads or protectors worn on the legs to prevent injury from swiftly thrown balls.—5. Any part, appliance, or attachment designed or serving to protect or secure against harmful contact, injury, loss, or detriment of any kind. (a) That part of the hilt of a sword which protects the hand. Swords of antiquity and of the middle ages usually had the cross guard. In the sixteenth century, when the use of steel gloves was abandoned and the sword became the chief weapon of persons not armed for war, the guard was made more elaborate by the addition of the pas d'ane. Toward the end of that century the knuckle bow was added, some swords combining these two additions with two straight quillons of which the cross guard is formed. (See out under add.) Another guard of this epoch was the shell guard. The basket-hilt came into use toward the close of the sixteenth century and lasted through the seventeenth. (See out under elaborate.) In the second half of the seventeenth century the guard became more simple, and consisted chiefly of a knuckle bow, the shell of the guard when still used being reduced to a very small uncer-shaped plate surrounding the blade. The knuckle-bow guard continued in use throughout the eighteenth century in swords worn with civil costume, as well as in most of those used in war, and is still the guard of the modern sword and saber, some cavalry sabers and the like having this knuckle-guard expanded laterally as to approach the form of the basket-hilt. (b) In a firearm, the metal bow or other device which protects the trigger. Also called trigger-guard. (c) An ornamental lace, hem, or border; hence, in the plural, such ornaments in general.

And who reads Plutarch's either histories or philosophy, shall surely have trimmed both their garments with guards of fustian.

Mr. P. Sidney, Let. of Poems.

The body of your discourse is sometimes guarded with fragments, and the guards are but slightly heated on neither.

Shak., Much Ado, I. 1.

(d) A chain or cord for fastening a watch, brooch, or bracelet to the dress of the wearer. (e) Naut., the railing of the promenade-deck of a steamer, intended to prevent persons from falling overboard; also, a whitening of the deck of a side wheel steamer by a framework of strong timbers which curve out on each side to the paddle wheels, and protect them against collision with wharfs and boats. (f) A metal frame placed over a nut in an engine, to prevent it from being jarred off. (g) One of the fingers in a harpsichord in which the knives of the cutter bar move. (h) In bookbinding: (1) A reinforcing slip placed between the leaves of a blank book designed for an album or a scrap-book. (2) A narrow strip or narrow strips of paper sewed near the back of a book, made for inserted plates, with intent to keep the book flat, and prevent it from being thicker at the fore edge than at the back. (i) A tide lock between a dock and a river. (j) The guard-plate of the door that closes the opening of a cupola furnace. (k) A supplementary safety-rail of heavy timber placed beside a rail in a railway, at a switch or upon a bridge. (l) In a vehicle, a hood secured to the axle or bolster, and extending over the nave or hub, to protect the axle from mud. (m) A fender.

guddle (gud'l), v. t.; pret. and pp. guddled, pp. guddling. [Sc.; origin obscure.] 1. To botch; bungle; mangle; haggie.—2. To catch (fish) with the hands by groping under the stones or banks of a stream.

Gude (gud), a. and n. A Scotch form of good.

Gudemannian (gü-der-man'í-an), a. and n. 1. a. Pertaining to the German mathematician Christoph Gudermann (1798-1852).—Gudemannian amplitude of any quantity. See amplitude.—Gudemannian function. See II.

II. n. A mathematical function named from Gudermann. The Gudermannian is expressed by the letters gd put before the sign of the variable, and it is defined by the equation $x = \log \tan \left(\frac{\pi}{4} + \frac{gd x}{2} \right)$. The Gudermannian and tangent of the Gudermannian are also sometimes called Gudemannians, or Gudemannian functions.

gudgeon (gud'jon), n. and a. [Also dial. goodgeon, early mod. E. also gugon; < ME. gogon, gogone, < OF. gogon, F. gogon, dial. gogon, gogon = It. gubione, < L. gubius (-), another form of gubius, also colubus, < Gr. κυβισ, a kind of fish, a gudgeon, teneb.]. I. n. 1. A small European fresh-water fish, Stiopterus, of the family Cyprinidae. It is easily caught, and is used for bait. See cut under Stiopterus.

Tis true, no turbid dignity my beard,
But gudgeons, founders, what my Thamus affords.
Pope, Imit. of Horace, II. ll. 141.

Hence—2. A person easily cheated or imposed upon.

This he did to draw you in, like so many gudgeons, to swallow his false arguments.
Swift.

In vain at glory gudgeons Howell snaps.
W. Scott, Buxay and Pissel, II.

3. A bait; an allurement; something used to deceive or entrap a person; a cheat; a lie.

Do you think that James was so mad, as to gaze for gudgeons, or so vulgar as to sell his truth for a piece of Ireland?
Stoddard, in Holinshed's Hist. Ireland, an. 1552.

What fish so ever you be, you have made both me and Philantus to swallow a gudgeon.
Lytel, Ruyter, sig. R & b.

See-gudgeon, the black goby or rock fish.

II. a. Resembling a gudgeon; foolish; stupid.

This is a bait they often throw out to such gudgeon princes as will nibble at it.
Tom Brown, Works, I. 60.

gudgeon (gud'jon), v. t. [gudgeon, n., 2, 3.] To impose; cheat; impose on.

To be gudgeoned of the opportunities which had been given you.
Scott.

gudgeon (gud'jon), n. [ME. gogon (of a pulley), < OF. gogon, gogon, gogon, gogon, the pin of a pulley, the gudgeon of a wheel.] 1. The large pivot of the axis of a wheel. Hallwell.

—2. In mach., that part of a horizontal shaft or axle which turns in the collar. The word formerly denoted the part revolving in immediate contact with the bearings. It is now applied only when that part is separate from and independent of the body of the shaft. The form of the gudgeon and the mode of its insertion depend upon the form and material of the shaft.

3. In ship-building: (a) One of several clamps, of iron or other metal, bolted to the stern-post of a ship or boat for the rudder to hang on. There is a hole in each of them to receive a corresponding pin, bolted on the back of the rudder, which thus turns on upon hinges. There are generally 4, 5, or 6 gudgeons on a ship's stern post, according to her size.

The keel is his back, the planks are his ribs, the beams his bones, the pinial and gudgeons are his girdles and cartilages.
Howell, Parly of Bonata, p. 2.

(b) One of the notches of the crank-bits for receiving the metal bushes in which the spindle of a windlass travels. —4. A metallic pin used for securing together two blocks or slabs, as of stone or marble.

Joined together by clamps and gudgeons of iron and copper.
Workshop Receipts, 1st ser., p. 267.

5. A piece of wood used for roofing. Hallwell. [Prov. Eng.]

gug (gug), n. [CF. gug and gugon.] A musical instrument of the violin kind, having only two strings (of horse hair), and played like a violin-cello, formerly used in Rhineland.

He could play upon the gug, and upon the common violin, the mandolin and pathe tunes peculiar to the country.
Scott, Pirate, II.

gug (gug), n. [CF. gug, a rogue.] A rogue; a vagabond; a shaver.

Diligent search was made all the realm,
But my ingenious gug had got him out.
H. Noel Hunt, p. 232. (Norm.)

See Fiburnum and crabapple-tree.

Guldrian, Geldrian (gél'dri-an), a. and n. [G. M. Geldria, Gelderland; see guelder-rose.] 1. a. Of or pertaining to the province of Gelderland or Gelderland in the Netherlands, or to the former German duchy of that name.

Herman Kloet, a young and most determined Geldrian soldier, now commanded in the place (Nieuw). Motley, United Netherlands, II, 28.

II. n. A native or an inhabitant of Gelderland.

Guelf, Guelf (gwelf), n. [It. Guelfo, It. form of G. Welf, a personal name, C. OHG. MHG. welf, the young of dogs, and of wild animals, = AS. hwelp, E. whelp; see whelp.] A member of the papal and popular party of Italy in the middle ages, opposed to the Ghibellines, the imperial and aristocratic party. The Welfs (Guelphs) were a powerful family of Germany, so called from Welf I, in the time of Charlemagne. His descendants, several of whom bore the same name, held great possessions in Italy, through intermarriage, were at different times dukes of Bavaria, Saxony, and Carinthia, and founded the princely house of Brunswick and Hanover, to which the present royal family of England belongs. The names Welf and Waiblingen (Guelph and Ghibelline) are alleged to have been first used as war cries at the battle of Welfsbach in 1140, fought and lost by Welf VI, against the Hohenstaufen emperor Conrad III. The contest soon ceased in Germany, but was taken up on other grounds in Italy, over which the emperors claimed supreme power, and the names continued to designate bitterly antagonistic parties there till near the end of the fifteenth century. See Ghibelline.

Guelfic, Guelfic (gwelf'ik), a. [Guelf, Guelf, + -ic.] Of or pertaining to the Guelfs.

The family of Dante had been Guelfic, and we have seen him himself as a young man serving two campaigns against the Guelph party. Lowell, Dante.

Under George IV. . . was begun the great series of Monuments of German History, the editor of which was once wont to call himself Historiographer of the Most Serene Guelfic House.

Stubbs, Medieval and Modern Hist., p. 1.

Guelfic order, a Hanoverian order of knighthood founded in 1815 by George IV., then prince regent, and entitled the Royal Hanoverian Guelfic Order. It includes grand crosses, commanders, and knights, both civil and military.

(Hence its persons and gifts, and guerdones many. Marie Arthur (E. E. T. A.), I, 1799.

For recompense here I shall
You well reward, and golden guerdon give.
Spenser, V. Q., VI, ix, 82.

Death, in guerdon of her wrongs,
Gives her fame which never dies.
Shak., Much Ado, v. 2.

To be a knight companion of Spain a proudest order of chivalry was the guerdon . . . which Spain a monarch promised the murderer, if he should succeed.
Motley, Dutch Republic, III, 544.

guerdon (gér'don), v. t. [ME. guerdonen, guerdounen, guerdonen, OF. guerdonner, guerdonner, guerdonner, guerdonner, etc., = Pr. guerdon = It. guerdonare, guerdonare; from the noun.] To give a guerdon to; reward.

It is good to serve such a lord as guerdons his servant in such wise.

Book of the Knight of La Tour Landry, p. 4.

My lord protector will, I doubt it not,
See you well guerdon'd for these good deserts.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI, I, 4.

Him we gave a costly bribe
To guerdon alliance.
Tennyson, Princess, I.

guerdonable (gér'don-á-bl), a. [OF. guerdonnable, guerdonnable, guerdonner, reward; see guerdon, + -able.] Worthy of guerdon or reward.

Finding it as well guerdonable, as grateful, to publish their libels.
Nie G. Buck, Hist. Kich., III, p. 78.

guerdonless (gér'don-lés), a. [ME. guerdonless; guerdon + -less.] Without reward.

But love alas quite him so his wage
With cruel danger playnly at the last
That with the deth guerdonless he past.
Lydiate, Complaint of the Black Knight, l. 350.

guereza (gér'ez-á), n. [Native name.] 1. A large African monkey of the subfamily Semnopithecinae, the Colobus guereza, one of the showiest guerrilla, guerrilla (ge-ril'á), n. and a. [Sp. guerrilla, a skirmishing warfare, a body of skirmishers, a predatory band, dim. of guerra = F. guerre, war; see war.] 1. n. 1. War carried on by the repeated attacks of independent bands; a system of irregular warfare by means of raids and surprises. [Rarely used in English in this sense.]—2. Properly, a band of independent and generally predatory fighters in a war; now, more commonly, an individual member of such a band. The word was first brought into prominent use for the bands of peasants and shepherds who employed every means of annoying the French armies in Spain in 1808–14, often performing efficient service; and guerrillas were very active in the civil war in the subsequent civil wars. In the American civil war there were numerous guerrillas along the border lines, especially on the Confederate side.

He [Bismarck] never could bear of the exploits performed by franc-tireurs without flying into a rage, and he frequently complained that these guerrillas should have been captured instead of instantly shot down. Love, Bismarck, I, 160.

II. a. Of or pertaining to guerrillas: as, a guerrilla attack; a guerrilla band.

A most valuable corps of light troops had been formed, schooled in all the wild, irregular movements of guerrilla warfare. Frederick, Ferd. and Isa., II, 8.

With what success he carries on his guerrilla war after declining a general action with the main body of our argument our readers shall see. Macaulay, Badley's Red. Defeated.

guerrillist, guerrillist (ge-ril'ist), n. [guerrilla, guerrilla, + -ist.] A member of a guerrilla band; a guerrilla. Imp. Dict.

Not mortal like, ne like mankind thy voice doth sound, I
Some goddesses thou art. Phaer, Shak., I.

Holmes nameth it Manapia, but while he appropriates that name to this cille, neither doth he declare, nor I phrase. Stanhurst, in Holmes, Descrip. of Ireland, 88.

By the measure of my grief
I leave thy greatness to be guess'd.
Frederick, in Memoriam, huv.

2. To conjecture rightly; solve by a correct conjecture; form a true opinion of: as, to guess one's design; to guess a riddle.

Their hearts she guesses by their humble guise.
Spenser, F. Q., I, vi, 12.

Hiddle me this, and guess him if you can,
Who bears a nation in a single man?
Dryden, tr. of Juvénal's Satire, 28, 128.

3. In a loose use, to believe; think; suppose; imagine: with a clause for object.

There ben now fowls of such, I guess.
Gower, Conf. Amant, III, 180.

Afterward, if I should live in wed,
Thou'nt to repent it were to late, I guess.
Additional Poems, etc. (ed. Furnival), p. 68.

Harder I so playe a ravishing sweetness
That God, that maketh it of all and best,
Ne harder never better, as I guess.
Chaucer, Parlement of Foules, l. 100.

Not altogether: better far, I guess,
That we do make our entrance several ways.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI, II, 1.

Well, then, Mr. Trip, you have a pleasant sort of place here, I guess?
Meriden, School for Scandal, II, 1.

Guests at the centre of the Lake
That side retreat, we know about well, I guess
That the whole valley know them.

Wardsworth, Recesses.

[This use is especially English literature from the first appearance of the word; but it is now regarded as colloquial, and from its frequency in the United States, it is generally supposed by Englishmen to be an "Americanism." By an easy extension guess is used for think, believe, or suppose, even where the meaning is not at all conjectural, but positive, and it is then logically superfluous, serving merely to make the assertion less abrupt: as, I guess I will go now (that is, I am going now). I guess I know what I'm about (that is, I know what I am doing). In most instances this use probably arises from a desire to avoid positive assertion, or from some feeling of hesitation or uncertainty.]—Syn. L. Imagined, Presumed, etc. See conjecture.

II. intrins. To form a conjecture; judge or conclude from incomplete or uncertain evidence; commonly with at or by.

The Fort serves only to guess by; we must satisfy our selves fully out of the Authors that liv'd about those times.
Selden, Table Talk, p. 21.

The best prophet is naturally the best guesser, and the best guesser, he that is best versed and studied in the matter he guesses at; for he hath most signs to guess by.

Hobbes, Of Man, iii.

He is so much improved by continual writing that it is believed in a short time one may be able to read his letters, and find out his meaning without guessing.

Stark, Teller, No. 142.

guess¹ (ges), n. [Early mod. E. gess, ghesser, gess; < ME. gessen = MD. ghessen, D. gis = MIA. gisen, a guess; from the verb.] A notion gathered from mere probability or imperfect information; a judgment or conclusion without sufficient or determinate evidence; a conjecture; a surmise: as, to act by guess.

guizard, n. Same as guiscard.

guise, n. An obsolete spelling of guise.
Guizot (gi-zó'ti-á), n. [NL., named after F.
P. G. Guizot (1787-1874), a French statesman and historian.] A small genus of composite plants resembling the sunflower, natives of tropical Africa. G. Abnormis is cultivated in many parts of India for the small black seeds, known as Agave or reseril seeds, from which an oil used for lamps and as a condiment is expressed.

gula (gú-lá), n.; pl. gular (-lé). [L., the throat;
see gole, gullet, gules.] 1. In arch., a molding, more commonly called cyma reversa or ogee.
See cyma, l. — 2. In entom., a piece which in some insects forms the lower surface of the head, behind the mentum, and bounded laterally by the gonae or cheeks. It is conspicuous in the beetle, but in many other insects it appears to be entirely absent, or is represented only by the inferior cervical sclerites. Little conspicuous pieces in the membrane of the neck. See cut under mouth part.

The inferior cervical sclerites (of the cockroach) are two narrow transverse plates, one behind the other, in the middle line. They appear to represent the part called gula, which in many insects is a large plate confluent with the epidermum above and supporting the submentum anteriorly. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 347.

3. In ornith., the upper part of the throat of a bird, between the mentum and the jugulum.
See cut under bird.

The front of the neck has been needlessly subdivided, and these subdivisions vary with almost every writer. It suffices to call it throat (gula, or jugulum), remembering that the jugular portion is lowermost. . . . and the gula uppermost, running into chin along the under surface of the head. Cuvier, Key to N. A. Birds, p. 93.

gulanah (gú-lan'eh), n. [E. Ind.] The Tinospora cordifolia, a woody menispermaceous climber common in India and Ceylon. The roots and stems are bitter, and possess tonic, anti-periodic, and diuretic properties.

gular (gú-lár'), n. [< gula + -ar.] I.
a. 1. Pertaining to the gullet or throat in general; jugular; esophageal. — 2. Specifically, in zool., pertaining to the gula. Gular plates, in icth., one or two osseous laminae between the ramus of the lower jaw, occurring in certain fishes as Acipenser, Rh-ipichthys, Ceratodontidae. Gular pouch, the throat pouch common to all the steganopodous or totipalmate birds and found in a few others. It is most highly developed in the pelican, in which it hangs as a great bag under the bill and throat, capable of holding several quarts. See cut under pelican. — Gular sutures. Same as buccal sutures (which see, under buccal).

II. n. A gular plate or shield beneath the throat of a serpent or fish.

gulaundi (gú-lánd'), n. [< Leet. gulind, < gulr (= Sw. Dan. gul), yellow, + und (and) = Dan. Sw. and, a duck; see yellow, drake, not amare.] An aquatic fowl, apparently the merganser or goosander.

gulch¹ (gulch), v. t. [Also dial. gulpe; < ME. gulchen (gulchen = swallow greedily, gulchen = at, disgorge, eject; mod. E. dial. (unsubstituted) puke, swallow; appar. < Norw. gulka, disgorge, retch up, Sw. gulka, gulch. Cf. D. gulch, gredy, cf. also gulp.] To swallow greedily.
[Prov. Eng.]

gulch² (gulch), n. [< gulch¹, &] 1. A swallowing or devouring. — 2. A glutton; a fat, stupid fellow.

Then you'll know us, you'll see us then, you will, gulch.
B. J. Mann, Fortaster, III. 1.

You muddy gulch, dar st back me in the face, while mine eyes sparkle with revengful fire!
A. Brewer, Lingua, v. 16.

gulch³ (gulch), v. t. [Perhaps connected with gulch¹.] To fall heavily. [Prov. Eng.] gulch⁴ (gulch), n. [< gulch², &] A heavy fall.

[Prov. Eng.]

gulch⁵ (gulch), n. [Origin uncertain; perhaps connected with gulch². There appears to be no etymological connection with gulch¹.] 1. A gorge; a ravine; any narrow valley or ravine of small dimensions and steep sides. [Pacific States.]

The lower gulches, lined with aspens, in autumn show a streak of faded gold. The Century, XXXI. 61.

2. A long, narrow, deep depression of the sea bottom.

gulden, n. A Middle English form of gold.
gulden (gúl'den), n. [G. gulden, also gulden, florin, < E. gulden, golden; see gulden, golden, gulder.] 1. One of several gold coins formerly current in Germany from the fourteenth century, and in the Low Countries from the fifteenth century: the name was afterward applied to silver coins of Germany and the Netherlands. — 2. A former silver coin of Austria worth 1s. 8d. English, or about 40 cents; also a current silver coin of the kingdom of the Netherlands, of equal value. See cut in preceding column.

guldenhead (gúl'den-hed), n. [A dial. var. of goldenhead.] The common puffin, Fregata aethra. Montagu.

gule¹, n. [ME. gule, < OF. gule, gole, < L. gula throat, gullet, gluttony; see gole, gules.] 1.
The throat; the gullet. Darwin.

There are many throats so wide and gules so gluttonous in England that they can swallow down goodly Catholics. Sp. Golden, Tears of the Church, p. 24.

2. Gluttony.

This vice, whiche so oute of reale
Hath set us alle, is clepid gule.
Dower, MS. Rec. Antiqu., 124, l. 176. (Hullhead.)

gule², v. t. [< gule¹, &] In her., to give the color of gules to.

Achilles durst not look on Hector when He guled his armor in Greekish blood.
Haywood, Julius Britannicus (1609).

gule³, n. [ML. gula Augusti, F. la gule d'au-gust, la gule d'augst; appar. lit. 'the throat of August', i. e., the beginning (see gule, gule)

Shak., T. of A., iv. 3.

Full on this casement shone the wintry moon,
And threw warm gules on Madeline's fair breast.
Keats, Eve of St. Agnes.

gulf (gulf), n. [Formerly often gulph, sometimes goulfe (= D. golp, a wave, gulf, = G. golf, a bay); < OF. golfe, goulfe, a gulf whirlpool, F. golfe, a gulf (bay), a later form (after It. golfo, etc.) of OF. goulfr, F. golf fre, a gulf, abyss, pit, = Fr. Sp. Pg. It. golfo a gulf, bay, < MLr. golp, Gr. golp, the bottom lap, a deep hollow, a bay, a creek (cf. L. abn in similar senses; see abn).] 1. A large tract of water extending from the ocean or a sea into the land, following an indentation of the coast line: as, the Gulf of Mexico; the Gulf of Venice. A gulf is usually understood to be larger than a bay and smaller than a sea, but in many cases this distinction is not observed. Thus the Arabian sea on one side of the Indian peninsula is of nearly the same size and shape as the Bay of Bengal on the other, while the Bay of Biscay is many times larger than the Gulf of Mexico.

They (the Venetians) prohibiting all traffics elsewhere throughout the whole gulf. Sandys, Travels, p. 1.

2. An abyss; a chasm; a deep place in the earth: as, the gulf of Avernus.

Between us and you there is a great gulf fixed.
Luke xvi. 26.

A gulf profound as that Heronian bay Between Pangaea and Mount Caucas old,
Where armies whole have sunk.
Milton, P. L.,

The heavens between their fairy fleeces pale Saw'd all their mystic gulfs with floating stars.

Tennyson, Gardener's Daughter.

3. Something that engulfs or swallows, as the gullet, or a whirlpool; figuratively, misfortune.

Fast thou'nt rest in bosom of full Charybdis gulfs!
Tennyson, Pyndra's Answer to Tymetes.

England his approaches makes as fierce
As waters to the sucking of a gulf.

Shak., Hen V., II. 4.

A gulf of ruin, swallowing gold.
Tennyson, Sea Dreams.

4. A wide interval, as in station, education, and the like; as, the gulf that separates the higher and lower classes.—5. In Cambridge University, England, the place at the bottom of the list of passers where the names of those who have barely escaped being plucked in examination are written. These names are separated by a line from those of the students who have passed creditably.

The ranks of our curatehood are supplied by youths whom at the very best merciful examiners have raised from the very gates of "pluck" to the comparative paradise of the gulf.

Saturday Rev.

Some ten or fifteen men just on the line, not bad enough to be plucked or good enough to be placed, are put into the gulf, as it is popularly called (the Examiners' phrase is "degrees allowed"), and have their degrees given them, but are not printed in the Calendar.

C. A. Bristol, English University, p. 259.

6. In mining, a large deposit of ore in a lode.—Gulf Stream, an oceanic current which first becomes apparent near the north coast of Cuba, whence it advances eastward to the Bahamas, then, turning northward, follows the Atlantic coast with a velocity of from 2 to 5 miles an hour, gradually expanding in breadth and diminishing in depth, but distinctly perceived beyond the eastern edge of Newfoundland as far as about 30 degrees west longitude. Its average breadth from Bermuda to the neighborhood of Nova Scotia is from 300 to 400 miles. Its comparatively high temperature (10 to 20 degrees above that of the surrounding ocean), rapid motion, and deep blue color make the Gulf Stream a most remarkable phenomenon, and even more interesting than the Kuro Siwo, the corresponding current on the Asiatic coast of the Pacific ocean. The Gulf Stream exerts a most important influence in moderating the climate of France, the British Islands, and other parts of western Europe. The distance to which the influence of the Gulf Stream is felt in a northerly direction has been the subject of much discussion among climatologists. It seems pretty clearly established, however, that a considerable proportion of the effect produced on the climate of northern Europe which was formerly ascribed exclusively to the Gulf Stream is in reality due to a current coming from the Antilles (the Antilles Stream), which joins the Gulf Stream to the north of the Bahamas.

gulf (gulf), v. [Formerly also gulph; < gulf, n. Cf. engulf.] I, trans. 1. To swallow; engulf; cast down, as into a gulf.

Cast himself down,
And gulf'd his griefs in instant sleep.
Tennyson, Pellena and Ettarre.

2. In the University of Cambridge, to place in the gulf, or among those students who have barely escaped being plucked in their final examination.

Being gulf'd was therefore about as bad for a small College as being plucked, since it equally destroyed his chance of a Fellowship.

C. A. Bristol, English University, p. 249.

II, trans. To flow like the waters of a gulf.

Then do the Aegean Cyclops him affray,
And deep Charybdis gulphing in and out.
Spenser, Virgil's Gnat, I. 143.

Of almost Tweed, or Ouse, or gulphful Dan.
Milton, Vacation Exercise, I. 92.

And gulphful Rhodas, rolling to the main,
Helms, and shields, and godlike heroes slain.

Pope, Iliad, III.

gul-gul (gul'gul), n. [E. Ind.] A sort of chunam or cement made of pounded sea-shells mixed with oil, which hardens like stone, and is used in India to cover ships' bottoms. It is impenetrable by worms even when unprotected by copper.

gulinula (gu-lin'ū-lā), n. [NL., < L. gula, throat, + -in- + dim., -ula.] A name given by Hyatt to that stage of development of a young actinozoan, as a coral, which comes next after the hydroplanula, and in which an actinostome or gullet is formed. See the extract.

During this process (invagination of the blastopore) the blastopore is carried inward, and the internal opening of the actinostome thus becomes the homologous of the primitive blastopore of the hydroplanula, and also represents the external orifice of the body of the Hydromedusa. This is the gullet larval or gulinula stage.

Hyatt, Proc. Biol. Soc. Nat. Hist., 1884, p. 118.

gulinular (gu-lin'ū-lār), a. [gulinula + -ar.] Of or pertaining to a gulinula. Also gullet-larval.

gullet (gu'let), n. [Equiv. to L. gula (n.), a glutton; < gula, the gullet; see gule, gule.] A glutton.

gull (gull), n. [ME. gull (rare), an unfledged bird, prob. < loel. gult, usually gult = Sw. lutan, gull, yellow (cf. gulaund), = E. yellow, in reference to the yellow color of the beak (cf. F. bejaune, a novice, lit. 'yellow-beak'), or, in the case of the gosling, to the yellow color of the young feathers; see yellow.] 1. An unfledged bird; a nestling.

If a nest of hiddis thou fyndist, and the mother to the byddis [in another MS. gollis] or to the cyren akewe sittinge, thou shalt not hold hyr with the sonne.

Wyclif, Deut., xlii. 6 (MS.).

You need us so

2. A gosling. [Prov. Eng.]—3. A large trout. [Scott.] Compare gullfish.—4. The bloom of the willow in the spring. [Prov. Eng.]—5. A simpleton; a fool; a dupe; one easily cheated.

Yond gull Malvollio is turned heathen, a very renegade.
Shak., T. N., III. 2.

The contemporary world is apt to be the gull of brilliant parts.

Lowell, Study Wyndow, p. 113.

6. A cheating or cheat; a trick; fraud.

To be revenged on you for the gull you put upon him.

Chapman, All Fools, IV. 1.

I should think this a gull, but that the white bearded fellow speaks it.

Shak., Much Ado, II. 3.

7. [cf. hull-gull.] A kind of game. Moor. [Prov. Eng.] gull (gull), v. t. [cf. gull, n., 5, 6.] To deceive; cheat; mislead by deception; trick; defraud.

Keep your money, be not gull'd, be not laughed at.
Fletcher (and another), Fair Maid of the Inn, IV. 2.

In the night time by some fire-works in the temple, they would have gull'd the credulous people with opinion of miracle.

Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 271.

The vulgar gull'd into rebellion, armed.

Dryden.

—Syn. To dupe, cozen, beguile, impose upon.
gull (gull), n. [cf. Corn. gullan = W. gyculan = Bret. guelin, a gull. Cf. gullmot.] 1. A long-winged, web-footed bird of the subfamily Larus, family Laridae, and order Longipennis. There are more than 30 species, inhabiting all parts of the world, belonging chiefly to the leading genus Larus, other genera are Chroicocephalus, Lema, and Rhodostethus. Many of the species are marine or maritine, but gulls are also found over most of the large bodies of fresh water of the globe. They are strong and buoyant fliers, spending much of the time on the wing, and are voracious feeders upon fish or any animal substances which they can find in the water. They do not dive. The nest is usually placed on the ground or on rocks, and the eggs are two or three in number and heavily colored. The voice is raucous or shrill, and the birds are very noisy, especially during the breeding season. The characteristic coloring is white with a pearly, bluish, or fuscous mantle, the primaries usually marked with black; the white is sometimes has a beautiful rosy hue. In one group of species the head is enveloped in a dark-colored hood; in another the whole plumage is dark, except the white head; in the ivory gull the entire plumage is white. In the Kittiwake, which constitutes the genus Rissa, the hind toe is rudimentary. Among representative species are the Herring-gull or burgomaster, Larus argentatus, and the great black-backed gull, L. marinus, these two being the largest species; the herring-gull, L. argentatus; the mew-gull, L. canus; the hooded gull, Chroicocephalus atricollis; the fork-tailed gull, Lema sabini; and the wedge-tailed gull, Rhodostethus rosea. In the larger gulls the bill is strong and hooked; in the smaller kinds it is slender and straighter, and these grade directly into the terns or sea-swallows. See cuts under burgomaster and Chroicocephalus.

Common gull, or Herring-gull (Larus argentatus).

2. Some sea-bird resembling a gull, as a skua or jaeger, a tern or sea-swallow, a booby or gannet, etc.—Arctic gull. See arctic-bird.—Black-backed gull, one of several species with black or blackish mantle: as, the great black-backed gull, the blackback, coh, coffin-carrier, or waga, Larus marinus; the lesser black-backed gull, Larus fuscus, a common European species.—Black or black-toed gull, the skua.—Black-headed gull, any gull of the genus Chroicocephalus (which see). The European C. ridibundus is also called brown-headed gull; the American C. atricollis is commonly known as laughing gull.—Brown gull, the brown gannet or booby of the south seas, the Sula leucogaster.—Calico-gull, Larus ridibundus, the black-headed gull; so called from a loch of that name. (Scotland.)—Carion-gull, the great black-backed gull, Larus marinus. (Ireland.)—Cloven-footed gull, an old book-name of the common black tern, a species of Hydrochelidon formerly called Sterna fuscipes, from its deeply indented web. —Colonel gull, the young of the great black-backed gull in gray plumage.—Common gull, Larus canus, the common mew, sea mew, or mew-gull, so called in Great Britain.—Grape gull, one of the smaller sea-gulls when in gray plumage. (New Eng.)—Glaucous gull, the burgomaster, Larus argentatus.—Glaucous-winged gull, Larus glaucescens, a common gull of the Pacific coast of North America, like a herring gull, but with the black of the primaries replaced by pale blue.—Goose-gull, the great black-backed gull. (Ireland.)—Gray gull. (a) The Larus glaucescens of the western coast of North America. (b) The young of the herring gull, Larus argentatus, and of sundry related species, when the plumage is mostly gray. (Eastern North America.)—Green-billed gull, the common gull.—Iceland gull, one of two gulls found in Iceland: (a) The burgomaster. (b) The white-winged gull, Larus leucopterus. Both have been called Larus islandicus.—Kittiwake gull. See kittiwake.—Laughing gull, some species of Chroicocephalus, as C. ridibundus of Europe or C. atricollis of America.—Pewit gull, the European black-headed gull, Chroicocephalus ridibundus. See pewit. (Local British.)—Red-legged gull, the pewit. (Ireland.)—Ring-billed gull, one of the commonest gulls of the United States, Larus delawarensis, formerly L. argentatus, having a yellow bill with a red spot and a black ring near the end. It is much like the herring gull, but smaller.—Rosy gull, some small gull, as of the genus Chroicocephalus, whose plumage in the breeding season has an exquisite blush over the under parts; specifically the wedge-tailed gull, Rhodostethus rosea, now fully called Ross's rose gull.—Silvery gull (a book-name translating Larus argentatus). Same as herring gull.—Swallow-tailed gull, the Larus (Neoparus) furcata, a large and extremely rare gull of the Galapagos and neighboring coasts, with a long, deeply forked tail.—Waga gull, the great black-backed gull, and especially its young.—White gull. Same as kittiwake gull.—White-headed gull, one of several species of dark, sooty, or fuscous plumage, having the head white in the adult. The best-known is Larus (Blarina) aegreus, common in California.—White-winged gull, a gull whose pale-pearly mantle fades into white on the primaries without any dark markings; specifically, Larus leucopterus of Europe and North America.—Winter gull. Same as kittiwake gull. (See also herring-gull, sea-gull, ivory-gull.)

gull (gull), n. [cf. mod. E. gull, gulle; a var. of gule, gule. Cf. gullet, gully.] A channel for water; also, a stream.

They're passage widely stopped by a granite pul (Ingens virago) made with the violence of the streames y^e same downe the mountaines by wearing away of the earth.

Sandys, Traveller, p. 34.

gullager (gul'āj), n. [cf. gull + -age.] The act of gulling, or the state of being gulled.

Had you no quirk
To avoid gullage, or, by such a creature?
R. Jonson, Volpone, v. 4.

gull-billed (gul'bil'd), a. Having a bill shaped like that of a gull; specifically applied to a single species of tern or sea-swallow, the marsh-tern, Colochebia anglica, of Europe, Asia, and America. See cut under Colochebia.

gull-catcher (gul'kach'er), n. A cheat; a man who cheats or entraps silly people.

Each weeping Tree had Gums distilled.
Congress, Tears of Ameryilla.

9. A form of dextrine produced by roasting starch: specifically called artificial or British gum.—8. One of various species of trees, especially of the genus Eucalyptus, of Australia, and Nyssa, of the United States. Of the Australian trees, the apple-scented gum is E. Muartensis; the blue gum, E. Globulus, etc. (see blue gum); the elder gum, E. Gunnii; the crimson flowered, E. ficifolia; the rounded, E. decipiens, etc.; the bluish or glaucous E. salubris; the giant, E. amygdalina; the green barked, E. stellulata; the gray, E. crebra, etc.; the iron, E. teretifolia; the lemon-scented, E. imbricata; the manna, E. cineraria; the mesquite, E. fastuosa; the red, E. calophylla, E. rostrata, etc.; the salmum barked, E. salmumphylla, the scarlet-flowered, E. minutata and E. phoraria; the spotted or marked, E. maculata; E. gummatosa, etc.; the swamp, E. amygdalina, E. paniculata, etc.; the white, E. amygdalina, and the York gum, E. peruviana. In the United States the black gum or sour gum is Nyssa sylvatica (see black gum); the cotton or tupelo gum, N. uniflora, the sweet or red gum, Liquidambar styraciflua. In the West Indies the doctor gum is Styris Molybdeum, the gum tree of Jamaica, Sapindus laurifolius, and of Dominica, Incerydium bazarilla. See also under Eucalyptus.

4. Same as gumming, 1.—5. A bubble; a pimple. Compare red-gum, white-gum.
Bubbles on watery or fluid bodies are but thin gums of air.
Mr T. Browne, Bubbles.

6. pl. India-rubber overbores: more commonly called rubbers. [Local, U. S.]
A Philadelphia gentleman and his wife going to make a visit at a house in New York where they were very much at home, he entered the parlor alone, and, to the question "Why, where is Emily?" answered, "O, Emily is outside cleaning her gums upon the mat."
H. G. White, Words and their Uses, Pref., p. 5.

7. A section of a hollow log or tree (usually a gum-tree) used to form a small well-curb, or to make a beehive. [Local, U. S.]—Acoroid gum, or gum acoroides, a fragrant resin, red or yellow in color, obtained from species of Xanthorrhoea, the blackboy or grass gum trees of Australia. Also called blackboy or Boronia Bay gum, and grass tree or yellow gum.—Alseae gum. Same as dextrine.—Barbary gum, a kind of gum arabic. Also called gum Magadere and Caranania gum.—Bassora gum, a Persian product of uncertain origin, used principally for the adulteration of tragacanth.—Bengal gum. See balak.—Blackboy gum. See blackboy.—Botany Bay gum. Same as acoroid gum.—British gum, roasted starch: a stiffening substance made from potatoes, wheat, or sage, used by calico printers. See dextrine.—Butea gum. See Butea and kuu.—Caranania gum. Same as Barbary gum.—Caranania gum. See caranania.—Cashew gum, an exudation from the Anacardium occidentale, which is partly soluble in water.—Chagual gum, a gum collected in Chili from the Ficus chagualosa, a bromeliaceous plant.—Cherry-gum. Same as acoroid.—Chewing-gum, a masticatory consisting either of a natural resin or gum resin, as that of the spruce, or of an artificial preparation of paraffin and other ingredients: much used in parts of the United States.—Elea gum, India rubber.—Oedda gum, a kind of gum arabic obtained from the Somali coast of eastern Africa. Also called Julla gum.—Grass-tree gum. Same as acoroid gum.—Gum acacia. Same as gum arabic.—Gum amomum. See amomum.—Gum anise. See anise and opul.—Gum arabic, a gum obtained from various species of Acacia. The best gum arabic of commerce, which is also known as Kordofan, Tunkey, white Senegal, gum, or Senegal gum, is the product of A. Senegal, a tree of Senegal and the Sudan. A. Arabica found in India, Arabia, and through a large part of Africa, yields the Mogoco, Mogador, Barbary, East Indian, or bablah gum. The Cape gum of South Africa is obtained from A. horrida. Russian or talca gum is the product of A. sinuata and A. Seyal. Wattle gum is obtained from a number of Australian species. Gum arabic is readily soluble in water, and is used in many ways, as for giving lustre to crepe and silk, for thickening colors and mordants in calico printing, in the manufacture of ink and blacking, as a medicine, and in medicine. Also called gum a-cum.—Gum benzoic or benjamin. See benzoic.—Gum copal. See copal.—Gum dragon. Same as trapa-anth.—Gum elastic. Same as India-rubber and caoutchouc.

Professor Gaby was here, with a tremendous storm in a gum-elastic bag.
Hawthorne, Hall of Fantasy.

Gum elemi. See elemi.—Gum euphorbium. See euphorbium, 1.—Gum galbanum. See galbanum.—Gum guaiacum. See guaiacum.—Gum gutta (E. gummifera). Same as gummi.—Gum juniper. Same as juniper.—Gum kino. See kino.—Gum lac. See lac.—Gum ladanum or labdanum, and gum ledon. See ladanum.—Gum magney, a translucent gum, partly soluble in water, obtained in Mexico from the Apocynum Americanum.—Gum Mogadore. Same as Barbary gum.—Gum olibanum. See olibanum.—Gum opopanax. See opopanax.—Gum sagapenum. See sagapenum.—Gum sandarac. See sandarac.—Gum senegal, a kind of gum arabic. See above, under gum arabic.—Gum storax. See storax.—Gum succory, a gummy exudation from (Chondrilla juncea, a compositaceous composite of central Europe, employed as a narcotic).—Gum thus. Same as Frankincense, 1.—Gum tragacanth. See trapa-anth.—Nyssa gum, from Prunus Quinensis, a burporeous tree of British Guiana.—Ivy-gum, a gum-resin obtained in the Levant and southern Europe from Hedera Helix, and employed typically in medicine as an astringent.—Jida gum. Same as Gedda gum.—Kutera gum, a product of Onchocarpus Quercifolius, a bixaceous shrub of India, used as a substitute for tragacanth.—Mecquet-gum, gum from the Prosopis juliflora, a small leguminous tree widely distributed through the warmer parts of Africa. It resembles gum arabic.—Moist gum. Same as moist.—Plantic gum, gutta percha.—Sassa gum, product of Albizia julibrissin, resembling tragacanth.

—Semia gum, gum obtained from the Banksia retusa, a leguminous tree of the Himalayas. It is similar to gum arabic.—Sonora gum, the resin which covers the croton-plant, Larrea Mexicana, used as a remedy for rheumatism, etc.—Sweet gum, a balsamic exudation from the Liquidambar styraciflua. (See also balata-gum, chicle-gum, doctor-gum, hay-gum, pruce-gum, etc.) gum (gum), v.; pret. and pp. gummed, ppr. gumming. [gum, n.] L. trans. 1. To smear with gum; unite, stiffen, or clog by gum or a gum-like substance.
I have removed Valstaff's horse, and he frets like a gummed velvet.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., II. 2.
[Velvet and taffeta were sometimes stiffened with gum to make them look shiny or stiff; but the consequence was that the stuff being thus hardened, quickly rubbed and frothed itself out. Halliwell.]
The gummed water bore on it the impress of a gilt coronet.
Trollope, Barchester Towers.

2. To play a trick upon; humbug; hoodwink: said to be from the fact that opossums and raccoons often elude hunters and dogs by hiding in the thick foliage of gum-trees. [Slang, U. S.]
You can't gum me, I tell you now.
An' so you needn't try.
Lowell, Biglow Papers, 1st ser.

II. intrans. 1. To exude or form gum. See gumming, 1.—2. To become clogged or stiffened by some gummy substance, as inspissated oil: as, a machine will gum up from disuse.

gum-animal (gum'an-i-mal), n. A book-name of Galago senegalensis, a kind of lemur, translating a Moorish name referring to the fact that the animal feeds upon gum senegal. See Galago.

gumbi, n. An obsolete spelling of gum.
gumbo (gum'bo), n. [Also gombo; appar. of Ind. or negro origin.] 1. The pod of Hibiscus esculentus, also called okra.—2. A soup, usually of chicken, thickened with okra.
The millions of Yankees—from codfish to alligators—cooks of chowder or cooks of gumbo.
T. Wainthrop, Canoe and Saddle, III.

3. A dish made of young capsules of okra, seasoned with salt and pepper, and stewed and served with melted butter.

gumbo (gum'bo), n. [Appar. of some native origin (I.).] A patois spoken by West Indian and Louisianian creoles and negroes.

English, German, French, and Spanish, all were represented, to say nothing of Doric brogue and local jargon, and its volatile exercise was set off by a vehemence of utterance and gesture curiously at variance with the refinement of our Virginians.
The Century, XXXI, 618.
"Laroussel, you're the only Creole in this crowd," said the captain. "Talk to her!"
Talk gumbo to her!
Harper's Mag., LXXVI, 769.

gum-boll (gum'bol), n. A small abscess on the gum.

gumbo-limbo (gum'bó-lim'bó), n. Same as Jamaica or West Indian herb (which see, under herb).

gumby (gum'bi), n.; pl. gumbies (-bys). [W. Ind., perhaps orig. African.] A kind of drum used by the negroes of the West Indies, made of a piece of a hollow tree, about 6 feet long, over which a skin is stretched. It is carried by one man while another beats it with his open hands.

A squad of drunken black vagabonds, singing and playing on gumbies, or African drums.
M. Scott.

gum-cistus (gum'sis-tus), n. A plant, Cistus ladaniferus, yielding ladanum. See Cistus, 2, and ladanum.

gum-drop (gum'drop), n. 1. In phar., a confection composed of gum arabic and cane-sugar, esteemed as a demulcent. L. S. Dispensatory.—2. In confectionary, a similar preparation, often made with glucose and gelatin and variously flavored.

gum-dynamite (gum'di-na-mit), n. Same as explosive gelatin. See gelatin.

gum-game (gum'gam), n. [See gum, v., 2.] A hoodwinking trick; a guileful artifice; an imposition: as, to play the gum-game. [Slang, U. S.]

gumma (gum'ga), n.; pl. gummata (-ga-ta). [ML., a var. of L. gummis, gum: see gum, 2.] In pathol., a kind of tumor produced by syphilis, so called from the resemblance of its contents to gum.

gummatous (gum'-ga-tus), a. [gumma (-ga-tus).] In pathol., of the nature of a gumma or soft tumor.

The gummatous degeneration of the products of syphilis infection is not always easily distinguished from the cancerous.
Kemp, Brit., XVIII, 300.

These symptoms and signs are due to gummatous infiltration of the lung.
Medical News, LII, 167.

gummer (gum'er), n. [gum, v., + -er.] A tool or machine for gutting saws, or for enlarging the spaces between the teeth of worn saws.

gummi (gu-mi'f-e-rus), a. [L. gummis, gum, + ferre = E. bear.] Producing gum.
gumminess (gum'i-ness), n. 1. The state or quality of being gummy; viscoseness.—2. An accumulation of gum.

One of about twenty years of age came to me with a gumminess on the tendons reaching to his fingers, inasmuch as he could not bend one of them.
Wiemann, Surgery, viii.

gumming (gum'ing), n. [Verbal n. of gum, v.] 1. A disease in trees bearing stone-fruits, as cherries, plums, apricots, peaches, and almonds. It is characterized by the production of brown or amber-colored gum that exudes from wounds on the trunk, limbs, or even fruit. The cause has not been satisfactorily determined. Also gum.
2. The treatment of the prepared and etched lithographic stone with gum-water, to cause the untouched portions to resist the ink. See lithography.

Gumminia (gu-min'i-a), n. [NL., < L. gummis, gum.] A genus of fleshy sponges, giving name to the order Gumminales. Also Gummina. Occur Schmidt, 1862.

Gumminales (gu-min-i-a-lés), n. pl. [NL., < Gumminia + -ales.] An order or other superfamily group of fleshy sponges or Carnoseopora, including tough leathery forms, the external layer of which forms a partly fibrous cortex, the fibers permeating the central mass surrounding the canals, and also penetrating the mesoderm. Also Gumminae. Stand. Nat. Hist., I, 63.

Gummites (gum'it), n. [L. gummis, gum, + -ites.] An orange-yellow mineral consisting chiefly of hydrous oxide of uranium, produced by the alteration of uraninite.

gummosis (gu-mo'sis), n. [NL., < L. gummis, gum, + -osis.] In bot., the formation of gum in the older organs of plants by the transformation of large groups of tissue, as in the production of cherry-gum and gum tragacanth.

gummosity (gu-mos'i-ti), n. [= (cf. gummosis, L. gummosus, gummosus: see gummosis.)] Gumminess; the nature of gum; a viscous or adhesive quality. [Rare.]

gummosus (gum'us), a. [= F. gommeux = Fr. gommeux = Sp. gommoso = Pg. It. gommoso, < L. gummis (also gummosus), gummy, < gummis, gum; see gum, 2.] Of the nature or quality of gum; viscous; adhesive.
Of this we have an instance in the magisteria . . . of Jalap, benzoic, and of divers other resins or gummosus bodies dissolved in spirit of wine. Boyle, Works, IV, 337.

The thoughts rise heavily and pass gummosus thro' my pen.
Stearns, Tristram Shandy, ix, 13.

gummy (gum'i), a. [gum, 2 + -y.] 1. Consisting of gum; of the nature of gum; viscous; adhesive.

Heer, for hard Cement, heap they night and day
The gummy slime of chalky waters gray.
Sylvester, 1c of Dr. Barthe's Works, II, Babylon.

From the utmost end of the head branches there issueth out a gummy juice, which hangeth downward like a cord.
Raleigh.

2. Impregnated with gum; giving out gum; covered with or clogged by gum or viscous matter.

The gummy bark of fir or pine. Milton, P. L., I, 1074.

The yawning youth, scarce half awake, quays
His lazy limbs and drowsy head to raise;
Then rubs his gummy eyes, and scrubs his pale.
Dryden.

3. In pathol., pertaining to or having the nature of a gumma; gummatous.—4. Having an accumulation of gum, or matter resembling gum; stuffy; puffy; swollen. [Slang.]
A little gummy in the leg, I suppose.
Colman the Younger, Poor Gentleman.

gump (gump), n. [Perhaps < heel gump = Sw. Dan. gump, the rump.] A foolish person; a dolt. [Colloq.]
C . . . is still a gump, and is constantly regretting that she ever left the "dear old Hongland" in which she was so notoriously prosperous and happy.
Harper's Mag., LXXVI, 104.

gum-plant (gum'plant), n. A plant of the genus Grindelia; so called from the viscid secretion which covers them. (California.)

gum-pot (gum'pot), n. A metal pot in which the materials for varnish are melted and mixed.

gumption (gump'shon), n. [Also gumshion, dial. variation: orig. dial. irreg. < gum, 1, gum, understand (see gum, 1), + -tion.] Acuteness of the practical understanding; clear, practical common sense; quick perception of the right thing to do under unusual circumstances. [Colloq.]

One does not have gunpowder till one has been properly educated.

What the French applaud—and not smile—
As “march-fair” (I do not know the Dutch);
The literal Germans call it “Mutterwurst.”
The Yankos pumpfies, and the Grecians “mons”—
A useful thing to have about the house.

J. G. Saxe, The Wife's Revenge.

Mr. Miller's is what that teacher and Royal Academician, who was a man of seal, often called “a book full of gunpowder.”

Albion, Jan. 14, 1864, p. 65.

gunpowder (gump'pau-der), n. [Also gunpowder; gunpowder + powder.] Without gunpowder or understanding; foolish. [Colloq.]

gunpowder (gump'pau-der), n. [Also gunpowder; gunpowder.] 1. Having gunpowder; having quick perception and good judgment.—2. Superficial; conceitedly proud. [Colloq. and prov. Eng.]

“She holds her head higher, I think,” said the landlord, smiling. “She was always— not exactly proud like, but what I call gunpowder.”

Bulwer, My Novel, iv. 12.

gun-rash (gum'rush), n. Same as red-rum.

gun-resin (gum'rez'in), n. A vegetable secretion formed of resin mixed with more or less gum or mucilage. The gun-resins do not flow naturally from plants, but are mostly attracted by incision, in the form of white, yellow, or red viscid fluids, which dry and coagulate. The more important are oilum, galbanum, scammony, guaiacum, euphorbia, asphaltum, aloes, myrrh, and ammoniac.

gun-stick (gum'stik), n. A small piece of some hard substance, as of ivory or coral, given to children to bite on for the purpose of relieving the pains of teething.

gunstone (gum'shon), n. [A trade-name, irreg. (gum + stone), perhaps suggested by the form of gunstone.] Magly, as made by drying gum mastic into a strong drying oil in which sugar of lead was substituted for the litharge previously used. The name is not now in use. See magly.

guntop-tree (gum'top-tree), n. An Australian tree, Eucalyptus Sieberiana.

gun-tree (gum'tree), n. See gun, 3.

gun-water (gum'wa'ter), n. A distillation from gum.

gun-wood (gum'wud), n. 1. The wood of a gun-tree.—2. A plant of the genus Commersonia, an arborescent composite peculiar to the island of St. Helena. [Properly gunwood.]

gun (gun), n. [ME. gunne, gunn, rarely gonne, gonne, gonn; origin unknown. The word occurs first in the 14th century, applied both to guns in the med. sense, and also (apparently earlier) to engines of the mangonel or catapult kind, for throwing stones, etc.; the ML. glosses, mexmalis, petraria, fundibulum, manicula, gonna, etc., are consequently ambiguous. On the supposition that the sense of ‘mangonel’ or ‘catapult’ is the earlier, some have assumed that ME. gunn is an abridg. of OF. mangonne for mangonel, mangonel, etc., a mangonel (for throwing stones, etc.); see mangonel, mangiel. Others have sought the origin in Celtic; but the Ir. Gael. gonna, W. gonn, a gun, are rather from ME.] 1. A military engine of the mangonel or catapult kind, used for throwing stones.

They divide most about
Of guns, gunns, not shafts.

Rowe, of the Rev. l. 4176.

The word gun was in use in England for an engine to cast a thing from a man, long before there was any gunpowder found out.

Selden, Table Talk Language.

2. A metallic tube or tubular barrel, with its stock or carriage and attachments, from which missiles are thrown, as by the explosive force of gunpowder or other explosive placed behind them at the closed end of the tube, and ignited through a small hole or vent; in general, any firearm except the pistol and the mortar. Guns are distinguished as cannons, muskets, rifles, artillery, field-pieces, etc. In military usage, however, only cannon in their various forms and sizes are called guns (collectively ordnance, and familiarly artillery), the others being called small arms. In historical use plates also are often called guns. See cannon, 1.

Throughout every region
Wrote this foul trumpet sound,
As swift as a pellet out of gun,
When pelet is in the powder round.

Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 1043.

At our going off, the Fort against which our plan was announced saluted my Lord Marshall with 12 grease guns, which we answered with 4.

Swifty, Diary, Oct. 10, 1841.

So he came a-riding in with his gun in revolver and his gun shooting.

The Century, XXXVI. 304.

3. Specifically, a comparatively long cannon used for obtaining high velocities with low trajectories, as distinguished from a howitzer or a mortar.—4. In hunting, one who carries a gun;

a member of a shooting party. [Colloq.]

5. A tall cylindrical jug in use in the north of England.—6. In plate-glass manuf., a device for fixing the breadth of the plate. It consists of two plates of cast metal, placed in front of the roller and bolted together by cross bars at a distance apart which can be easily altered and adjusted according to the breadth of plate the apparatus is intended to control. Range Rev., X. 602.—Accelerating gun. See accelerate.—Arm- strong gun, an English gun of wrought iron, invented by Sir W. G. Armstrong about 1850, ranging from the smallest field-piece to pieces of the largest caliber, constructed principally of spirally coiled bars, and generally having an inner tube or core of steel, rifled with numerous shallow grooves. The breech loading projectile, which is coated with lead, is inserted into a chamber behind the bore, and is driven forward by the explosion with the effect of forcing its soft coating into the grooves, so that it receives a rotary motion. The commonest form of the gun is breech-loading; but muzzle loading Armstrong guns also are made.—As sure as a gun, quite sure, certainly. [Colloq.]

Confers with his dagger a promising assassin; the guns and firelocks dead-lying things, as sure, they say, as a gun.

Roger North, Examiner, p. 104.

Axis of a gun. See axis.—Bailey gun, a battery gun, not in use, in which the cartridges were placed in a hopper, and descending, were fed automatically to a group of barrels arranged parallel to each other. It was worked by turning a crank.—Balloon gun, a gun used for the attack of military balloons. It is ordinarily a rapid-fire gun of about 14 inches' caliber, discharging a shell weighing about one pound. It is usually provided with a mount of great flexibility, so that it can be readily turned to any angle of elevation. Barbette gun. See barbette.

Big gun. See great gun. Body of a gun. See body.

Bomb-gun, a gun used for shooting a lance in killing whales. It may be a shoulder or a swivel-gun, or resemble the darting-gun, which is thrust by hand; but the term is more generally applied to the shoulder-gun, of which there are several patterns, both breech and muzzle-loading. Bomb-lance gun, a bomb gun.—Brown segmen- tal gun, a composite gun consisting of a thin central tube surrounded by staves or segments of steel, the whole being wound with steel wire under an initial compression slightly less than the elastic limit of the steel composing the segments.—Built-up gun, a general term applied to all guns composed of several parts. The parts are assembled upon various systems, the general aim of all being to establish a system of parts that shall best resist the internal strains set up by the explosive gases of the powder. The exterior hoops or jackets are shrunk on over the internal parts by first expanding by heat and cooling in position. Centri- fugal gun. See centrifugal. Crozier wire-wound gun, a gun composed of a heavy tube wrapped with steel wire.
The special feature of its construction is the initial compression of the tube beyond the elastic limit of the metal.

Dahlgren gun, a smooth-bore gun of cast iron, invented by Lieutenant (afterward Rear Admiral) J. A. Dahlgren in 1860 for the United States navy. Its principal peculiarities are the unbroken smoothness of its surface and the relation of its thickness at all points (determined by experiment) to the pressure in firing. Evening gun (night), and second, the warning gun at sunset. In the United States army the time of challenging is regulated by post commanders, and it is generally later than the time of firing the evening gun. In the United States navy the evening gun is fired from flag ships at 9 o'clock P. M.

Fraser gun. Same as Wadsworth gun. Gardner gun, same as Gardner machine gun. See machine gun.

Gatling gun, an American form of muzzle-loading or machine gun, invented by Dr. R. J. Gatling and first used in the civil war. This gun was the successful pioneer of the machine gun. It has from 5 to 10 barrels, with a lock for each barrel; the barrels are arranged in a cluster around a central axis, and both barrels and locks revolve together. The cartridges are fed from a feed-tray into a hopper on top, and in the later models from a feed-magazine. With the 10-barrel gun a fire of about 1,000 shots per minute can be delivered. These guns are made of the following calibers: 0.30, 0.35, 0.40, 0.45, 0.50, 0.55, 0.60, 0.70, and 1 inch. They are mounted upon a tripod or a carriage, according to the service for which they are intended. See also in preceding column.—Great gun. (a) A cannon. (b) A person of distinction or importance; more commonly called a big gun.

[Colloq.]—Great gunst, a familiar ejaculation of surprise.
[Colloq.]—Gun detachment. See detachment.—Gun funce. See funce.—Guns of position, heavy field-pieces which are not designed to execute quick movements.—Horse- artillery gun, a light field-piece intended for rapid movements and to accompany cavalry.—Trapp gun, a steel cannon made at the Krupp works in Essen, Prussia.

These guns are made from forged steel and of all calibers.
See formature.—Land-service gun, any piece of ordnance designed for use upon land. It includes mountain, field, siege, and sea-coast artillery.—Label gun, a magazine-gun used in the French army.—Lyle gun, a breech-loading gun, designed by Captain R. A. Lyle of the United States Ordnance Department, for throwing elongated projectiles having lines attached to them, in order to establish communication between the shore and a stranded or wrecked vessel. The projectile has at the rear end a stanch, to which the line is attached.—Mausser gun, a magazine bolt-gun used in the German army.—Morning gun, a gun fired on a ship of war or at a military post or camp at the first notice of the reveille is sounded on the drum, bugle, or trumpet; a reveille gun.—Mountain gun. See mountain-artillery.

Multi-charge gun, a gun constructed to receive two or more separate charges of powder, which are fired consecutively in rapid succession; as, the Lynch-

Haskell multi-charge gun. The charge in the breech chamber is ignited by a friction or other primer; this charge starts the projectile forward, and as its base passes successively the openings of the subsidiary chambers or jackets, the charges contained therein are ignited.—Nap- oleon gun, a bronze 12-pounder used for field-artillery, first adopted in France about 1850, under Napoleon III.— Neck of a gun. See neck.—Palgrave gun, a howitzer for the horizontal firing of heavy shells, introduced by the French general H. J. Palgrave about 1855.—Palliser gun, a cast iron gun lined with a tube of coiled wrought-iron, invented by Major Palliser of the British army about 1870. The tube is made in two parts, the breech-end being shrunk on. This system was designed to utilize the old smooth-bore ordnance, by converting it into rifled guns.

Parrott gun, a cast iron rifled gun introduced at the breech by shrinking coils of wrought iron over it, invented by Captain Parrott of the old Springfield foundry in New York, and first used in 1861. The calibers are 10, 12, 15, 16, 20, and 300-pounders. The Parrott projectile is of cast iron, with a brass plate, or sabot, cast into a recessed rubber to prevent turning. The powder gas pressure against the bottom and under it so as to expand it into the grooves, and thus secure rotary motion to the projectile.—Pneu- matic gun, a gun employing compressed air for discharging a shell charged with high explosives. The pneumatic gun adopted by the United States for coast defense has a caliber of 15 inches and throws a shell carrying from 100 to 150 pounds of explosive gellant. It has a range of three miles. Powder pneumatic gun, a pneumatic gun in which the explosion of a small charge of gunpowder is used to compress the air used for discharging the shell.

Quaker gun, a log of wood mounted on wheels or some other arrangement, imitating cannon, designed to decoy the enemy—so called in humorous allusion to the peace doctrine of the Quakers or Friends.—Quick-fire gun, a name sometimes given to large rapid fire guns, especially to one that uses a projectile that is separate from the case containing the powder.—Ranipart gun, a large piece of artillery fitted for use on a transport, and not for field purposes.—Rapid-fire gun, a breech-loading gun of from 15 to 20 inches caliber which uses metallic ammunition.

Each type is designated by the name of the inventor of the breech-loading system used, as the Gordon, Fletcher, Seabury, Dahlgren, Canet, Schneider, Armstrong, Brin-

Schneider, Maxim Nordenfeth, Hatchell, Groson, and others.—Rodman gun, a cast-iron gun with curved outline, being much thicker over the seat of the charge than elsewhere. The peculiarity of this gun is the method of casting, devised by General Rodman of the United States Ordnance Department, and first employed in 1860. Instead of cooling from the exterior, as in the ordinary method, General Rodman cast all large guns with a hollow core, and cooled them from the interior by a stream of cold water or air, at the same time preventing undue radiation from the exterior by surrounding the flask holding the casting with heating-lumens.—Sims-Dudley pneumatic gun, a powder pneumatic gun, the best known form of which consists of three parallel tubes of which the center one is much longer than the other two. Both the center and right-hand tubes open at the breech, the former for the introduction of the projectile and the latter for the powder charge. In action, the powder is exploded in the right barrel and the gas-jets pass to front end, then across to the left barrel, and are finally admitted behind the projectile in the center barrel, mixed with the air in the two side barrels which has been compressed by the process.

Shells containing sensitive high explosives can thus be discharged without shock sufficient to cause explosion.—
Son of a gun, a rugus; a knave; used humorously.—
Spencer gun, an American magazine rifle containing seven cartridges in a metallic tube, which is inserted in the butt-stock from the rear. The magazine is operated by a lever in the under side of the arm.—Springfield gun, a single-loader with a blinged block, used in the United States army.—To blow great guns (haul), to blow tempestuously, or with great violence, out of the wind.

Spunking Jack was so cruelly, so pleasant, so jolly,
Through winds blew great guns, still he'd whistle and sing.

C. Dibdin, Sailor's Convention.

To break a gun, to house guns, etc. See house.—
Vavasseur gun (named from the inventor of the system), a built-up steel gun with wrought-iron transverse bands, and having three ribs projecting into the bore to replace the grooves usually employed in rifling.—Vetterli gun (from the inventor, V. Vetterli). (a) A single-loading small caliber 0.44, used in the Italian army. (b) A magazine gun used in the Italian and Swiss armies.—Whistle gun, an English rifled firearm, whether great or small.

At breech; A, barrel; C, head; D, breech-block;
E, butt; F, base or heel;
G, front sight or sight; H, guard or trigger plate; I, guard-lock;
J, hammer; K, lock; L, muzzle; M, N, sight;
O, sight; P, sight;
Q, sight; R, sight;
S, sight.

Multi-barrelled ten-barrel Gatling Gun.

ing a hexagonal bore, with a twist more rapid than usual: invented by Sir Joseph Whitworth. — Winchester gun, an American magazine rifle having a horizontal bolt and vertical cartridge-carrier operated by a lever on the under side of the stock. The magazine is below the barrel and in front of the receiver. — Wire gun, a built-up gun made by winding wire about a tube, or by covering the tube with alternate layers wound circumferentially and laid longitudinally. See Woodbridge gun. — Wood-bridge gun, a gun consisting of a thin steel tube wound with square wire, the interstices being filled with melted brass solder to consolidate it into one mass. — Woolwich gun, a built-up muzzle-loading cannon used in the British service. The tube is made of solid cast-steel drawn out by heating and hammering. After boring, turning, and chambering, the tube is heated to a uniform temperature and plunged into a covered tank of rapeseed oil to harden and temper it. Wrought-iron coils are shrunk on over the tube to complete the structure. The breech coil is formed of a triple coil, a trunnion ring, and a double coil welded together. The muzzle coil is composed of two single coils united by an end weld. The breech piece is screwed into the breech coil so as to abut against the rear end of the tube. The gun is assembled by heating the coils, and these when expanded are slipped over the tube and allowed to contract. The tube is kept cool during this operation by forcing a stream of cold water through the bore. These guns have from 7 to 10 grooves spirally cut in cross section, with curved edges and with a uniformly increasing twist. Also called Fraser gun. (See also carmate-gun, dynamite gun, machine gun, needle-gun, etc.)

gun¹ (gun), v. t.; pret. and pp. gunned, ppr. gunning. [<gun¹, n.] To shoot with a gun; practice shooting, especially the smaller kinds of guns. [U. S.]

The Americans were, however, mostly marksmen, having been accustomed to gunning from their youth.

Hannah Adams, Hist. New Eng.

gun². Past participle of gun¹.

guna (gū'nā), n. [Skt. guna, quality, adjectival quality, as distinguished from the real nature.] In Skt. gram., the changing of i and u to e, and a to o, and ri to ar, by compounding them with a prefixed a—that is, a + i = e, and so on. The term is also sometimes used in regard to similar changes in other languages.

gunarchy, n. Same as gunarchy.

A boat or small vessel fitted to carry one or more guns of large caliber, and from its light draft capable of running close inshore or up rivers; also, any small vessel carrying guns. — 2. In coal-mining, a self-dumping box on wheels, used for raising coal on slopes, and holding three or four tons of coal. It resembles a "skip," but runs on wheels, and not between guides. [Pennsylvania anthracite region.]

gun-brig (gun'brig), n. An obsolete sailing vessel of war with two square-rigged masts, and generally of less than 500 tons burden.

If they cut one or two of our people's heads off in Africa, we got up a gun-brig, and burn the barabooz, and slaughter a whole village for it.

Lever, Reminiscences of Bishop's Folly, 1788.

gun-captain (gun'kap'tan), n. The chief of a gun's crew, generally a petty officer.

gun-carriage (gun'kar'ij), n. The carriage or structure on which a gun is mounted or moved, and on which it is fired. Naval gun carriages formerly consisted of two sides or brackets of wood mounted fore part, and then rests on its wheels and on a strong support called the trawl. — Disappearing gun-carriage, a gun-carriage so arranged that the gun after being fired descends, under the influence of the force of recoil, to the loading position behind the protection of the parapet, where it can be manœvered without exposing the gun detachment to the enemy's fire. During the recoil of the gun sufficient energy is stored up, by means of a counterweight or by air compression, to raise the gun to firing position when released. The Disappearing-Cruiser deep-sea gun-carriage has been adopted for the recent service of the United States. The gun is mounted upon levers transversed in a top carriage which rolls back under the force of recoil. The lower ends of the levers are compelled to move between vertical guides and raise a counterweight. The constrained motion on two lines approximately perpendicular to each other, thus raising the gun to describe an arc of an ellipse in recoiling, is the mechanical principle of the carriage.

guncotton (gun'kot'n), n. A general name for the nitrates of cellulose, prepared by digesting cotton or other form of cellulose in nitric acid, or preferably in a mixture of nitric and sulphuric acids. A series of nitrates may thus be made, differing in composition and properties according to the strength of acids and time of digestion. Weak acids and short digestion yield trinitro- and tetranitro-cellulose, which dissolve in a mixture of alcohol and ether. This solution is the collodion of commerce. A highly explosive nitrate to which the name guncotton more properly belongs, is made by digesting clean cotton in a mixture of 1 part nitric acid, specific gravity 1.5, and 3 parts sulphuric acid, specific gravity 1.85, for 24 hours and thoroughly washing the product. This is a hexanitrate of cellulose, C₁₂H₁₄(NO₃)₆O₂. It can hardly be distinguished by appearance from raw cotton, and is insoluble in alcohol and ether. When ignited it burns quietly, leaving no residue, but by percussion explodes violently, especially if compressed. Its explosive force is much greater than that of gunpowder. It has been used chiefly for torpedoes and submarine blasting, but is now largely superseded by dynamite.

gun-deck (gun'dek), n. See deck, 2.

gundeleit (gun'de-lēt), n. A gondola. Marston.

gundelo, gundelow (gun'de-lō), n. [A corruption of gondola, gondola: see gondola.] Same as gondola, 2.

gunner-stake (gun'ner-stāk), n. [See, also written gunner-stake; gunner (?) + stake, q. v.] The tarbo: See stake, 1 (c). gunnery (gun'ner-i), n. [(gun + -ery.)] 1. The use of guns: same as gunning.

Artillery is now designated by gunnery: how lately, let others judge. Causton, Remains, Artillery.

Specifically—2. The art and science of firing guns. The science of gunnery has special reference to atmospheric resistance to projectiles, and their velocity, path, range, and effect, as affected by the form and size of gun and projectile, size and quality of charge, elevation of gun, etc. Abbreviated gun.

From the first rule essays of elate and stonies to the present perfection of gunnery, cannoning, bombardment, mining, etc. Burke, Vind. of Nat. Society.

gunnery-lieutenant (gun'ner-i-ten'ant), n. An officer appointed to a ship to supervise the exercise of gunnery and management of the guns. [Eng.] gunnery-ship (gun'ner-i-ship), n. A ship specially devoted to the practice of gunnery and experiments with ordnance.

gunney, n. See gunny.

gunnies (gun'ix), n. [Of Corn. origin.] In mining, breadth or width. A single gunnie is a breadth of 3 feet. Also spelled gunness. [Cornwall, Eng.]

The former vaults or calches that were dug in a mine are called "the old gunnies." Pryce.

gunning (gun'ing), n. [Verbal n. of gun, v.] The art or practice of shooting with guns; especially, the sport or pursuit of shooting game.

In the earlier times, the art of gunning was but little practiced. Goldsmith.

Gunning for shooting is in Drayton Lowell, Biglow Papers, Int.

—gun. Gunning, Hunting, Shooting. In the United States these terms are loosely used as interchangeable; more strictly, gunning and shooting are confined to the pursuit of feathered and small game, and hunting to the pursuit of larger game. In England hunting means chasing fowls or stags with hounds and hares with hounds.

gunning-boat (gun'ing-bōt), n. A light and narrow boat in which the fishermen pursue flocks of wild fowl along their narrow drains. Also called gunning-boat. Hallwell, [Prov. Eng.]

gunnisonite (gun'ni-sōn-ī-t), n. [Gun + nison (see def.) + -ite.] A mineral found near Gunnison in Colorado, containing calcium fluoride, silica, alumina, etc., and probably an altered or impure fluorite.

gunniss, n. See gunnies.

gunnung (gun'ung), n. [Australian.] A species of gum-tree, Eucalyptus robusta.

gunny (gun'i), n.; pl. gunnies (-iz). [Also written gunnery; Hind. gunn, gunny, a gunny-bag; (Beng., Mar., etc., gun or goun, gunny-bag; cf. Mar. gunpat or gonpat, gunny, the coarse canvas or sackcloth made from jute [Hind., etc., pat].) A strong coarse sackcloth manufactured chiefly in Bengal from jute, but to some extent also in Bombay and Madras from sunn-hemp. It is used for clothing by many poor people, but principally for bagging and the wrapping of large packages, as cotton-bales, for which use large quantities are exported to the United States. The material is commonly called gunny-cloth, and much of it is made up and exported under the name of gunny-bags. It is also extensively manufactured in Dundee, Scotland. Gunny of cinnamon, three quarters of a hundredweight. Gunny of saltpetre, one quarter of a hundredweight.

gunny-bags (gun'i-bagz), n. pl. See gunny.

gunny-cloth (gun'i-clōth), n. See gunny.

gun-pendulum (gun'pen'dū-lum), n. 1. A device for determining the strength of gunpowder. It consists of a box filled with sand bags suspended so as to swing freely on receiving the impact of a ball fired from a gun or cannon. See ballistic pendulum, under ballistic.

2. A small cannon or musket suspended horizontally in a swinging frame furnished with a fixed arc, properly graduated, and a movable pointer, for ascertaining the angular distance through which the gun oscillates in its recoil. The initial velocity of the projectile is calculated from the value of the arc of recoil. This method is now nearly obsolete.

gun-pit (gun'pit), n. A pit for receiving the mold used in casting a gun, or for receiving the tube or jacket in assembling a built-up gun.

gun-port (gun'pōrt), n. A hole in a ship's side for the muzzle of a cannon; a port-hole for a gun.

gunpowder (gun'pou'dér), n. [(ME. 2AF.) gunpowder (1422), (G. gunne, gun, + powder, powder.) An explosive mixture of saltpeter, sulphur, and charcoal, reduced to fine powder, and thoroughly incorporated with each other.

then granulated, cleaned or dusted, glazed or polished, and dried. The finished powder is employed for the discharge of projectiles from guns, to blasting, and for other purposes. The proportion of the ingredients in the composition of gunpowder varies in different countries, and with the different uses for which it is designed. The powders used for military purposes are distinguished, according to the fineness and evenness of granulation, as (a) irregular, as musket, mortar, cannon, and mammot powders; (b) regular, as cannon, pellet, hemp, epheron, epheron, and perforated (perforated hexagonal prisms) powders. These powders may have the same composition, but differ in size and form of grain, density, and method of manufacture. Musket powder is used for small arms, mortar powder for field-guns, cannon powder for light siege-guns, and the larger-grained and special powders for heavy sea-coast guns. Mixtures of a nature similar to gunpowder were known in China and India from remote times, and were especially used for rockets. The invention of gunpowder in Europe has been ascribed to Roger Bacon (about 1214-84) and to a German monk named Schwarz (about 1280), but it was probably introduced into Europe through the medium of the Moors early in the fourteenth century. Its common use in warfare dates from the sixteenth century. — Choking gunpowder. See choking, v. t. Gravimetric density of gunpowder. See density. Gunpowder paper, an explosive substance consisting of an explosive mixture spread on paper, dried, and rolled up in the form of a cartridge. — Gunpowder plot, in Eng. Hist., a conspiracy to blow up the King (James I.) and the lords and commons in the Parliament House, in 1605, in revenge for the laws against Roman Catholics. The defeat of this plot by its discovery was long celebrated publicly on the 5th of November, and still is to some extent privately, by processions and the burning in effigy of Guy Fawkes, its principal agent, who was executed. — Gunpowder tea, a fine species of green tea, being a carefully picked hyacinth, the leaves of which are rolled and rounded so as to have a granular appearance. — Smokeless gunpowder, a substitute for gunpowder which gives off little or no smoke when discharged in a gun and develops increased velocity in the projectile without increased pressure in the gun. It consists in general of an oxidizing agent and a substance added to regulate the explosive force. This latter is technically called a detergent. Smokeless powders are classified according to the oxidizer used: (1) nitric acid powders (these are not generally stable); (2) ammonium nitrate powders (these are highly hygroscopic); (3) gun-cotton powders; (4) nitrocellulose and gun-cotton powders. The first two classes have practically been abandoned. Smokeless powders are designated from their appearance, the name of the inventor, or arbitrarily, as cordite, Peyton, powder B, etc. — White gunpowder, a blasting-mixture composed of chlorate of potash, dried ferrocyanide of potassium, and sugar. It is now rarely used, owing to its liability to explode during manufacture, transportation, etc.

gunpowder-press (gun'pou-der-press), n. In gunpowder-manuf., a press for compacting mill-cake or dust-powder into hard cakes preparatory to granulating.

gun-reach (gun'rēch), n. Gunshot; the distance a gun will carry. Sydney Smith.

gun-room (gun'rōm), n. Naut., an apartment on the after part of the lower gun-deck of a man-of-war, devoted to the use of the junior officers.

gun-searcher (gun'ser-cher), n. An instrument used to search for defects in the bore of a cannon. As formerly made, it consisted of a staff with one or more projecting prongs. As now constructed, it consists of an arrangement of mirrors with a telescope light box reflected into all parts of the bore. It is carefully examined for defects with the telescope. Also called bore-searcher.

gunshot (gun'shot), n. and v. 1. n. 1. Collectively, projectiles for cannon; solid shot.

An Albanian fled to the emperor's camp, and warned them not to go, for the gunshot was high wasted. Halliday's Voyages, II. 26.

2. The reach or range of a gun; the distance to which shot can be thrown from a cannon so as to be effective; milit., the length of the point-blank range of a cannon-shot. — 3. In her., a roundel cable. — 4. The firing of a cannon.

And all Heaven and Earth with shouting, singing, hal- lowing, gun-shot and fire works all that night. Pochoa, Pilgrimage, p. 200.

II. v. Made by the shot of a gun: as, a gun-shot wound.

gun-shy (gun'shy), n. Afraid of a gun; frightened by the report of a gun: said of a field-dog.

gun-shyness (gun'shi-ness), n. The state of being gun-shy.

gun-slide (gun'slid), n. In naut. gun, the chassis on which the top-carriage carrying the gun slides in recoiling.

gun-sling (gun'sling), n. 1. A sling for lifting a gun off its carriage, or off the ground when placed under a gun or other lifting-machine.

— 2. A kind of strap or sling for carrying a shot-gun or rifle. Specifically, a leather loop or sling which buttons or buckles on the pommel of a saddle, and in which a shot-gun or rifle is so slung that it is carried across the lap of the rider. Gun-slides of this kind are in general use in the western United States, especially with the Mexican or Spanish saddle, and some modification of them is adapted to the regulation Mexican saddle used in the United States army.

gunsmith (gun'smith), n. A maker of small-arms; one whose occupation is to make or repair small firearms.

gunsmithery (gun'smith'er-i), n. [(gunsmith + -ery.)] The business of a gunsmith; the art of making small firearms; also, a place where the business of a gunsmith is carried on.

gunster (gun'ster), n. [(gun + -ster, a humorous word, coined with allusion to punter.)] One who uses a gun. Tatler. [Rare.] gun-stick (gun'stik), n. A rammer or ramrod; a stick or rail used to ram down the charge of a musket, etc.

gun-stock (gun'stok), n. The stock or wooden support in which the barrel of a gun is fixed.

gun-stocker (gun'stok'er), n. One who fits the stocks of guns to the barrels.

gun-stocking (gun'stok'ing), n. The operation of fitting the stocks of guns to the barrels.

gunstone (gun'stōn), n. 1. A stone used for the shot of a catapult or cannon. Before the invention of iron balls, stones were commonly used as projectiles.

And tell the pleasant prince, this mock of his Hath turn'd his balls to gun-stones. Shak., Hen. V., I. 2.

That I could shoot mine eyes at him like gun-stones. B. Jonson, Volpone, v. 4.

2. A flint prepared for insertion in the lock of a gun. See flint-lock.

gun-tackle (gun'tak'el), n. 1. pl. The purchases fixed to a gun-carriage, and used to run a gun in or out of a port-hole. Side tackles are on the side of the carriage, and are used to run the gun out. Train tackles are on the rear end of the carriage, and are used to run the gun in.

2. A tackle composed of a fall and two single blocks: called specifically a gun-tackle purchase.

Gunter rig. See rig.

Gunter's chain, line, quadrant, proportion, scale, etc. See the nouns.

gun-wad (gun'wad), n. A wad for a gun; specifically, a circular wad, cut with an implement known as a wad-cutter out of paste-board, cardboard, or felt, used as wadding to keep the ammunition in place either in a gun-barrel or in a paper or metal shell. For shot-guns the wads used over the shot are generally simple pieces of pasteboard, those placed over the powder are usually made of thick elastic felt, and have the edges all around treated with some substance which tends to keep the barrels from fouling. See wad.

gun-wadding (gun'wad'ing), n. The material of which gun-wads are made.

gunwale, gunnel (gun'wāl, gun'ī), n. [Prop. gunale, corrupted in sailors' pronunciation to gunnel, formerly also gunnall (cf. trunnell); so called because the upper guns used to be pointed from it; (gun + wale, a plank, the upper edge of a ship's side, next the bulwarks; see gun and wale.)]

Naut., the upper edge of a ship's side; the uppermost wale of a ship, or that piece of timber which reaches on either side from the quarter-deck to the fore-castle, being the uppermost band which finishes the upper work of the hull. The gunwale of a boat is a piece of timber going round the upper stern stake as a binder for its top work.

The first rope going upward from gunnall to gunnall. Find the boats so hard against the end of the benches that they cannot easily fall round.

Boatman, Voyages, III. 1000.

On board the ships, muzzles and field pieces were mounted on the gunwale.

Robert Fush, N. A. Rev., CXVII. 204.

gun-work (gun'wōrk), n. 1. Any machine-labor or manual labor employed in the production of ordnance. — 2. The labor of inspection or designing ordnance, or of making calculations or reports upon ordnance or ordnance subjects: as, an officer detailed upon gun-work.

The reader would expect such a column to read:

gush (gush), v. [gush, n.] 1. A sudden and violent emission of a fluid from confinement; outpouring, as of a liquid.

The gush of springs
And fall of lofty fountains
The hot gush of sunset was brightening the tops of the average field when the horses arrived.
A. Tappan, Northern Travel, p. 388.

The performance of its office by every part of the body, down even to the smallest, just as much depends on the local gush of nervous energy as it depends on the local gush of blood.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Psychol., § 64.

Every gush of dancing light has associated with it a gush of invisible radiant heat, which far transcends the light in energy.
Tyndall, Radiation, § 10.

2. Effusive display of sentiment.—3. [Prov. a var. of gush]. A gush of wind. [Prov. Eng.] gusher (gush'er), n. 1. That which gushes; specifically, in local (American) use, an oil-well which throws out a very large quantity of oil without having to be pumped.

A gusher is a well which throws out large quantities of oil; a record of eleven thousand barrels a day has been reached by one well.
St. Nicholas, XIV, 67.

To-day the People's Natural Gas Company, of Pittsburg, struck an immense gusher . . . at a depth of 1450 feet.
Philadelphia Times, March 11, 1903.

2. One who is demonstratively emotional or sentimental.

gushing (gush'ing), p. a. 1. Escaping with force, as a fluid; flowing copiously.

Of valleys low, where the mild whippers use
Of shades, and wanton winds, and gushing brooks.
Milton, Lycidas, l. 157.

2. Emitting copiously: as, a gushing spring.

Soon as thy letters trembling I unclose, . . .
Like after line my gushing eyes overflow.
Pope, Eloisa to Abelard, l. 23.

3. Exuberantly and demonstratively emotional; given to or characterized by gush: as, a gushing girl; a gushing letter.

To add to the atmosphere of danger which surrounded this gushing young person, she is placed at the outset of the story in a cold, not to say false position. She is a wife in nothing but name. Saturday Rev., Feb. 10, 1900.
—Syn. 3. Sentimental, hysterical, etc. (in style) See bombast.

gushingly (gush'ing-ly), adv. 1. In a gushing manner.

Rivers, which flow gushingly.
With many windings through the vale.
Byron, Child Harold, iv. 71.

2. With extravagant display of sentiment or feeling: as, to write or speak gushingly.

gushy (gush'i), a. [gush + -y]. Displaying or characterized by gush; effusively sentimental: as, a gushy description. [Colloq. and contemptuous].

gusing-iron (gū'sing-ī'ern), n. [See; cf. Se. guse = E. goose, q. v.] A laundress' smoothing-iron.

gusset (gus'et), n. [Formerly also gusket; cf. OF. gousset, gousset, F. gousset, the armpit, a triangular space left between two joints of armor, a piece of plate used to cover such space, a triangular piece or gore of cloth, a bracket, also (mod. F. only) a job or watch-pocket (cf. OF. goussette, goussette, f., a little husk or hull, dim. of gousse = It. guscia, dial. guscia, guscia, gusa, gusa, a husk, hull, pod, shell; of uncertain origin, prob. Teut., being perhaps a var. of the form which appears as F. houser, a covering, mat, mantle, etc. (see house, housing), ult. related with E. hull: see hull.) A triangular plate or piece of cloth inserted or attached, to protect, strengthen, or fill out some part of a thing: a gore. Specifically—(a) The triangular space left at each joint of the body between two adjacent pieces of plate-armor. This was covered with chain-mail, and in addition many devices were tried, such as roundels and the like, leading in the elaborate pauldron, cabbire, goussetiere, etc. (b) The filling, as of chain mail, of the above. (c) The device or plate used to protect the gusset (a).

A horseman's brace, gusset-armor for the armpits, leg-harness, and a gorget. Uryschart, tr. of Rabelais, l. 27.

The oval pallor or gusset of plate which protects the left armpit.
J. R. Planché.

In the preceding senses also gusset.

(d) An angular piece of iron or a kind of bracket fastened to the angles of a structure to give strength or stiffness.
(e) An angular piece of iron inserted in a boiler, tank, etc., where it changes from a cylindrical to a square form, as at the junction of the barrel and fire-box of a locomotive.
(f) A triangular piece of cloth inserted in a garment to strengthen or enlarge some part.

Seam and gusset and band Band and gusset and seam.
Hood, Song of the Shirt.

(g) In her., same as gusset.
gusset (gus'et), v. t. [gusset, n.] To make with a gusset; insert a gusset into, as a garment.

Everybody knew that every girl in the place was always making, mending, cutting-out, bustling, gussing, trimming, turning, and cooing.
W. Bennett, Fifty Years Ago, p. 91.

gust (gust), n. [Ice. gústr, a gust, blast (cf. gústr, a gust), = Norw. gust, a gust of wind, = Sw. dial. gust, a stream of air from an oven; cf. Ice. gústr, gust, break out, as a furnace, volcano, and the like, Sw. dial. gústr, blow, puff, rook; see gush, CF. E. dial. gust, n., 3, a gust of wind.] 1. A sudden squall or blast of wind; a sudden rushing or driving of the wind, of short duration.

And what at first was call'd a gust, the same Hath now a storm, a sullen tempest name.
Dante, The Storm.

A fresher gale
Begins to wave the wood, and stir the stream, Sweeping with shadowy gusts the fields of corn.
Thomson, Summer, l. 1000.

2. A sudden outburst, as of passionate feeling.

Any sudden gust of passion (as an ecstasy of love in an unexpected meeting) cannot better be expressed than in a word and a sigh, breaking one another.
Dryden, Essay on Dram. Poesy.

Lord Darnley . . . was naturally very subject to passion; but the short Gust was soon over, and served only to set off the charms of his temper.
Prior, Poems, Ded.

—Syn. 1. Squall, etc. See windy, n.

gust (gust), n. [= OF. goust, F. goust (> E. goust) = Sp. Ig. It. gusto (> E. gusto), cf. L. gustus, a tasting, taste, > gustare, taste; allied to Gr. gízō, taste, Skt. √ gush, enjoy, AS. cōstan, E. choose, select; see choose.] 1. The sense or pleasure of tasting; relish; gusto.

Were they sprats as dear, they would be as toothsome as anchovies, for then their peck would give a high peck unto them in the judgment of palat men.
Parker, Worthies, Essex.

The whole vegetable tribe have lost their gust with us.
Lamb, Times before Meat.

2. Gratification of any kind, especially that which is sensual; pleasure; enjoyment.

The life of the spirit . . . is lessened and impaired, according as the gusts of the flesh grow high and rapid.
J. Taylor, Works (ed. 1854), l. 90.

My sight, and smell, and hearing were employ'd,
And all three senses in full gust enjoy'd.
Dryden, Flower and Leaf, l. 139.

One who courted contempt abroad, in order to feel with keener gust the pleasure of pre-eminence at home.
Goldsmid, Citizen of the World, III.

3. Turn of fancy; intellectual taste.

A choice of it may be made according to the gust and manner of the ancients.
Dryden.

He . . . calls him a blockhead as well as an atheist, one who had "as small a gust for the exigencies of expression as the sacredness of the matter."
Whipple, Mass. and Rev., II, 77.

gust (gust), v. t. [L. gustare, taste; from the noun.] To taste; enjoy the taste of; have a relish for.

The palate of this age gusts nothing high.
See F. R. Ravanne, on Beaumont and Fletcher's Plays.

gustable (gus'ta-bil) a. and n. [gust + -able.] 1. a. 1. Capable of being tasted; tastable.

A blind man cannot conceive colours, but either as some audible, gustable, odorous, or tactile qualities.
Glazebrook, Vanity of Dogmatizing, vii.

2. Pleasant to the taste; having a pleasant relish.

Of so many thousand wells this only affordeth gustable waters; and that so excellent that the basin . . . drinks of no other.
Sandys, Travels, p. 100.

II. n. That which is pleasant to the taste.

The touch acknowledgeth no gustable,
The taste no fragrant smell.
Dr. H. More, Psychathanaia, II, II, 4.

gustation (gus'ta-shun), n. [= F. gustation = Sp. gustación = It. gustazione, cf. L. gustatio], gustare, taste; see gust, v.] The act of tasting; the sense of taste; the gustatory function.

Senses of taste and touch, gustation and tactition.
Coxe, Key to S. A. Birds, p. 181.

gustative (gus'ta-tiv), a. [= F. gustatif = Sp. It. gustativo, cf. NL. gustatorius, cf. L. gustare, taste; see gust, v.] Of or pertaining to the sense of taste; gustatory.

The ninth pair, or gustative nerve, is organized for the appreciation of taste only.
La Costa, Night, Int., p. 10.

gustatory (gus'ta-tō-ri), a. [NL. gustatorius, cf. L. gustare, taste; see gust, v.] Of or pertaining to gustation or tasting.

In his first cautious sip of the wine, and the gustatory skill with which he gave his palate the full advantage of it, it was impossible not to recognize the connoisseur.
Hawthorne, Mithræan, xxi.

How the gustatory faculty is exhausted for a time by a strong taste, daily experience teaches.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Psychol., § 64.

Gustatory buds. See bud.—Gustatory nerve, a nerve, one of the inner extremities of a nerve, with filamentous ends and a large spherical central part, surrounded by the cortical cells of the taste-bud. See nerve corpuscles. See nerve.—Gustatory nerve, a nerve of sensation, the lingual branch of the third division of the fifth cranial nerve, distributed to the tongue and contributing to the sense of taste. It is more properly called the lingual nerve.

Gustavian (gus'ta-vi-an), a. Pertaining to any Swedish king of the name of Gustavus; specifically, in Swedish literary history, pertaining to the reigns of Gustavus III. and Gustavus IV. (1771-1809), in which period the national literature was especially flourishing.

The poets of the Gustavian period form two groups according to the prevalence, respectively, of the French and the national element.

R. Anderson, tr. of Horn's Scandinavian Lit., III, 4.

gustful (gust'ful), a. [gust + -ful]. Attended with gusts; gusty; squally.

A gustful April morn
That puff'd the swaying branches.
Tennyson, Holy Grail.

gustful (gust'ful), a. [gust + -ful]. Taste-ful; palatable.

The base buds which Vice useth to leave behind it makes Virtue afterwards far more gustful.
Hawthorne, Letters, II, 2.

The said season being passed, there is no danger or difficulty to keep it gustful all the year long.
Sir K. Digby, Power of Sympathy.

gustfulness (gust'ful-ness), n. The quality of being gustful or full of savour.

Then his diversions and recreations have a lively gustfulness, thus his sleep is very sound and pleasant.
Bacon, Works, III, 224.

gustless (gust'less), a. [gust + -less]. Tasteless.

No gustless or unsatisfying offal.
See T. Browne, Misc. Tracts, p. 12.

gusto (gus'to), n. [It. Ig. Sp. gusto = OF. goust, F. goust, cf. L. gustus, taste, relish; see gust, v.] Appreciative taste or enjoyment; keen relish; zest.

Set yourself on designing after the ancient Greeks;—because they are the rule of beauty, and give us a good gusto.
Dryden, tr. of Imitatio of the Art of Painting, note.

The royal supremacy is repeatedly insisted upon in terms one may almost say of gusto, such as Cromwell would have heartily approved.

A. W. Ward, Eng. Dram. Lit., I, 7.

It will be found true, I believe, in a majority of cases, that the artist writes with more gusto and effect of those things which he has only wished to do, than of those which he has done.

R. L. Stevenson, A Humble Remonstrance.

gustoso (gū'stō'so), a. [It. < gusto, taste; see gust, v.]. Tasty; used in mode to direct that a passage be rendered with taste.

gusty (gus'ti), a. [= See gust, v.; cf. gust + -y]. 1. Marked by gusts or squalls of wind; fitfully windy or stormy.

In which time we had store of snow with some gusty weather.
Hakluyt's Voyages, III, 646.

For once, upon a raw and gusty day,
The troubled Tiber chafing with her shores.
Shak., J. C., I, 2.

2. Given to sudden bursts of passion; excitable; irritable.

Little "brown girls" with gusty temperaments seldom do the sensible thing.
Saturday Rev., Feb. 10, 1900.

gusty (gus'ti), a. [gust + -y]. Pleasant to the taste; savory; gustful. [Scotch].

The rustic Germans, Russians, and the Poles, Shall feed with pleasure on our gusty shoals of fish.
Hawley, Travels, I, 170.

gut (gut), v. [ME. gut, gutte, gutte, cf. AN. gut (pl. guttas), intestine; orig. a 'channel,' a source found in E. dial. gut, also gote, goyt, gout, gote, gut, gote, etc.; ME. gutte, gote, gote, a channel of water, a drain (= ML. gote, a channel, D. gutt = It. gusce, gutter, sewer, sink, water-pipe, rain-pipe, = Sw. guta, a leak, = Dan. gude, a lane); cf. AN. guttan (pret. pl. guttas, pp. guten), pour out, intr. flow, stream, = It. guten = O. gusen = Ice. guta, gut, etc. = Sw. guta = Dan. gude, pour. see gush.] 1. (a) Either the whole or a distinct division of that part of the alimentary canal of an animal which extends from the stomach to the anus; the intestinal canal, or any part of it; an intestine: as, the large gut; the small gut; the blind gut, or cecum. (b) In the plural, the bowels; the whole mass formed by the natural convolutions of the intestinal canal in the abdomen. (c) biol., the whole intestinal tube, alimentary canal, or digestive tract; the enteric tube, mouth to anus. See intestine, stomodæum, intestinum.

Gut is used indifferently for the whole or for any part of the physiological entity which reaches from the oral to the anal aperture.

M. H. Lockwood, Pref. to Gegenbaur's Comp. Anat., p. xiv.
2. The whole digestive system; the viscera; the entrails in general; commonly in the plural. [Law.]

Both sea and land are ransack'd for the feast,
And his own gut the sole invited guest.
Dryden, Tr. of Juvenal's Satires, l. 277.

Greedy devouring the raw guts of fowls. Grainger.

3. The substance forming the case of the intestine; intestinal tissue or fiber: as, sheep's gut; calf-gut.

Gut-spinning is the twisting of prepared gut into cord of various diameter for various purposes. — 1. n., for ordinary gut, for use in machinery, and for saddle stings. Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 319.

4. A preparation of the intestines of an animal used for various purposes, as for the strings of a violin, or, in angling, for the snood or leader to which the hook or lure is attached. In the latter case the material, called in full silk-worm gut, is not true gut, but is formed from the fiber drawn out from a silk-worm killed when it is just ready to spin its cocoon.

5. A narrow passage; particularly, a narrow channel of water; a strait; a long narrow inlet.

North of it, in a gut of the hill, was the Fish pool of Eden.

We . . . looked down upon the straggling village of Port Hawkesbury and the winding Gut of Canso.

C. D. Warner, Haddock, v.

Branchial gut. See branchial. Fore-gut, in anat., the anterior section of the primitive alimentary canal in vertebrate embryos. From it are developed the pharynx, esophagus, stomach, and duodenum. Mid-gut, in anat., the posterior part of the primitive alimentary canal, giving origin to parts of the intestine in the neighborhood of the anus, but extending from that point backward in a subanal or postanal prolongation. See epigastrium. Mid-gut, in anat., the middle part of the primitive alimentary canal, from which is developed the greater part of the intestine. — To have guts in the brains; to have senses. [Law.]

Quoth Ralpho, "Truly that is no
Rari matter for a man to do
That has but any guts in a braine."

N. Butler, Hudibras, l. iii. 1091.

The fellow's well enough, if he had any guts in his head.

Swift, Polite Conversation, l.

gut (gut, v. t.; pret. and pp. gutted, ppr. gutting). [ME. gutten; from the noun.] 1. To cut out the entrails of; disembowel; eviscerate.

The fishermen save the most part of their fish: some are gutted, split, powdered, and dried.

R. Carey, Survey of Cornwall.

2. To plunder of contents; destroy or strip the interior of; as, the burglars gutted the store.

In half an hour the lately splendid residence of the proprietor of the greatest private banking house in London was gutted from cellar to ridge pole.

J. Huethorne, Dust, p. 311.

gut-formed (gut'fôrm'd), a. Formed like a gut. The term is applied by Darwin to two glands which lie on each side of the stomach of arthropods, considered by him as probably accessory glands of the reproductive organs, analogous to those which secrete the walls of the ovaries in coelopoda. See second cut under Balanus. Gutierrezia (gû'ti-er-er-er-er-er), n. [NL. < Gutierrez, the name of a noble Spanish family.] A genus of asteroid composites, of the western United States, Mexico, and extratropical South America. They are low, glabrous, and often glutinous herbs or suffrutescent plants, with linear leaves and small heads of yellow flowers. Of the 30 species, 5 are found in the United States.

gut-length (gut'length), n. A length of silk-worm gut, usually, as imported into the United States, from 12 to 15 inches, employed for leaders and snells by anglers. See gut, 4.

gutting, n. [gut + ling.] A glutton.

The poets wanted no sport the while, who made their selves blithely merry with decanting upon the lean skulls and the fat pomegranates of these lazy gutlings.

Dr. Sanderson, Works, (III. 100.)

gut-scraper (gut'skräp'er), n. A scraper of cutgut; a fiddle-player. [Contemptuous.]

gutta (gut'tä), n.; pl. gutte (gû'tä), [L., a drop; see gutta.] 1. drop; specifically, a drop of a secretion, one of a series of pendent ornaments, generally in the form of a cone, but sometimes cylindrical, attached to the under side of the mutules and regulæ of the Doric entablature. They probably represent wooden pegs or treasels which occupied these positions in primitive wooden constructions. Also called trussel. 2. In phar., a drop; usually, and in prescription, written gt., plural gtt.—3. In zool., a small spot, generally of a round or oval form, and not differing much in shade from the ground-color, as if made by a drop of water; any small color-spot, especially when guttiform. — Gum gutta. Same as gamboge. — Gutta serena, an old medical name for amnesia. gutta (gut'tä), n. [F. gutte; < Malay gutah, gutah, guttah, gum, balsam.] Same as gutta-percha.

gutta-percha (gut'tä-per'chä), n. [*< Malay gutah (also written guttah, gutah, etc.), gum, balsam, + percha (also written perga, etc.), said to be the name of the tree producing this gum, or rather of one of the species, the Malay name of the Isanandra Gutta being taban (also written tuban, etc.). Cf. Pulo or Pulau percha, a former name of Sumatra, lit. the island of the percha-tree.] The concrete juice of an evergreen sapiferous tree, Hebeopsis (Isanandra) Gutta, common in the jungles of the Malay peninsula and archipelago. It is a grayish or yellowish odorless and tasteless substance, nearly insoluble, at ordinary temperatures hard, tough, and somewhat horny, and flexible only in thin plates. At 150° to 140° F. it is sufficiently soft to be rolled into plates, and it becomes very soft at the temperature of boiling water. It is soluble in boiling ether, chloroform, benzol, coal tar oils, bisulphide of carbon, and oil of turpentine, and with caustic soda it is readily vulcanized. Gutta-percha is used for a great variety of purposes, as for insulating electric wires, in the manufacture of hose, tubing, and other flexible goods, as a substitute for leather, in masts and cements, for splints and various surgical implements, etc. A similar product is obtained from other species of Hebeopsis and of several allied genera. Also called gutta-taban.*

gutta-putih (gut'tä-pû'ti), n. [Malay.] A gum obtained from Pongamia Leerd, whiter and more spongy than gutta-percha. Also called gutta-sundek.

guttarama (gut'tä-rä'mä), n. [H. Amer.] The violet organist, Euphonia violacea, a South American tanager.

gutta-rambong (gut'tä-ram'bung), n. [Malay.] A reddish-brown gum closely resembling caoutchouc, probably obtained from the roots of Ficus elastica.

gutta-shea (gut'tä-sheä), n. [Malay.] A by-product obtained from shea-butter in the manufacture of soap. The milky juice of Betern-spermum Parkii, the fruit of which yields shea butter, is said to have when dried all the properties of gutta-percha.

gutta-singgarip (gut'tä-sing'gar-rip), n. [Malay.] A soft and spongy gum obtained from Willughbeia firma, an apocynaceous Malayan climber.

gutta-sundek (gut'tä-sun'dek), n. [Malay.] Same as gutta-putih.

gutta-taban (gut'tä-tä'ban), n. [Malay.] Same as gutta-percha.

guttate (gut'tä), a. [< L. guttatus, < gutta, a drop; see gutta.] 1. Containing drops or drop-like masses, either solid or more or less liquid, often resembling nuclei.—2. In bot., spotted, as if by drops of something colored.—3. In zool., having drop-shaped or guttiform spots.

guttated (gut'tä-ted), a. [< L. gutta, a drop.] Same as guttate.

guttation (gu-tä'shen), n. [< guttate + -ion.] The act of dropping or of flowing in drops.

gutta-trap (gut'tä-träp), n. The inspissated juice of the Artocarpus lacucha, or eastern bread-tree, used for its glutinous properties in making bird-line.

gutté, gutty (gut'tä, -i), n. [< OF. gutte, gutte, spotted, < L. guttatus, spotted, guttate; see guttate.] In her., covered with representations of drops of liquid; an epithet always used with words explaining the tincture of the drops.—Gutte reversed, in her., charged with drops like those of gutta, with the bulb or globe of the drop upward.

gutted (gut'ted), a. 1. Having entrails.—2. Having the entrails removed; disemboweled; as, gutted herring.

gutter (gut'ter), n. [< ME. gutter, < OF. gutiere, gutiere, F. guttiere, < OF. altes gutier, guttier, m.] (= Fr. Sp. gotera = Pg. gutiera, l.), a gutter, orig. a channel for receiving the drippings from the roof. [< OF. gake, goutte, F. goutte = Fr. Sp. Pg. gota, a drop, < L. gutta, a drop; see gutta.] 1. A narrow channel at the eaves or on the roof of a building, at the sides of a road or a street, or elsewhere, for carrying off water or other fluid; a conduit; a trough.

Let me make gutter in to the ditch.

Marlow (R. R. T. R.), l. 38.

He dugged out a gutter to receive the water when it was pressed, and he set it further down a well down in it.

J. Cook, On Lake St.

Can my frozen gutters choose but run
That feel the warmth of such a glorious sun?
Quarles, Emblems, v. 3.

Like a river down the gutter runs
The rain, the welcome rain!
Longfellow, Rain in Summer.

2. A furrow; especially, a furrow made by the action of water.

Rocks rise one above another, and have deep gutters worn in the sides of them by torrents of rain.

Addison, Travels in Italy.

34. A passageway; a secret passage.

This Troyan, right plausibly for to say,
Is though a pater, by a privy went,
Into my chamber soon in all this rye.

Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 747.

4. pl. Mud; mire; dirt. [Scotch.]—5. In Australian gold-mining, the lower auriferous part of the channel of an old river of the Tertiary age, now often deeply covered by volcanic materials and detrital deposits.—6. In mining, one of a number of pieces of wood or metal, channelled in the center with a groove or gutter, used to separate the pages of type in a form. Also gutter-stick.—7. In entom., any groove or elongate depression, especially when it serves as a receptacle for a part or an organ; specifically, a fold or deflexed and incurved space on the posterior wing of a lepidopterous insect, adjoining the inner edge, and embracing the abdomen from above downward when the wings are at rest.—8. In carpenter-work, etc., a slight depression. Flutings and grooves are always in series; the term gutter is used rather for a single depression or one of two or three.

gutter (gut'ter), v. [< gutter, n.] 1. trans. 1. To furrow, groove, or channel, as by the flow of a liquid.

My cheeks are guttered with my fretting tears. Sandys.

As irrelevant to the daylight as a last night's guttered candle.

George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, l. 3.

2. To conduct off, as by a trough or gutter.

Transplanting hem is best after yores two.
So guttering the water from hem selves.

Faustina, Husbandrie (E. K. T. R.), p. 211.

3. To provide with gutters: as, to gutter a house.

II. intrans. 1. To become channelled by the flow of melted tallow or wax, as a burning candle.—2. To let fall drops, as of melted tallow from a candle.

The discourse was cut short by the sudden appearance of Charley on the scene with a face and hands of hideous blackness, and a nose guttering like a candle.

T. Hardy, Under the Greenwood Tree, vii.

gutter (gut'ter), n. [< gut + -er.] One who guts fish in dressing them.

When we drew near we found they were but the fish curers' gutters and packers at work.

Harpers' Mag., LXXVII. 300.

gutter (gut'ter), v. t. [< F. gutte; appar. a freq. from gut, n.] To devour greedily. Halliwel.

Guttera (gut'tä-rä), n. [NL., irreg. < L. gutta, a drop, + -era.] A genus of crested guineasfowls. The type is G. cristata; there are several other species. Wagler, 1832.

Crested Guinea-fowl (Guttera cristata).

gutter-blood (gut'ter-blud), n. A base-born person; one sprung from the lowest ranks of society. [Rare.]

In rushed a thorough Edinburgh gutter-blood, a rugged rascal, every dud upon whose back was bidding good-day to the other.

Scott, Fortunes of Nigel, i.

gutter-boarding (gut'ter-bôr'ding), n. Same as layer-boarding.

gutter-cock (gut'ter-kok), n. The water-rail, Botaurus aquaticus. [Cornwall, Eng.] gutter-flag (gut'ter-flag), n. A flag displayed to indicate the position of the gutter or channel in a mine under ground. [Australia.]

Gutter (Architectural). A form of gutter beneath mutules and regulæ.

guttula (gut'tú-lá), n.; pl. guttulae (-læ). [L., dim. of gutta, a drop.] A small drop; specifically, in catenae, a small gutta or spot of color.

guttulate (gut'tú-lát), a. [Guttula + -ate.] 1. Composed of small round vesicles. — 2. In bot., containing fine drops, or drop-like particles; minutely guttate.

guttulous (gut'tú-lus), a. [Guttula + -ous.] In the form of small drops.

It [the] is plain upon the surface of the water, but round in bell, which is also a glaciation, and figured in its guttulous descent from the air. See T. Brown, Valg. Rev., II. 1.

guttur (gut'tér), n.; pl. guttura (gut'tú-rá). [L., the throat. Hence ult. goiter.] 1. The throat. [Rare.]

The letters which we commonly call guttural, g, k, have nothing to do with the guttur, but with the root of the tongue and the soft palate.

Max Müller, Sci. of Lang., 2d ser., p. 164.

2. In ornith., the whole throat or front of the neck of a bird, including gula and jugulum; opposed to caput, or the back of the neck.

The front of the neck has been needlessly subdivided. Guttur is a term sometimes used to include gula and jugulum together; it is simply equivalent to "throat."

Cress, Key to N. A. Birds, p. 26.

guttural (gut'tú-rál), a. and n. [= P. guttural = Sp. guttural = Pg. guttural = It. gutturale, 168

< NL. gutturale, < L. guttur, the throat; see gutter.] 1. a. Of or pertaining to the throat; formed in or as in the throat; as, the guttural (superior thyroid) artery; a guttural sound; guttural speech.

The harsh guttural Indian language, in the fervent eloquence of his loving study, was melted into a written dialect.

H. A. Howe, Hidtown, p. 3.

The guttural character of Spanish is quite alien to the genius of Italian speech.

G. P. Lathrop, Spanish Notes, p. 104.

Guttural fonn. See fon.

II. n. A sound or combination of sounds pronounced in the throat, or in the back part of the mouth toward the throat, as k; any guttural sound or utterance. In the English alphabet the so-called gutturals are k (written with k, c hard, q, and sometimes ch), g, and ng. They are also called back vowels, or palatals simply, since the name guttural implies a false description, as if the sounds were actually made in the gutter or throat. The same name is given to similar sounds of other languages, also to rough or rasping sounds, as the German ch.

Many words which are soft and musical in the mouth of a Persian may appear very harsh to our ears, with a number of consonants and gutturals.

See W. Jones, Eastern Poetry, I.

Carotet dismayed his colleagues by the visibility with which he addressed his Majesty in German. They listened with envy and terror to the mysterious gutturals which might possibly convey suggestions very little in unison with their wishes. Macaulay, Walpole's Letters.

gutturality (gut'tú-rál-í-ti), n. [Guttural + -ity.] The quality of being guttural; gutturalness. [Rare.]

Guy - as grace to us, and govern us here, in this wretched world, thowse verous lyeysage.

Morte Arthure (R. E. T. S. 1. 4).

O lord, my soule and eek my body gye Unweaned, lest that I confounded be.

Chaucer, Second Nun's Tale, I. 130.

So of my schip gyped in the rothir, That y no may crye for wawe nor wynde.

Indrago, MS. No. Antiq., 124, f. 1 (Halliwell.)

A written staff his steps unstable gues, Which servd his feeble members to uphold.

Parfais, tr. of Tasso, x. 9.

2. In nautical and mechanical use, to keep in place, steady, or direct by means of a guy.

As the Japanese have no bridge on the new worth speaking of, the ponderous optical helms must be gyped in by cables of twine slung round the ears.

Hurley's Mag., LXXVI. 711.

guy (gi), n. [OF. guy, guy, a guide, a crane or derrick, = Sp. guy, a guide, etc., a small rope used on board ship to keep weighty things in their places; from the verb; see guy, v., and cf. guide, n.] A rope or other appliance used to steady something. Especially — (a) A rope attached to an object which is being hoisted or lowered, to steady it. (b) A rope which trims or steadies a boom, spar, or yard in a ship. (c) A rope or rail, generally a wire rope, attached to any stationary object to keep it steady or prevent oscillation, as the rods which are attached to a suspension bridge and to the land on each side, or the stay rope of a derrick. See guy (noun), a guy to keep the boom of a fore-and-aft sail from jibing.

guy (gi), n. [Short for Guy Fawkes; see def. 1.] 1. A grotesque effigy intended to represent Guy Fawkes, the chief conspirator in the gunpowder plot. Such an effigy was formerly burned annually in England, on the 5th of November, the anniversary of the discovery of the gunpowder plot. See gunpowder plot, under gunpowder.

Once on a fifth of November I found a Guy trusted to take care of himself there, while his proprietors had gone to dinner.

Diobon, Uncommercial Traveller, xxi.

Hence — 2. A person grotesque in dress, looks, or manners; a dandy; a "fright."

"What extreme gaze those artistic fellows usually are!" said young (Haddock to Gwendolen. "Do look at the figure he cuts."

George Eliot, Imperial Dancers, I.

guy (gi), v. t. [guy, n.] To treat as a guy; jeer at or make fun of; ridicule.

Passes through the streets of Paris, and is gyped by some of those who see him go by.

The American, VII. 21.

guydon, n. See guydon.

guylet, v. t. An obsolete spelling of guy.

guy-rope (gi'rop), n. A rope used to steady a spar, purchase, etc.; a guy.

guz (güz), n. [A corruption of gules?] In her, a roundel, murrey or sanguine.

guzzle, n. See guzzle.

guzzle (guz'), v.; pret. and pp. guzzled, pp. guzzling. [Perhaps < OF. guzziller, in comp. desguzziller, gulp down, swallow; this in perhaps connected with F. guzer, the throat. CL. Lorraine guze, the throat, the stomach of fatted animals, It. guzzo, the throat, the crop of a bird. Prob. not connected etymologically with guddle or guttle.] 1. intrans. To swallow liquor greedily; swill; drink much; drink frequently.

Well scann'd howls the guzzler's spirit rales, Who, while she guzzles, chews the doctor's pails.

ymnastic (jim-nas'tik), a. [< ymnasium + -ic.] Of or pertaining to a gymnasium or classical school; as, ymnastic. [Rare.]

ymnasium (jim-nā'si-um), n. pl. gymnasies, gymnasiums (-s, -umz). [= F. gymnase = Sp.

gimnasio = Pg. gymnasio = It. ginnasio, < L. gymnasium, < Gr. γυμνασιον, a public place where athletic exercises were practised, < γυμνάζειν, train naked, train in athletic exercises, < γυμνός, naked, stripped, lightly clad.] 1. In Gr. antiquity, a public place for instruction in and the practice of athletic exercises; a feature of all Greek communities. It was at first merely an open space of ground, but was later elaborated into an extensive establishment, with porticos, courts, chambers, baths, etc., lavishly decorated with works of art, and facilities for the instruction of the mind, as libraries and lecture-rooms, were often combined with it. The gymnasium was distinctively a Greek institution and never found high favor in Rome, though introduced by some admirers of the Greeks under the late republic and the empire. Hence—2. In modern use, a place where or a building in which athletic exercises are taught and performed.

It [Moorefield] was likewise the great gymnasium of our Capital, the resort of wrestlers, boxers, runners, and football players, and the scene of every manly recreation. Payson, London, p. 246.

3. A school or seminary for the higher branches of literature and science; a school preparatory to the university, especially in Germany; a classical as opposed to a technical school.

gymnast (jim'nast), n. [< Gr. γυμναστής, a trainer of professional athletes, < γυμνάζειν, train in athletic exercises; see gymnasium.] One who is skilled in athletic exercises; one who is expert in or is a teacher of gymnastics.

gymnastic (jim-nas'tik), a. and n. [= D. gymnastiek = G. gymnastik, n. = F. gymnastique, n. and n. = Sp. gymnástica, n., gymnástica, n. = Pg. gymnástica, n., gymnástica, n. = It. gymnastico, a., gymnastica, n. < L. gymnasticus, < Gr. γυμναστικός, pertaining to athletic exercises (from γυμνάζειν, gymnastikein, < γυμνάζειν, train in athletic exercises; see gymnasium, gymnasium).] 1. a. 1. Pertaining to athletic exercises of the body, intended for health, defence, or diversion.

The funeral [of Caligula] was followed, as ording to an old Greek usage, by a horse-race, and by gymnastic and musical contests. Sp. Theatrical Hist., Grece, IV.

The long course of gymnastic training, without which the final agonistic triumph could not have been attained, was regarded in antiquity as an essential part of the education of every free man, a duty which he owed his country. C. T. Seeley, Art and Archaeol., p. 323.

2. Pertaining to disciplinary exercises for the intellect.—3. Athletic; vigorous. [Rare.]

To secure
A form, not now gymnastic as of yore,
From ticks and distortion. Compter, Trick, II, 501.

II. n. 1. Athletic exercise; athletics.—2. Disciplinary exercise for the intellect or character.

These uses of geometry [accuracy of observation and definiteness of imagination] have been strangely neglected by both friends and foes of this intellectual gymnastic. F. Hill, True Order of Studies, p. 28.

Before he [the student] can choose and preserve a fitting key of words, he should long have practised the literary scales, and it is only after years of such gymnastic that he can sit down at last, legions of words awaiting to his call, dozens of turns of phrase simultaneously bidding for his choice. R. L. Stevenson, A College Magazine, I.

3. A teacher of gymnastics; a gymnast. [Rare.] gymnastical (jim-nas'ti-kal), a. [< gymnastic + -al.] Same as gymnastic. [Rare.]

gymnastically (jim-nas'ti-kal-i), adv. In a gymnastic manner; athletically; so as to fit for violent exertion.

Such as with agility and vigour . . . are not gymnastically composed, are actively use these parts. St. T. Brown, Vulg. Err., IV, 5.

gymnasticize (jim-nas'ti-si-z), v. t. pref. and pp. gymnasticized, ppr. gymnasticizing. [Gymnastic + -ize.] To practise gymnastic or athletic exercises. Also spelled gymnastice.

Free during the holidays make Arthur rick hard and stout often, and in short, gymnasticize in every possible manner. A. J. C. Barr, To Mrs. Stanley, 1828.

gymnastics (jim-nas'tiks), n. sing. or pl. [Pl. of gymnastic + -ics.] The art of performing athletic exercises; also, athletic exercises; feats of skill or address, mental or bodily.

The horse is an exercise unto which they have so natural a disposition and address, that the whole earth doth not contain so many aculeuses dedicated wholly to this discipline, and other martial gymnastics. Divion, State of France.

But you must not think to discredit these gymnastics by a little railing, which has its foundation only in modern prejudices. Sp. Hard, Age of Queen Elizabeth.

gymnaxony (jim-nak'si-ni), n. [< Gr. γυμνασία, naked, + axis, axis.] A rare monstrosity in flowers, in which the placenta with its ovules is protruded from an orifice in the ovary.

Gymnetidae (jim-net'i-de), n. pl. [NL., < Gymnetis + -idae.] A family of scaraboid beetles, comprising 6 genera, having the scutellum hidden entirely or almost entirely by the prothoracic lobe. There are many American, African, and East Indian species. Burmester, 1842.

Gymnetis (jim-net'i-sis), n. [NL. (MacLeay, 1819), < Gr. γυμνός, fem. of γυμνός, naked, bare.] The typical genus of the family Gymnetidae. It is confined to America, and comprises over 100 species, all but two of which are South American. They are of medium size or rather large, and of characteristic aspect. The pattern of the markings is very variable, but none have metallic colors, and all are covered with a velvety effluence. They are found upon leaves in forests.

Gymnetis soldier. (Line shows natural size.)

gymnic (jim'nik), a. and n. [Formerly also gymnick; < F. gymnique = Sp. gymnico = Pg. gymnico = It. gymnico, < L. gymnicus, < Gr. γυμνικός, of or for athletic exercises, < γυμνός, naked; see gymnasium.] 1. a. Gymnastic. [Obsolete or archaic.]

Have they not sword players, and every sort of gymnick artists, wrestlers, tilers, runners? Milton, B. A., I, 1234.

He [Alexander] offered sacrifices, and made games of music, and gymnick sports, and exercises in honour of his gods. Abp. Parker, Annals.

In Carian steel
Now Meltheus from the gymnic school,
Where he was daily exercised in arms, Approach'd. Glover, Atheneid, viii.

II. n. Athletic exercise

The country hath its recreations, the City has several gymnics and exercises. Burton, Anat. of Mol., p. 313.

gymnical (jim'ni-kal), a. [< gymnic + -al.] Same as gymnic.

gymnite (jim'ni-ti), n. [So called in allusion to the locality, Bare Hills in Maryland; < Gr. γυμνός, naked, bare, + -itis.] A mineral consisting of a hydrous silicate of magnesium; same as deweyite.

gymno- [< Gr. γυμνός, naked, bare; see gymnasium.] An element in some scientific compounds of Greek origin, meaning 'naked,' 'bare'; correlated with phano- or phanero-, and opposed to crypto-, etc.

Gymnoblaster (jim-no-blas-té'g), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. γυμνός, naked, + blastos, germ.] In Allman's system, an order of hydriform polyps, corresponding to the Anthomedusae of Haeckel's later system, and commonly known as tubularian hydroids (in distinction from both campanularian and scutularian hydroids, which are calypthoblastic). They are hydromedusae which pass through a hydriform phase, and in which medusiform bodies are developed. Though the scutellum may secrete a horny tubular protective case or perisarc, it forms no cups for the reception of the crown of tentacles, or even inclosing groups of medusiform buds. In other words, no hydrotheca or gonangia are present, whence the name of the order. The developed medusae have no ocyysts or tentaculocysts, but have ocelli at the bases of the tentacles, usually 4 or 6 in number, corresponding to the number of the radial enteric canals; the sexual glands are placed in the wall of the manubrium. The Gymnoblasterae are delicate plant-like marine organisms, usually attached to some foreign body. Their classification is difficult and unsettled. They have been divided into from 2 to 21 families. More or less exact synonyms of the name of the order are Athecata, Gerydina, Gymnastata, and Tubularina. Also Gymnoblasterae.

gymnoblasic (jim-no-blas'tik), a. [< Gr. γυμνός, naked, + blastos, germ. + -ic.] Having nutritive and reproductive buds or zooids not covered or protected by horny receptacles; having no hydrotheca or gonangia; specifically, of or pertaining to the Gymnoblasterae.

We know less about the Trachomedusae than about the Medusae derived from Gymnoblasterae or Calypthoblastic hydroids. A. G. Bourne, Proc. Roy. Soc., XXXVIII, 14.

Gymnobranchia (jim-nō-brang'ki-ā), n. pl. [NL.] Same as Gymnobranchiata.

Gymnobranchiata (jim-nō-brang'ki-ā'tā), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of gymnobranchiatus; see gymnobranchiate.] An order of opisthobranchiate gastropods with the gills exposed or contractible into a cavity on the surface of the mantle. They are shell less in the adult state, but the young have shells and deciduous cephalic tent. Also called Nudibranchiata. Schäfer, 1893.

gymnobranchiate (jim-nō-brang'ki-ā-tā), a. and n. [NL. gymnobranchiatus, < Gr. γυμνός, naked, Leto, in commemoration of the victory of 100 Spartans over 100 Argive champions at Thyrea. Gymnopædic (jim-nō-pē-dik), a. [Gr. γυμνοπαδικός, in form, γυμνοπαδικός (no, by gyan, dancer), a dance of naked boys, γυμνός, naked, + παις (país), boy, child (cf. παιδικός, of a boy).] 1. Of or pertaining to naked boys: applied by the ancient Greeks to dances and gymnastic exercises performed, as at public festivals, by boys or youths unclothed.

In the time of Thales, Socrates, &c. (Pl. 40, 50), the gymnopaedia, hyporhamia, and other kinds of exercises were already cultivated in a highly artistic manner. (cf. Müller, Manual of Archaeology, 4:17.)

2. In ornith., same as palopædic.

Gymnophiona (jim-nō-fī-ō-ni-ā), n. pl. [NL. (Müller, 1832), Gr. γυμνός, naked, + φωνή, a serpent.] One of the major divisions of Amphibia, having a serpentine body, no limbs, the tail obsolete in the adult, the anus terminal, and numerous minute dermal warts in the integument of the body. The division includes only the family Crotalidae, and the term is a synonym of Ophimophis.

Gymnophthalmata (jim-nōf-thal'm-tā), n. pl. [NL. prop. Gymnophthalmata, Gr. γυμνός, naked, + ὄφθαλμος, eye.] A general name of the naked-eyed medusae, cnuspedate Hydromedusae, having a muscular velum and the marginal sensory organs uncovered.

Gymnophthalmate (jim-nōf-thal'm-tāt), a. Same as gymnophthalmatus.

Gymnophthalmatus (jim-nōf-thal'm-tūs), a. [As Gymnophthalmata + -ous.] Of or pertaining to the Gymnophthalmata, or so-called naked-eyed Medusae. Also gymnophthalmous.

The gonophores of the Siphonophora present every variety, from a simple form to free medusoids of the Gymnophthalmata type. (Huxley, Art. Invert., p. 129.)

Gymnophthalmidae (jim-nōf-thal'm-idē), n. pl. [NL. Gymnophthalmidae + -idae.] A family of snake-like lizards, typified by the genus Gymnophthalmus, having rudimentary limbs and eyelids which leave the eyes uncovered.

Gymnophthalmous (jim-nōf-thal'm-us), a. Same as gymnophthalmatus.

Gymnophthalmus (jim-nōf-thal'm-us), n. [Gr. γυμνός, naked, + ὄφθαλμος, eye.] A typical genus of lizards of the family Gymnophthalmidae.

Gymnops (jim'nōps), n. [NL. Gr. γυμνός, naked, + ὤψ, eye, face.] A genus of birds, (a) A Cuvierian (1800) genus of sturnoid passerine birds, containing the Philippine G. tricolor or G. calvus, with some heterogeneous species. (b) A genus of South American polyborine hawks: same as Isaparus or Ibapet. Spies, 1824.

Gymnoptera (jim-nōp'tē-rā), n. pl. [NL. neut. pl. of gymnopterous: see gymnopterous.] In De Geer's system (1752), a division of insects, including Lepidoptera, Neuroptera, Hymenoptera, and some other forms with unsheathed wings, as Chemerids, aphids, and cicadas. In later systems, the Gymnoptera were composed of the three orders above named, with Diptera and Suctoria, and the term was contrasted with Heteroptera.

Gymnopterous (jim-nōp'tē-rūs), a. [NL. gymnopterous, Gr. γυμνός, naked, + πτερόν, wing, = E. feather.] In entom., having clear or naked wings, without scales or hairs; not having sheathed wings; not elyptopterous; specifically, of or pertaining to the Gymnoptera.

Gymnorhina (jim-nō-rī-nā), n. [NL. Gr. γυμνός, naked, + ῥίς (rhís), nose.] A genus of piping-crows or crow-shrikes, typical of the subfamily Gymnorhininae. G. tibicen is a well known species, sometimes called plains bird, entirely black and white.

Gymnorhinal (jim-nō-rī-nāl), a. [Gr. γυμνός, naked, + ῥίς (rhís), nose, + -āl.] In ornith., having naked nostrils; having the nostrils unfeathered: an epithet of sundry birds, especially of certain jays and crows, which are distinguished by this circumstance in their respective families, in which the nostrils are usually feathered.

Gymnorhininae (jim'nō-rī-nī-nē), n. pl. [NL. Gymnorhina + -inae.] A group of oscine passerine birds related to crows and shrikes, inhabiting the Australasian region, and composed of such genera as Gymnorhina, Strepera, and Cracticus; the piping-crows, or crow-shrikes. Streperinae is a synonym.

Gymnorhinus (jim-nō-rī-nūs), n. [NL.: see Gymnorhina.] In ornith., same as Gymnorhina.

Gymnosomata (jim-nō-sō-mā-tā), n. pl. [NL. neut. pl. of gymnosomatus: see gymnosomatus.] An order of pteropods, of the class Pteropoda, having distinct head and foot, no mantle or developed shell (whence the name), the head usually provided with tentacles, and the fins attached to the neck. The term is contrasted with Thecosomata, and is synonymous with Pterobranchia. The order was established by De Blainville in 1824.

The Gymnosomata are naked pteropods, in which the head is distinct and well separated from the body and foot, and in which well developed tentacles are present. The wings are distinct from the foot and external gills are present in one family. The young are at first provided with a shell and swim by means of a velum, but soon both these embryonic structures are lost. (Stolid, Nat. Hist., 1: 359.)

Gymnosomatus (jim-nō-sō-mā-tūs), a. [NL. gymnosomatus, Gr. γυμνός, naked, + σῶμα, body.] Having the body naked; specifically, having the characters of the Gymnosomata; not thecosomatus: as, a gymnosomatus pteropod.

Gymnosomous (jim-nō-sō-mūs), a. Same as gymnosomatus.

Gymnosophical (jim-nō-sōf'ī-kāl), a. [As Gymnosophical + -ical.] Pertaining to the Gymnosophists or to gymnosophy.

Gymnosophist (jim-nō-sōf'ī-st), n. [L. gymnosophista, pl., Gr. γυμνός, naked, + σοφιστής, a philosopher: see sophist.] One of a sect of ancient Hindu philosophers who lived solitarily in the woods, wore little clothing, ate no flesh, renounced all bodily pleasures, and addicted themselves to mystical contemplation: so called by Greek writers. By some they are regarded as Brahmin pontiffs, others include among them a set of Buddhist ascetics, the Shramans.

Philostrophus speaks of Gymnosophists which some ascribe to India, Heliodorus to Ethiopia, Jo to Ethiopia and Egypt. . . . If a man at Memphis had by chance met a killed a man, he was called all these Gymnosophists abolished him. (Pachas, Pliny, p. 55.)

Gymnosophy (jim-nō-sōf'ī), n. [As Gymnosophical + -y.] The doctrines and practices of the Gymnosophists.

Gymnosperm (jim-nō-spēr'm), n. [NL. gymnospermus: see gymnospermous.] A plant belonging to the Gymnospermae, characterized by naked seeds. Compare angiosperm. Also called gymnosperma.

Gymnospermae (jim-nō-spēr'mē), n. pl. [NL. fem. pl. of gymnospermus: see gymnospermous.] A class of exogenous plants, but often made a subclass of the Dicotyledonae, characterized by naked ovules (not inclosed within an ovary, and fertilized by immediate contact with the pollen), and by the absence of a perianth (except in the Coniferae). The cotyledons are two or more, and the flowers are strictly unisexual. The class includes the three orders Coniferae, Gnetales (with Taxaceae), and Celastrales, in which there are 44 genera and over 400 species. All are trees or shrubs, mostly evergreen and resinous. The wood is peculiar in being composed mainly of disk bearing tissue without proper vessels. In the character of the sexual organs and the mode of reproduction this class marks a transition from the angiosperms to the vascular cryptogams, and fossil remains show it to have been prevalent with ferns in the Devonian period, long prior to the appearance of angiosperms.

Gymnospermal (jim-nō-spēr'māl), a. [Gr. gymnospermus + -al.] Relating to gymnosperms, or to naked ovules and seeds in plants.

Gymnospermia (jim-nō-spēr'mi-ā), n. pl. [NL. Gymnospermia: see gymnospermous.] An order in the Linnaean system, including the Labiatae, the nutlets being considered as naked seeds.

Gymnospermous (jim-nō-spēr'mūs), a. [NL. gymnospermus, Gr. γυμνός, naked, + σπέρμα, seed.] In bot., of, pertaining to, or resembling the Gymnospermae; having naked seeds: opposed to angiospermous. Also gymnospermous.

Gymnosporangium (jim-nō-spō-ran'jū-m), n. [NL. Gr. γυμνός, naked, + NL. sporangium,

q. v.] A genus of fungi, of the order Uredinales, having mostly two-celled (sometimes one- to six-celled); yellow or orange spores borne on slender pedicels, and embedded in jelly, which when moistened swells into columnar or irregularly expanded masses. The spores are parasitic on the leaves and branches of coniferous trees belonging to the suborder Cupressales, in which they produce various distortions. See cedar apple.

Gymnosporus (jim'nō-spō-rus), n. [NL. gymnosporus: see gymnosporous.] A naked spore; a spore without a protecting investment: opposed to chlamydosporus.

Gymnosporous (jim-nō-spō-rus), a. [NL. gymnosporus, Gr. γυμνός, naked, + σπόρος, a seed: see spore.] In bot., having naked spores.

Gymnostomous (jim-nōs'tō-mūs), a. [Gr. γυμνός, naked, + στόμα, mouth.] In bot., having no peristome: applied to the capsule of mosses.

Gymnote (jim'nōt), n. [Gr. γυμνός, naked.] A fish of the genus Gymnotus.

Gymnotetraspermous (jim-nō-tet-rā-spēr'mūs), a. [Gr. γυμνός, naked, + τετρασπέρμους, = E. four, + σπέρμα, seed.] Having four naked seeds: formerly applied to the labiates, etc., upon the supposition that the nutlets are naked seeds.

Gymnotid (jim'nō-tid), n. A fish of the family Gymnotidae.

Gymnotidae (jim-nōt'idē), n. pl. [NL. Gymnotus + -idae.] In Günther's classification of fishes, a family of the order Physostomi. They are characterized by having the body eel-shaped; the margin of the upper jaw formed by the middle of the intermaxillaries and laterally by the maxillaries; the dorsal fin absent or reduced to an adipose strip, the caudal generally absent, and the tail ending in a point; the anal fin extremely long; no ventral fins present; and the anus situated a little way behind the throat.

Gymnotoca (jim-nōt'ō-kā), n. pl. [NL. Gr. γυμνός, naked, + τρώω, to bring forth, τρώω, a bringing forth, offspring.] The tubularian hydroids, or gymnoblastic Hydromedusae, having their genital products uncovered: opposed to Sternocera. See Gymnoblastea.

Gymnotocous (jim-nōt'ō-kūs), a. Pertaining to or having the characters of the Gymnotoca; gymnoblastic, as a tubularian hydromedusan.

Gymnotoid (jim-nōt'ōid), a. and n. 1. a. Of or relating to the Gymnotidae.

2. n. A fish of the family Gymnotidae.

Gymnotus (jim-nōt'ūs), n. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1758), contr. of Gymnotocous, q. v.] 1. A genus of fishes. (a) By Linnaeus made to include all the Gymnotus known to him but not at first the electric eel. (b) By Cuvier restricted to the electric eel, Gymnotus electricus, afterward distinguished as the type of the genus Electrophorus. See electric eel, under ed. (c) By later authors restricted to the Gymnotus carapo (Linnaeus), otherwise called Sternopygus. Also Gymnotocara.

2. [L. c.] A fish of the genus Gymnotus.—3. In entom., a genus of curculion, based on the Brazilian G. geometricus, the Cholus geometricus of Germar. Chevrolat, 1879.

Gymnosoids (jim-nō-sō'idē), n. pl. [NL. Gr. γυμνός, naked, + ὢν, a living being.] In Saville Kent's system of classification (1850), a section of Infusoria, containing the ordinary naked collar-bearing monadiform infusorians: opposed to Sarcocrypta or sponges. Kent included the sponges in his "legion" Infusoria, considering a sponge as an aggregate of chamoanellate infusorian sponges; whence the contrasted terms Dicocoonata gymnosoids and Dicocoonata sarcocrypta for the two sections of Chamoanellata. Kent's Gymnosoids consists of three families, Columbigidae, Sarcocryptidae, and Phalanteridae.

Gymnosoidal (jim-nō-sō'idāl), a. Naked, as a spongid; specifically, of or pertaining to the Gymnosoids. S. Kent.

Gymnura (jim-nū-rā), n. [NL. Gr. γυμνός, naked, + ῥα, the tail.] 1. A genus of insectivorous mammals, typical of the subfamily Gymnurinae. G. robusta inhabits Malaysia, and resembles a large rat with an unusually long snout and long scaly tail. It is known as the baton. Vigors and Horsfield, 1827.

2. Same as Erysmaturus.

Gymnure (jim'nūr), n. An animal of the genus Gymnura.

Gymnurinae (jim-nū-rī-nē), n. pl. [NL. Gr. γυμνός, naked, + ῥα, the tail.] A subfamily of the insectivorous family Erysmaturidae, having numerous caudal vertebrae, the palate well ossified, no spines on the fur, and the dental formula $i. \frac{1}{1}, c. \frac{1}{1}, pm. \frac{1}{1}, m. \frac{1}{1} \times 2 = 44$. There are two genera, Gymnura and Hylomys.

Gyn, n. An obsolete spelling of gyn.

Gyn, n. An obsolete spelling of gyn.

Gynæceum (jim-ē-nē-um), n. pl. gynæcei (-ē). [L. gynæceum or gynæcium, Gr. γυναικίον, the women's apartment or division of a house, neut. of gynaikeios, of or belonging to women, Gr. γυνή (gynē), a woman, a female, = Gr. γυνή, a bird (black-backed piping-crow, Gymnorhina tibicen). It is being raised in large areas; the bird also is being raised in large areas; the bird also is being raised in large areas. It is a native of Australia, and is a noisy, shrewish bird, and is capable of being tamed. It speaks a few words and plays a variety of amusing sounds. G. A. Gray, 1840.

woman, E. queen and queen, q. v.] 1. Among the ancients, the part of a dwelling of the better class devoted to the use of women—generally the remotest part, lying beyond an interior court; hence, in occasional use, a similar division of any house or establishment where the sexes are separated, as a Mohammedan harem. Also gynaeceum.

Women, up till this Crawled under worse than South sea-labour, Dwells at the gynaeceum, full as far In high desire. Tennyson, Princess, III.

2. A manufactory or establishment in ancient Rome for making clothes and furniture for the emperor's family, the managers of which were women.—3. See gynaeceum.

gynaeceum, n. Same as gynaeceum.
gynaeceomorphous (jī-nē-kō-kōr'mōs), n. [Gr. γυναικωμορφος, (gynaikeiōmorfos), a woman, + μορφή, (morphē), order, form.] Same as gynaeceomorphous.

gynaeceology, gynaeceological, gynaeceologist, etc. See gynaeceology, etc.

gynaeconomos (jī-nē-kōu'ō-mōs), n. [Gr. γυναικονομος, (gynaikekonomos), a woman, + νομος, (nomos), regulate, manage.] One of a body of magistrates in ancient Athens especially charged with the execution of the sumptuary laws relating to women, and of various police laws for the observance of decency in public and private. One of their chief duties, which was sternly enforced, was the maintenance of good order in all respects in the great public processions and religious ceremonies, such as that to the Delphian sanctuary.

gynander (jī-nan'dēr), n. [Gr. γυναικας, of doubtful sex, < γυνή, a female (in mod. lat. a pistil), & άνδρ, male: see gynandria.] 1. An effeminate man. [Rare.]

An emasculated type, product of short haired women and long haired men, gynanders and androgynes. Scientific Mag., III. 481.

2. A plant belonging to the class Gynandria.
Gynandria (jī-nan'dri-ā), n. pl. [NL.] The twentieth class in the vegetable system of Linnæus, characterized by having gynandrous flowers, as in all orchidaceous plants.

gynandrian (jī-nan'dri-ā), n. [Gr. γυνανδρία.] Of or pertaining to the class Gynandria.

gynandromorphism (jī-nan-drō-mōr'fizm), n. [Gr. γυνανδρομορφία, (gynandromorphia), female, + μορφή, (morphē), male, + μορφή, (morphē), form, + ισμός, (ismos), a variation or monstrosity in which the peculiar characters of the male and female are found in the same individual.

gynandromorphous (jī-nan-drō-mōr'fuz), a. [Gr. γυνανδρομος, of doubtful sex (see gynander), + μορφή, (morphē), form.] In entom., having both male and female characters: applied to certain rare individuals among insects which by their forms and markings are apparently female in one part of the body and male in another.

Mr. Curtis has figured a singular gynandromorphous individual of Tenthredo (Ingrata), in which the opposite sides are not symmetrical, the right half being feminine and the left masculine. Westwood.

gynandrophore (jī-nan'drō-fōr), n. [Gr. γυνανδροφορος, (gynandrophoros), female (pistil), & φορος, (phoros), male (stamen), + φορος, (phoros), E. bear.] A gynophore which bears the stamens as well as the pistil, as in some Capparidaceae. See cut under gynophore.

The "gynophore" or the "gynandrophore." Europ. Bot., XVIII. 342 gynandrosperous (jī-nan-drōs'pō-rus), a. [Gr. γυνανδρσπερος, of doubtful sex (see gynander), + σπερος, (speros), a seed.] In the Gidionaceae, among Agave, provided with male individuals which attach themselves to or near the isogonum. The male plant originates as a special asprore called an androspore, and, attaching itself, produces by growth a plant of three or four cells, called a dwarf male. The upper cell of the latter produces antherozoids which fertilize the asprore.

gynandrous (jī-nan'drus), a. [Gr. γυνανδρος, of doubtful sex: see gynander, Gynandria.] In bot., having the stamens adnate to and apparently borne upon the pistil, as in Asclepias, Aristolochia, and all orchids.

gynantherous (jī-nan'thē-rus), a. [Gr. γυνανθηρος, (gynanthēros), female (pistil), & ανθηρος, (anthēros), flowery (anther).] In bot., having stamens converted into pistils.

gynarchy (jī-n'kī), n. pl. gynarchies (-kī). [Gr. γυνή, a woman, + ἀρχή, (archē), rule.] Government by a woman or by women; the rule of women. Formerly also written gynarchy.

I have always some hopes of change under a gynarchy. Chatterfield.

gynecian, gynecian (jī-nē'shian), a. [Gr. γυνή, (gynē), a woman, + αἰών, (aiōn), relating to women.

gynecic, gynecic (jī-nē'sik), a. [Gr. γυναικικός, (gynaikeikos), of woman, < γυνή, (gynē), woman.] In med. and surg., pertaining to diseases peculiar to women.

gynecocracy, gynocracy (jī-nē-kōk-rā-sī), n. [Also gynocracy, and sometimes inprop. gynocracy, gynocracy, < Gr. γυναικράτεια, government by women (cf. κρατία, (kratía), to rule, by women, & κρατος, (kratos), power, & κρατος, (kratos), rule.) Government by a woman or by women; female power or rule.

gynecological, gynecological (jī-nē-kōl'ō-jī-kāl), a. [Gr. γυναικολογικός, (gynaikeiologikos), of or pertaining to gynecology.

gynecologist, gynecologist (jī-nē-kōl'ō-jīst), n. [Gr. γυναικολογία, (gynaikeiologia), + ιστής, (istēs), one versed in, or engaged in the study and practice of, gynecology.

gynecology, gynecology (jī-nē-kōl'ō-jī), n. [Gr. γυνή, (gynē), a woman, + λογία, (logia), < λόγος, (logos), speak: see -ology.] In med. and surg., the science of the diseases peculiar to women.

gynecomasty, gynecomasty (jī-nē-kō-māstī), n. [Gr. γυνή, (gynē), a woman, + μαστία, (mastia), breast.] In physiol., the condition of a man having breasts as large as those of a woman, and functionally active.

The mamms of men will, under special excitation, yield milk. There are various cases of gynecomasty on record, and in families infants whose mothers have died have been thus saved. H. Spencer, Study of Sociol., p. 441.

gyneconitis, gynaconitis (jī-nē-kō-nī'tis), n. [Gr. γυναικωνίτις, (gynaikeonitis), equiv. to gynaecitis, gynecitis: see gynaecitis.] 1. Same as gynaecitis.

I often saw parties of women mount the stairs to the gyneconitis. H. F. Burton, El Medico, p. 160.

2. In the early ch., and in the Gr. Ch., the part of the church occupied by women. Formerly the women of the congregation occupied either the northern side of the church or galleries at the sides and over the narthex. In Greek churches they take their place in the narthex or at the sides of the church.

The women's gallery, or gyneconitis, formed an important part of the earlier Byzantine churches. M. A. S. Eastern Church, p. 201.

gynecophore, gynecophore (jī-nē-kō-fōr), n. [Gr. γυνή, (gynē), female, + φορος, (phoros), E. bear.] A receptacle in the body of the male of some animals, as the discoidal trematodes, in which the female is contained; the gynecophoric canal, or canalis gynecophorus.

The formidable Bilharzia, the male of which is the larger and retains the female in a gynecophore. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 178.

gynecophoric, gynecophoric (jī-nē-kō-fōr'ik), a. [As gynecophore, gynecophore, + αἰών, (aiōn), E. bear.] Pertaining to or of the nature of a gynecophore: applied to the canal of the male in certain Entozoa as Bilharzia, in which the female lodges during copulation.

gynecophorous, gynecophorous (jī-nē-kōf'ō-rus), a. [As gynecophore, gynecophore, + αἰών, (aiōn), E. bear.] Bearing the female; containing the female: as, a gynecophorous worm; a gynecophorous canal. See gynecophore.

gynecratic, gynecratic (jī-nē-kōr'at'ik), a. [Gr. γυνή, a woman, + κρατία, (kratía), as in aristocracy, etc.] Of or pertaining to government by women.

The gynecratic hold's of the race are manifested in the names of all these kings, which were formed by a combination of those of their parents, the mother's generally preceding that of the father. Europ. Bot., XXIII. 345.

gynecracy, gynocracy (jī-nē-kōr'at'ik), n. Same as gynocracy.

The Mother right and gynecracy among the Isogonum here plainly indicated is not overdrawn. L. H. Morgan, Amer. Ethnol., p. 60.

gynecolatriy, gynolatriy (jī-nē-kōl'ō-jī-trī), n. [*Prop. gynolatriy, (Gr. γυνή, (gynē), woman, + λατρεία, (latreia), worship.) Extravagant devotion to or worship of woman.

We find in the Commenda the image of the Middle Ages, and the sentimental gynecolatriy of chivalry, which was at best but skin-deep, is lifted in Beatrice to an ideal and universal plane. Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 60.

Gynarium (jī-nē'rī-um), n. [NL, from the woolly arignas, < Gr. γυνή, (gynē), female, + αἰών, (aiōn), wool.] A small perennial reedy grasses, of tropic America, with very long large, dense, plum-like panicles. One, the pampas-grass, is highly ornamental, frequently cultivated.

gynethusia (jī-nē-thū'sī-ā), n. [Gr. γυνή, (gynē), female, + θεῖον, (theion), offering, sacrifice, < θεός, (theos), sacrifice.] The sacrifice of women.

A kind of suttee gynethusia, as it has been termed. Archæologia, XLII. 188.

gynethus, n. An obsolete variant of gynethus. Rom. of the Rose.

Gyno- [A shortened form of gynæce-, gyneco-, combining forms of Gr. γυνή, (gynē), a woman, female: see gynæceum.] An element in modern botanical terms, meaning 'pistil' or 'ovary'.

gynobase (jī-nō-bā-sē), n. [Gr. γυνή, a female, + βάσις, (basis), base.] In bot., a short conical or flat elevation of the receptacle of a flower, bearing the gypser, n. See gypser.

gypsey, n. and n. See Gipsey.

gypseiferous (jip-sif-er-us), a. [< L. gypsum, gypsum, + ferre = E. bear.] Producing gypsum.

gypsilify, v. t. See gypsilify.

gypsilite (jip-sil-ite), a. [< gypsilite, gypsum, + -ilite.] Same as gypsilite.

gypsilite, n. See gypsilite.

gypography (jip-og-og-og-og), n. [< Gr. gyps, chalk, gypsum, + gogog, write.] 1. The art or practice of engraving, as inscriptions, upon natural gypsum in some one of its forms, as alabaster. 2. The art or practice of engraving on casts of plaster of Paris. [Rare in both senses.]

gypologist, gypology. See gypologist, gypology.

Gypsophila (jip-sô-fil-ia), n. [NL., < Gr. gyps, chalk, gypsum, + philo, loving.] A genus of Caryophyllaceæ, allied to the pinks (Dianthus), of about 50 species, chiefly of the Mediterranean region. They are slender, graceful herbs, with numerous very small pinked flowers. G. paniculata and G. elegans are often cultivated for ornament.

gypsous (jip-sus), a. Containing or resembling lime or plaster.

Others looked for it [the cause of sweating sickness] from the earth, as arising from an exhalation in moist weather out of gypsous or plastery ground.

Follen, Cambridge University, VII. 26

gypsum (jip-sum), n. [Formerly also gypse, gypse; < OF. gypse, gypse, F. gypse = Sp. gypso = It. gypso = L. gypsum, plaster, < L. gypsum, neut., < Gr. gyps, fem., chalk, gypsum; prob. of Eastern origin; cf. Pers. gubâ, lime, Ar. gubâ, gubâ, plaster, gypsum.] Native hydrous sulphate of calcium, a mineral usually of a white color, but also gray, yellow, red, and when impure brown or black. It is soft and easily scratched; the crystalline varieties, called alabaster, are generally perfectly transparent and cleave readily, yielding thin flexible folia. The crystals are frequently twinned, and often have an arrow-head form. The massive varieties are fibrous (soften upon heat), lamellar, stellate, granular to impalpable. The fine-grained pure white or a faintly colored variety is called alabaster, and is used for ornamental purposes; the impure earthy kind, when reduced to the anhydrous form by heat, is called plaster of Paris, and is used extensively for making molds, etc. (See plaster.) Gypsum ground to a powder is used as a fertilizer.

The Ethiopian warriors were painted half with gypsum and half with mud.

Gypsey, gypseydom, etc. See Gipsey, etc.

Gypsiant, n. See Gipsey.

gyra (jî-râ), n.; pl. gyras (-râ). [ML., fem., < L. gyros, m., a circle; see gyre.] In medieval and ecclesiastical costume, a horn or border richly decorated with embroidery or applied ornaments of any kind.

gyral (jî-râ), a. [< gyre + -al.] 1. Whirling; moving in a circle; rotating. 2. In anat., pertaining to a gyrus or to the gyri of the brain.

gyrant (jî-rant), a. [< L. gyrans (-is), pp. of gyrate, turn round; see gyrate.] Turning round a central point; gyrating. Formerly also gyrant.

gyrate (jî-rât), v. t.; pret. and pp. gyrated, pp. gyrating. [< L. gyrotus, pp. of gyro, tr. and intr., turn round, whirl, < gyros, a circle; see gyre, n.] To turn round; wheel; rotate; whirl; move round a fixed point. See gyration. Formerly also gyrate.

Waters of vexation filled her eyes, and they had the effect of making the famous Mr. Merdle appear to long, as if he were possessed by several devils.

Dickens, Little Dorrit, II. 20.

They gyrated in couples, a few at a time, throwing their bodies into the most startling attitudes and the wildest contortions.

G. W. Cable, The Grandissime, p. 164.

gyrate (jî-rât), a. [< L. gyrotus, pp. of gyrate, turn round; see gyrate.] 1. In bot., curved inward like a crenel; crenelate. 2. In anat., having convolutions like the gyri of the brain; meandrine, as a coral. See out under brain-coral.

By this spiral growth the corallum becomes "gyrate" or "meandrine"; and excellent examples may be found in the genera Meandrina, Diploria, etc.

Encyc. Brit., VI. 373.

gyration (jî-râ-shon), n. [< ML. gyration(-is), < L. gyrate, gyrate; see gyrate.] A wheeling; whirling; revolution; a wheeling motion, like that of the moon round the earth. Specifically — (a) A revolution round a distant center combined with a synchronous rotation in the same direction round the gyrating body a center. (b) A whirling motion, a rotary motion of a massive body, with the thought of its vis viva. (c) A motion like that of a gyroscope, a conical rotation of an axis of rotation. (d) Any motion of a body with one point fixed.

If a burning coal be nimbly moved round in a circle with gyrations, continually repeated, the whole circle will appear like fire.

Newton, Opticks.

When the sun so enters a hole or window that by its illumination the stones or mounts become perceptible, if then by our breath the air be gently impelled, it may be perceived that they will circularly return and in a gyration into their places again.

Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., II. 4.

A French top, thrown from a cord which was wound about it, will stand as it were fix on the floor (where) it is lighted, and yet continue in its repeated gyrations.

Blancelle, Vanity of Boasting, II.

He and Blanche, whilst executing their rapid gyrations came bolt up against the heavy dragon.

Thackeray, Pendennis, xvi.

Center of gyration, a point in a revolving body such that, if all the matter of the body could be collected at that point, the body would continue to revolve with the same energy as when its parts were in their original places. — Ellipsoid of gyration. See ellipsoid. — Radius of gyration, the distance of the center of gyration from the axis of rotation.

gyrational (jî-râ-shon-al), a. [< gyration + -al.] Of, pertaining to, or characterized by gyration: as, the gyrational movements of the planets. R. A. Proctor.

gyratory (jî-râ-ti-ory), a. [= F. giratoire, gyratoire; an gyrate + -ory.] Moving in a circle or spirally; gyrating.

gyrdel, v. See gyrdel.

Gyrocephala (jir'en-sel'g-lā), n. pl. [NL. < (Gr. gyros, a ring, circle, & kephala, the brain.)] In Owen's system (1857), one of four prime divisions of mammalians, containing the orders (Cetacea, Sirenia, Hyraconia, Proboscidea, Ungulata, Carnivora, and Quadrumana, having more or less numerous cerebral gyri, and the hemispheres of the cerebrum extending more or less over the cerebellum and olfactory lobes of the brain; distinguished from Archencephala, Licencephala, and Lyncephala. The division represents the higher series of mammals called by Bonaparte Edentata and by Dana Neotoma, but differs in excluding man. (Not in use.)

Gyrocephalate (jir'en-sel'g-lā), a. [As Gyrocephala + -ate.] Same as gyrocephalous.

Gyrocephalous (jir'en-sel'g-lā), a. [As Gyrocephala + -ous.] Pertaining to or having the characters of the Gyrocephala. See cut under Gyros.

Gyrfalcon (jir'fa'kn), n. See gyrfalcon.

Gyri, n. Plural of gyrus.

Gyrinidae (jir-in'i-dē), n. pl. [NL. < Gyrinus + -idae.] A family of hydrophilous beetles, the whirlings, so called from their habit of gyrating together on the water. The male abdomen has no anterior piece, but is prolonged in a triangular process posteriorly. The antennae are irregular and very short. The abdomen has 7 segments, and there are 4 eyes, the upper pair of which look into the air, and the lower into the water. When disturbed they eject an odorous fluid. The female breathes by pairs of ciliate gills, one on each side of the abdominal segments, and the gills serve also as swimming organs. Also called Gyrinidae, Gyrinidae, Gyrinidae, and Gyrinidae.

Gyrodactyl, n. Plural of gyrodactylus, 2.

Gyrodactylides (jir'row-dak'til'i-dē), n. pl. [NL. < (Gyrodactylus + -ides.)] A family of very small viviparous trematode worms with strong hooks and large terminal caudal disk. They are produced one at a time, and within each before it is born, another of a second generation may be formed, and in this again a third.

Gyrodactylus (jir'row-dak'til'us), n. [NL. (Nordmann), < (Gr. gyros, round, & dactylus, finger.)] 1. The typical genus of trematode worms of the family Gyrodactylidae. G. elegans is found in the gills of fishes.—2. [l. c.; pl. gyrodactyl (-i).] An individual or a species of this genus.

gyronite (jir'row'g-nit), n. [Gr. gyros, round, & gyron, wood, & -ite.] A petrified spiral seed-vessel of plants of the genus Chara, found in fresh-water deposits, and formerly supposed to be a shell.

gyroidal (jir'row'dal), a. [Gr. gyros, like a circle, < (gyros, a circle, & -oid, form.)] Spiral in arrangement or in movement. (a) In crystal, having certain planes arranged spirally, so that they incline all to the right or all to the left of a vertical line. (b) In optics, turning the plane of polarization circularly or spirally to the right or left.

gyrolite (jir'row'lit), n. [Gr. gyros, round, & lithos, a stone.] A hydrous silicate of calcium occurring in white spherical forms with a radiated structure.

gyroma (jir'row'mā), n. [pl. gyromata (-mā-tā). < (Gr. as if gyromai*, < gyros, make round, bend, < gyros, round; see gyre.)] 1. A turning round.—2. In bot., the shield of lichens. Imp. Det.

gyromancy (jir'row-man-si), n. [Fr. gyromancie, < (Gr. gyros, a circle, & man-, divination.)] A kind of divination said to have been practiced by walking round in a circle or ring until the performer fell from dizziness, the manner of his fall being interpreted with reference to characters or signs previously placed about the ring, or in some such way.

gyromata, n. Plural of gyroma.

gyron, gyron (jir'ron), n. [Fr. gyron, a gyron, so called in reference to the arrangement of gyrons round the fosse-point; < (Gr. gyros, a ring, circle; see gyre.)] In her., a bearing consisting of two straight lines drawn from any given part of the field and meeting in an acute angle in the fosse-point. It usually issues from the dexter chief, and is considered to occupy one-half of the first quarter, but if otherwise, its position must be stated in the blazon.

gyronnetty, gyronnetty (jir'row-net'ti), a. [Her. table F. gyronnetty, < gyronnetty, dim. of gyron; see gyron.] In her., finished at the top with points, as spear-points, said of a castle or tower used as a bearing. Also written gyronnetty.

gyronny, gyronny (jir'row-ni), a. [Her. table F. gyronny, < gyronny, q. v.] In her., divided into a number of triangular parts of two different tinctures. The points of all the triangles meet at the fosse-point. The number of triangles must be stated in the blazon, as gyronny of eight, or and gules. Also written gyronny.

Gyronny of eight and gules.

Gyronny covered with gyrons, or divided so as to form several gyrons, said of an escutcheon.

gyronwise, gyronwise (jir'row-wiz), adv. In her., in the direction of the lines forming a field gyronny—that is, radiating from the fosse-point.

Gyrophora (jir'row'fōr), n. [NL. < (Gr. gyros, a circle, & phora, < phero, to bear.)] A genus of lichens, one of which is the trapezocle.

gyrophoric (jir'row'fōrik), a. [Gyrophora + -ic.] Belonging to or derived from plants of the genus Gyrophora, as, gyrophoric acid.

Gyroscope (jir'row-skōp), n. [Fr. gyroscope, a name given in 1852 to Foucault to his improved form of Bohnenberger's apparatus, < (Gr. gyros, a circle, & skopeo, view.)] An instrument consisting of a fly-wheel, the axis of which can turn freely in any direction, designed to illustrate the dynamics of rotating bodies.

Foucault's Gyroscope.

The instrument commonly called gyroscope is better named gyroscopic top (which see, under gyroscopic). The gyroscope proper of Foucault, shown in the figure, consists of a fly-wheel having the small conical bearings of the axle in a well-balanced metallic ring which carries two knife-edges in a line perpendicular to the axis of the fly-wheel; these knife-edges bear upon agates carried in a horizontal plane by an outer vertical ring half suspended from a small copper wire and turning about a vertical axis. The axis of the wheel can thus turn in any direction. By means of an accessory apparatus a velocity of 120 turns a second can be imparted to the fly-wheel. The principal experiment with this apparatus are as follows: First experiment.—If, when the fly-wheel is turning rapidly, no considerable force is applied to change the direction of its axis, its direction will remain almost unchanged. For, suppose it were proposed, by an instantaneous impulse, to turn the axis round a fixed axis perpendicular to it; then, at the point where this fixed axis cuts the rim of the fly-wheel, a particle would have to be deflected, and it can be shown in the parallelogram of motions that a velocity must be communicated to it proportional to the velocity it already possessed. Hence, the force required to rotate the axis of a fly-wheel increases with its velocity. Accordingly, when the velocity is very high, the friction on the bearings will change the direction of the axis but very little. But all the surrounding objects partake of the rotation of the earth upon its axis. Consequently, the axis of the fly-wheel will have a relative rotation, and this may be observed with a microscope. Second experiment.—If the fly-wheel was attached to its axis by a hinge, so that its plane was free to take any inclination to the axis, it is plain that by virtue of centrifugal force it would become perpendicular to the axis, since in this way its particles would be farthest from the axis. If then the outer ring of the gyroscope be held fast in such a position that the axis of the fly-wheel is free to move in the meridian plane, it partakes of the rotation of the earth; and the rotation of the earth and that of the fly-wheel being compounded, the axis of resultant rotation is not quite perpendicular to the fly-wheel. Accordingly, the inner ring will turn on its knife-edges until the axis of the fly-wheel is brought into parallelism with that of the earth, so that the wheel revolves from west to east like the earth. Third experiment.—On the same principle, if the outer ring be free to turn, but the inner one be fixed horizontally, the outer ring will turn so as to bring the axis of the fly-wheel into the meridian. Fourth experiment.—Let the inner wheel be thrown out of balance by hanging a weight upon it near one end of the axis; then this weight will each instant communicate a rotation about the knife-edges, compounding itself with the rotation of the fly-wheel about its axis as the rotation of the earth does in the third experiment, and as the outer ring round the vertical axis will run the resultant axis of the first two rotations is that of the fly-wheel, the tendency of the weight will be but slight, and under the influence of it and force of the third rotation it will move in pendulum. Gyroscope governor, a steam-valve which a gyroscope is employed as a regulator. In the speed of the engine causes a heavy change its plane of rotation, this change in turning the speed of the engine. See governor.

gyroscopic (jir'row-skōp'ik), a. [Gr. gyros, & skopeo.] Pertaining to the gyroscope; III the dynamical laws of rotation.

The bearings are of great length and large diameter to stand the gyroscopic action which occurs in a heavy sea on board ship.

Gyrose (jir'row), a. [Fr. gyrose, a circle (see gyre), & -ose.] In her., turned round like a crook; bent to and fro; folded and waved or marked with wavy lines; applied to the petal-bar and complementary flexuosity of the margin of the apothecium in the genus Lobelia.

gyrostat (jir'row-stat), n. [Fr. gyrostat, < (Gr. gyros, a circle, & statos, stationary.)] An instrument for illustrating the dynamics of rotation, composed of a box or case having a sharp bearing-edge. In the form of a regular polyhedron, and containing a fly-wheel having its center and its direction of rotation in the plane of the bearing-edge.

Gyrostat.

gyrostatic (jir'row-stat'ik), a. [As gyrostat + -ic.] Concerning the dynamical principle that a rotator tends to preserve its plane of rotation.

A system of four synthetic chains connected together by a cross-linker in process of the properties of an ordinary elastic spring, although composed of matter in itself entirely devoid of elasticity.

vagrant (j-vay-j), n. pl. [ML., < L. gyrus, a circle, + agere, wandering.] In the same church, vagrant monks without definite occupation, who subsisted upon the charity of others.

Chrysothrix, vagrant tramps who even at that time (524), as more than a century earlier, continued to bring discredit on the monastic profession. Encyc. Brit., XVI. 704.

gyrus (jī'rus), n.; pl. gyri (jī'-rī) [L., NL., < Gr., gyros, a circle, circuit, ring; cf. gyrate, round; see gyrate]. In anat., one of the rounded ridges into which the surface of the cerebral hemisphere is divided by the fissures or sulci; a convolution; a gyre. The gyri and sulci are complementary and mutually definitive. They are most numerous and best marked in the brain of the higher mammals (which are therefore called gyrencephalous), and especially in that of man. Every gyrus in man has its own name, but several different systems of naming are in vogue, and the nomenclature is still shifting. The attempt to identify the hugyri and sulci with those of other mammals encounters difficulties which have thus far been insurmountable except in the cases of the most constant and best marked gyri and fissures. (See the cuts.) Additional difficulty is encountered in the fact that different human brains vary in details of the gyri and the same brain may differ on its opposite sides. The principal gyri are noted in the drawings below. The gyri represent an enormous increase in quantity of the gray cortical matter or cortex of the brain in comparison with the actual superficies of the cerebral hemispheres, some of the folds being separated by fissures an inch or more in depth and containing three layers of gray matter with three layers of white. The gyri are to some extent an indication of intellectual power, and are better marked when the mental powers of the individual are at their height than in infancy and senility. See out under cerebral. Attached. gyrus, an arched convolution regularly arranged, in some mammivorous animals, as the dog and wolf, beginning with one which borders the Sylvian fissure and ending with one which forms the margin of the cerebral hemisphere. They are enumerated from first to fourth, as by Leuret, or in reverse order (Forster), or only three are recognized (Ploewer), when they are placed anterior, middle, and posterior (Grünig).—Ascending frontal gyrus, the ridge ascending from the olfactory bulb to the frontal lobe. Also called the ascending gyrus and transverse frontal gyrus. See out under cerebral.—Ascending parietal gyrus, the gyrus bounding the fissure of Rolando behind. Also called the posterior central convolution. Callosal gyrus, a convolution of the median surface of the cerebrum immediately over the corpus callosum and below the callosal marginal fissure. It is continuous behind with the gyrus hippocampalis, and ends in the gyrus uncinatus. Also called convolution of the corpus callosum, and gyrus frontalis, from its arched or horizontal figure. See cuts under corpus callosum and uncus. — Omnate gyrus, a convolution of the occipital lobe appearing as a wedge shaped figure on the median aspect of the hemisphere in the fork between the parieto-occipital sulcus and the occipital sulcus. Also called occipital lobule and cuneus. See cut under corpus callosum. — External orbital gyrus, that part of the orbital surface which lies outside of the triangular sulcus. Gray. — Frontal gyrus, three gyri which compose the superior and basal surface of the frontal lobe of the cerebrum, all lying in front of the ascend ing frontal gyrus. They are defined by the superior and inferior orbital sulci, the lateral orbital sulcus, and the notched anterior edge, and of two vertical ridges of fine central sulcus.--Oyrus forficatus. Means as rallolus oyrus.--Oyrus quadratus, the quadrate gyrus. Hippocampal gyrus, the continuation of the gyrus forficatus where it dips down behind and below the corpus callosum, and continues forward to the uncinate gyrus, so called from its relation to the hippocampus. Marginal gyrus (a) That part of the first frontal convolution which appears on the median syle of the hemisphere. See cut under cerebral. (b) The gyrus which arches over the castronomy of the fissure of Sylvius. See midcere. Occipital gyri, three principal convolutions of the occipital lobe of

The cerebrum, separated by two small transverse sulci, and distinguished as first, second, and third, from above downward, or, as in Fig. 8, superior, middle, and inferior. See cut under cerebral. - Orbital gyri, the gyri or convolutions upon the under or orbital surface of the frontal lobe of the cerebrum, which rest upon the orbital plate of the frontal bone. They are three in number, directly continnous with and corresponding to the frontal gyri. The two best marked orbital gyri are sometimes distinguished as the internal and external. Parietal gyri, four well marked convolutions upon the superior and lateral surface of the parietal lobe; and especially two of these distinguished as the ascending parietal (or posterior central) and the the superior parietal, the other two being commonly known as the supramarginal and the angular gyrus. (See other pinnas.) In fig. 3 the superior parietal is called posterior parietal lobe. -- Quadrangle gyrus, a convolution of somewhat square figure appearing on the median surface of the cerebrum between the callosomarginal sulcus in front and the parieto-occipital sulcus behind, and continuous below with the genus fontinalis. Also called grand rate bulbula and precuculus. Sex cut under cerebral - Sig-

Uncinate gyrus. A general name of the temporal convolution usually, in human anatomy more fully designated as uncinate temporal gyrus. Uncinate gyrus, a convolution which appears on the median surface of the cerebrum nearly opposite the beginning of the gyrus fornicatus. It is so called from its shape and the hook is known as the crus of uncus. See cut under crus.
